These two organizations could be depended upon to carry out any plan the league suggested be it the conviction a brave labor leader on a trumped up charge, instigating a raid on a peaceful Socialist meeting by a band of rowdies or corrupting legislatures into passing un-constitutional laws. By means best known to ourselves we controled the churches so that people learned to belive it wrong to steal a bottle of milk for a starving baby, but right and proper to charge two dollars for a bottle of milk if the league gave it's consent to the milk trust.

We passed all kinds of laws that would never pass a second reading at the hands of Jesus but we had to control the agitators some way. It might have been best to hang every one that even looked like an agitator, we did hang one, but on a referendum vote we found that a majority of the league was afraid hanging all would not work out well. So it was decided to have all foreigners who were not tamee enough to eat out of our hands, deported as anarchists, even if we had to perjure our highest officials to get away with it. As for the natives, we put them in prison for life. for life.

Well things were going pretty well under by brainy management. It began to look like we capitalists were good for the saddle for another fifty years. But as usual the unexpected happened. A measely miserable, insignificant cigarmaker whose entire weight did not amount to one hundred pounds, got on idea that cleaned up the National Screwery League and finally put all us capitalists to work in the coal mines. He went about the country agitating. We soon had him sentenced to a thousand years in prison, but that did not help us any, his idea was not sent to prison with him, but like John Brown's soul, went "marching on."

We were in the midst of a newspaper campaign against Russia. The situation was alarming. They had the best form of Government in Russia ever man heard of, and if we let them alone the people would soon find out and the whole world would want The Soviet form of government. That would never do. So we hired the most able liars to prepare matter for the press, such as tales of starvation, cruel, murders, socialization of woman etc. We just about had the fool public hypnotized and would soon have been at war with Russia which would have meant a draft of ten million men and millions of billions in profits, when this miserable insignificant cigarmaker let his idea lose on us. I heard of him promptly and went to a meeting where he spoke. He did not say much nor did he say it nicely, but his idea took hold at once. He was the last speaker of four and his words were about as follows:

Well, I am glad of the opportunity to say a few words to people who have the intelligence to get out and try to nd a better way to live. Whether most of you have intelligence enough to profit by a better way when you see it is a question. From what I have seen of the average American I have [illegible] it will be easy for the profiteers to start war on Russia.

We are not at war with Russia and at the present moment have no cause for war, yet our soldiers are in Russia trying to establish the reign of Kolchak, an understudy of the former Czar, against the wishes of the Russian people, who are building up the very best form of government ever heard of. Just a little more of this poisoning of the minds of the people and the schemers will bring pressure on Congress to declare war on Russia. What does that mean to you? Think a minute; what does that mean to you. It means that ten to fifteen million men will be drafted. If not you then your brother or son or father or husband. And if not you personally, there is one thing that you will have to face. That is the consequences of such a war. You will not live long enough to see the end of taxes caused by the war just closed. But our burdens, if we get into war with Russia, will be multiplied a thousand fold. Believe me, this war with Russia will come just as sure as you sitting there, if you do not stop it. Now one of you of course cannot stop it, nor all who are here. But the people of this country can if enough of them have sense enough to carry out my idea.

The Press which should be the guardian and protector of the country and the people is a foul prostitute who betrays them. There can be no other reason for these monstrous lies about Russian than to poison the peoples' minds enough to make war possible. Now my idea is to make the press depend on the people. Make it depend on the people and it will not dare publish such monstrous lies and get the nation into war. The press does not now depend on the people for its existance. It depends for big profits on its advertisers. Stop buying advertised goods as far as you can. You may not be able to do this entirely, but you can to some degree. Get the habit and keep it up for life. Agitate the idea among your friends to the utmost. You do not violate any law as you have a perfect right to patronize whom you please and you do not advocate a boycott against a named individual. Go to it, stick to it with all your might and pass it on and on.

The advertisers will soon learn of it. For a little while they will bluff but soon they will stop adverstising in the press, knowing that it hurts instead of helps business. The Press will howl itself hoarse, threathen and what-not all of no avail, it will have to change front for having lost its revenue from adverticers it will have to look to its readers solely for support. Knowing this it also will know that it must come clean for when its readers quit, it must quit."

I left the hall studying; it would never do to let that sort of a thing go on. In due time we had the miserable agitator sent to prison by the combined grace of the Espionage and Enemy Trading Acts. However, we had no way of arresting his idea. We had a number of laws passed promptly to counter-act the effect of the idea, but somehow it got ahead of us. Everywhere people were advertising and carrying out the Advertisers boycott. We sent over a hundred thousand to prison and fined a million but it did no good. The advertisers dropped the press and found other and less expensive means of publicity. Several large firms who persisted in standing by the Press lost their entire trade. We tried subsidizing the Press, but the large publications demanded such an exorbitant figure for their further services, we found it impossible to meet their demand. With the Press no longer under our control it was impossible to pull off the war against Russia. The cost of living kept climbing. The discharged soldiers could not find employment. Suddenly—in a day—a revolution took place. It was a peaceful but thorough revolution and a Soviet form of government was established. We tried to start a counter revolution of course but all capitalists were promptly arrested and condemned for life to labor in the coal mines.

One day a heavy rock fell on my leg while at work. The pain was so intense I screamed—that brought my valet to my bedside who awakened me with "Did you call, sir." I was wet with sweat and I found myself covered with blood. The dream had made me sweat blood.

[illegible]

Dr. Max Levien, Bavarian Communist leader, is said to have been arrested while trying to escape to Italy.

Now what do you think of that! Gompers pleads to give labor more. He must be wanting to make a name for himself as a radical.

The rail clerks have joined the railroad brotherhoods in a threat to strike unless their wages are raised or the cost of living lowered. Verily, these are restless times, even among the conservative workers. All because the stomach must be fed.

All of which leads us to remark that the howl about high food prices by the capitalist press still continues. And howling is as far as they'll get you. You'll have to do it yourself if you want to get enough to eat.

Too bad, dozens of American girls who married foreign nobles are now penniless princesses. Their hubbies have become plain "misters" and all color has gone out of life for them.

Railroad shop employes are on strike. It's nation wide. More wages demanded. A. F. of L. officials, who counseled employes to remain at work, were not obeyed.—Golly, that's going some.

A meatless week is urged to lower living costs. Don't eat at all is a more revolutionary action.—Yes it is!

There you have it! The cat is out of the bag! The papers of August 5th inform us that "fuel dealers, fearing that the constantly mounting prices will bring the American people to the point of violence during the coming winter, are urging restoration of fuel control by government."

These same fuel dealers are urging the dear people to buy their coal now. Well, how can they when they have not the dollars to buy it with. Will those fuel dealers who will trust the needy dear people for about ten years please send us their names. We will sell them lots of coal!

The days of three, four, five and ten percent wage increases seems to be but a memory. The Chicago street car men demanded nearly 100 percent increase and now the post office clerks demanding a 75 percent increase. What kind of times are we living in, anyway?

The International Labor Congress, meeting at Amsterdam, demands that the blockade against Russia be lifted.

Corn speculators lost a half a billion last week. We wonder who found it?

First Bela Kuhn alarmed Paris because he and his communist regime would not abdicate. And now that it's claimed he has and the Roumanian army is in control where Bela Kun once reigned, Paris is again alarmed. What do we want, anyway?

The Cincinnati base ball team is nicknamed the "Reds". Now, isn't that against law and order.

The Prince of Wales is on his way to this continent. Hats off!

Greek has met Greek. At the International Trades Union Congress at Amsterdam Legion of the German delegation told Gompers he was an aid to the capitalists and Gompers [illegible]

[illegible] back, saying that Lenin had [illegible] the [illegible]. And [illegible] the work.

Raymond Robins told the Ad Club in San Francisco that: "Europe is without faith in the present organization of society." "The ruin of Russia is not peculiar to Russia. It comes from all Europe. Russia is an evidence of the failure of the state, church and the great employers to provide security for the masses of the people."

U. S. Attorney Palmer has told district attorneys what to do to proceed against those profiteers who are hoarding food. If Palmer will go to see Debs he will get better advice than he gives.

The New York police force has organized into a union, it is claimed. No officers above sergeants and detectives are allowed membership. Wage increases will be demanded.

Strike and Riots tie up Brooklyn, N. Y. Transit service suspended. Mobs wreck eight cars. There are 100 strikes in progress in New York City at the present time.

Labor troubles grow in Great Britain. With the Yorkshire strike still unsettled, the baker's strike continuing, a number of minor strikes in progress the dockers threatening to strike in sympathy with the police who are on strike in protest against the police bill which denies their right to organize, and the possibility of another big railroad strike, the situation in England is again announced as "threatening" by the newspapers. Threatening to whom.

Street car traffic is suspended in Muskegon, Mich. Strike on. Scores of cars have been tipped over by sympathizers of the street car men.

A damage suit for $400,000 has been filed against the Machinists Union by the Waterloo, Ia., Gasoline Engine Co., for breach of contract. This case is similar to that of the Danburry hatters.

"One of the serious aspects of the current unrest of labor lies in the inclination of large numbers of men to override their leaders and take redress into their own hands." This from the Cleveland Plain Dealer. And then it goes on to tell us that strikes have been called recently without the sanction of proper authority; that this situation is trying to labor leaders; that the essence of democracy, in labor as in government, lies in the willingness of men to follow leaders. Great stuff, eh, Tavarski.

The Presbyterian Mission Board charges that American interests are spreading war propaganda in order to grab Mexico.

Believe it now that it comes from Christians, will you?

Remitting a dollar, comrade Harley Gillety of Akron, O. writes: "Enclosed one dollar bill to help the good work along." And a dollar does help.

No dollar ever did better service for the cause than the one you will invest in 100 "Free Debs" edition of the Ohio Socialist.

EUGENE V. DEBS

— By NATHAN CHARROW —

Silently, and far away,
A myriad of hearts grown into one
Are breathing your spirit—fear not the day.
Though reason reason he divorced and passion come.
And death's foreboding darken every home,
And instinct master every word and move—
The times are speaking though the signs be dumb.
Forever will vibrate your mighty love;
Your tall protective frame and glowing light
Outbeaming from your soft and kindly eye,
And iron arms embracing all mankind
Will burn in every toiler's memory,
And move their sons to thoughts and deeds aright,
In days to come more trying and more blind

There is But one Certain Way to Get a Thing Done; That is to do it Yourself.

Within limits, one is a free agent in this world. Not entirely, but to a certain extent, limited tho it is. It is not our purpose to establish those limitations here. Our object in bringing up the subject is to make this point clear. YOU CAN NEVER TELL WHAT YOUR LIMITATIONS ARE UNTIL YOU TRY.

That's the point we want you to think about.

It is a very vital matter when one is attempting something big, something that is to serve a great cause, it is absolutely necessary then, to know ones limitations because if you fail, if you quit before ALL your resources are exausted, the failure is your own fault. So, we say, know your limitations and success is more likely to drop her fruits into your lap.

This too, is necessary, that you learn to strive yourself, for what you want—not leaving it to "George" or Jennie either. No one can do YOUR job to your satisfaction except YOURSELF.

Therefore, do it!

And what is your job, you socialists, you party members, you, who have pledged your efforts toward building the New Democracy? It's doing all you can to bring socialism about. Aiding in every possible way the forces of industrial evolution that, unceasingly work day and night toward a better world for the workers. That's our job, yours and mine.

When we started to establish a Party owned printing plant for the Ohio Socialist and the Socialist Party of Ohio, we knew we had a big job ahead of us, but running from big jobs never was a part of our training, besides we knew there were hundreds and thousands of other comrades who were willing and anxious to lend a hearty hand.

We accepted the challenge of the capitalist class as represented by the boss printers of Cleveland to either get our own printing plant or QUIT. We started after the plant.

And we are getting pretty far on the road to getting one too. We are, in fact, one third of the way. Practically speaking, we have subscribed $3,000 of the $10,000 necessary to start publishing the Ohio Socialist on our own press.

Remember this: COMRADE BROWN OF GALION, O., HAS PROMISED TO GIVE ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS OF THIS AMOUNT IF THE REST OF US WILL GIVE THE OTHER NINE THOUSAND. Unless our conception of a bargain is terribly twisted, comrade Brown has offered the socialists of Ohio and those outside the state who are in sympathy with us, one of the most astounding bargains that ever came within our vision. Surely, you will agree comrade Brown's offer is most generous.

And, now we have subcribed one third of our nine thousand. But only about one ninth of the membership in Ohio have subcribed to the fund. That leaves a tremeduous number of socialists in this stae who have not yet done their part. And now to those who have delayed for some reason or another, their contributions to the press fund we must say: THIS IS YOUR JOB. HELP DO IT. Don't wait for George or Jenny. They are probably working for the boss printers. This is your job. Let us get at it right now and finish it. For, you know comrade Brown stated in his offer that he would give us until election day to fulfil our part of the agreement. Election is less than three months away. But with the help of the thousands of comrades who have not yet contributed, we can make it in good time, and we'll make election day INDEPENDENCE DAY. We will then celebrate our new charter of Liberty. We will do our own printing on our press.

Truly, this is OUR job. No one else can do it, will do it for us. It's absolutely up to us. And our resources are not even one ninth exausted. Certainly there is no cause for failure to raise this $10,000.

Right, now, TODAY, let's follow the example of the comrades below who have contributed to the press fund. That's our job. LET'S DO IT RIGHT—RIGHT AWAY!

WE ACT AND ASK YOU TO ACT WITH US

help!

We call to YOU for HELP!

IT IS FOR DEBS WE CALL.

It is for the hundreds of political prisoners we call.

Of course, even you are not free. But are freer than Debs, Emil Herman, Kate Richards O'Hare, J. O. Bentall, and hundreds more upon whom the dead weight of iron rests day and night.

THE DEAD WEIGHT OF IRON!

Iron bars, iron bolts, iron walls, iron, iron beds—yes and in many cases metal dishes from which a meager fare is gulped.

You are outside. The sunshine is yours, at least. They are inside, carrying around all day a weight of stone and iron, a dead weight under which no man can grow or smile.

AND THE PRISON ROUTINE!

Have you ever had the honor to be caged?

If you have you know the deadening effect of prison routine.

Everything is REGULATED. You walk by rule. You talk by rule. You go to sleep by rule. You wake up by rule. You eat by rule. You bathe by rule.You dress by rule.

Everything you do, everything you do not do is done or not done because a PRISON RULE commands you.

THAT'S PRISON.

It is for Debs and all our prisoners that we CALL TO YOU for help.

We must release them before iron, stone and prison rules kill them mentally and physically.

help!

DEBS WAS ARRESTED IN OHIO.

He was indicted in Ohio.

He made the speech for which he was indicted in Ohio.

OHIO NOW COMES TO HIS RESCUE and to the rescue of all political prisoners as well.

The best there is in Ohio comes to the rescue.

The politically and indutsrially intelligent workers of Ohio have resolved to labor unceasingly to liberate Debs.

TO YOU WE SAY—JOIN OHIO IN THIS CAMPAIGN for the liberation of Debs and all.

Up to now not one well planned, well organized attempt has been made to liberate Debs. We have waited, waited and waited—yet no opportunity presented itself for co-operation with other forces in a demand for Debs' freedom.

WE HAVE DECIDED TO QUIT WAITING.

WE HAVE DECIDED TO ACT!

And this is an invitation TO YOU to act with us. JOIN OHIO IN ITS CAMPAIGN TO FREE DEBS AND ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS.

TO THE RESCUE!

help!

Mails leaving Cleveland are heavy with CALLS FOR HELP.

One of these calls is traveling in your direction.

IT WILL REACH YOU IN A VERY FEW DAYS!

Watch for it. And if by chance it does not reach you. write to us at once.

We want you to receive one of these CALLS.

There is printed upon them pictures of Debs you've never seen, pictures of prison gate and steel cells. It is a call which EVERY SYMPATHIZER WITH OUR IMPRISONED COMRADES WILL RESPOND TO.

Take this call and visit EVERYBODY YOU KNOW—AT ONCE.

Then vist those you don't know—for everybody will give and give liberally. Circulate the call for help among the members of your labor union, among your relatives, among your neighbors. Miss no opportunity to SWELL THE LIBERATION FUND.

The campaign to liberate Debs and all the rest HAS ALREADY BEGUN. The first gun has been fired. You are now wanted to enlist in the front ranks.

BOLTS AND BARS DO NOT A PRISON MAKE.

Truth About Debs' Transfer to Atlanta.

The story by David Karsner, printed in the Ohio Socialist some weeks ago, that Debs had been removed from the Moundsville, West Virginia penitentiary at the behest of the coal barons must have gotten under the hide of the governor of that state, J J. Cornwell.

The result has been that we are now treated to some very interesting correspondence. Two or three readings of the letter from the West Virginia board of control to the Department of Justice at Washington and the answer from the Department of Justice are advisable.

These letters expose the "business" way in which prisons are conducted. The conception that prisons are reformatories is here completely disproven. Prisons are slave pens and the inmates are sold at the cheapest price to voracious contractors

The ignorance of the state board of control is also refreshing. Debs was sentenced by Judge Westenhaver at Cleveland and not by Judge Landis at Chicago. That it cost the West Virginia state's prison $500.00 a month extra for guard service while Debs was there is interesting news.

The most important part of this correspondence is contained in the answer of F H. Duehay, superintendent of prisons to the West Virginia board of control. In the last paragraph of this answer Mr. Duehay admits one of two things: Either the United States army is composed of crooks, or else he understands that the capitalist system breeds crooks at a rapid rate. However, read and study the correspondence for yourself.

LETTER FROM THE GOVERNOR OF WEST VIRGINIA

Jos. W. Sharts,

State of West Virginia,
Executive Department,
Charleston,

July 31, 1919.

Jos. W. Sharts, Esq.,
Lowe Building,
Dayton, Ohio

My Dear Sir:—I have read a story by David Karsner containing a letter to you from Assistant Attorney General Porter regarding the removal of Eugene V. Debs. In order that you may know the facts, I am handing you, herewith, copies of correspondence which led to his removal. I want you to know, as attorney for Debs, that I had nothing to do with his removal and did not know it was contemplated until the warden called me advising me that he had notice that Debs would be taken away the next morning. Mr. Karsner's article does me a gross injustice and is entirely erroneous in all its statements as to my interests and connections.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN C. CORNWELL,
Governor.

LETTER FROM THE STATE BOARD OF CONTROL OF WEST VIRGINIA TO THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

(This letter does not ask for Debs' removal so much as it uses Debs and the added cost of maintaining guard service as an excuse to compell the U S. government to send the West Virginia penitentiary 100 to 150 more prison slaves.)

State Board of Control,
Charleston, W. Va.,

June 2, 1919

F. H. Duehay, Supt. of Prisons,
Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Duehay: Some months ago we made an agreement with the federal government to receive and care for federal prisoners at the West Virginia penitentiary at Moudsville for the sum of 40 cents per day. Since that time we have received but few prisoners and we are informed by the warden that it is not likely that you will send us any more. We would like very much to have some of these prisoners at the present time in view of the fact that we are working many of our state prisoners on the state roads, and we have contracted a number of prisoners to some concerns working within the penitentiary walls in the manufacture of various articles, and we are short of labor at this time on our contracts. We are further confronted with the fact that the legislature made no provision for the maintenance of this institution other than the compensation received for such labor. The institution has been self-supporting in the past and we would like to have it continue to be.

We have Eugene V. Debs, who was sentenced by Judge Landis, confined in the West Virginia Penitentiary, and since his admittance we have had to put on extra guard force, which has increased our expense $500 per month, but we felt it was necessary to do

Workers' world Staff go to Prison

Edward Egan, Wm. E. Browder Harry Doyle, Robt. Sullivan, E. R. Browder and R. I. Moore, all active upon the Workers' World, our middle-west contemporary began a two years sentence in the Leavenworth penitentiary about the middle of July.

They were convicted under the charge of violating the espionage act. Ella Reeve Bloor writes that "we all felt the sacredness of the hour when our seven comrades began their journey to Leavenworth. That hour was consecrated to the very Spirit of Democracy, to the principle of true Internationalism."

The Ohio Socialist calls upon all its subscribers to assist these imprisoned comrades by subscribing to the Socialist paper they so consciently edited and circulated. Jim Cannon is now the editor and nothing would encourage him more that a flood of subscriptions from Ohio Socialist suberibers. Send a dollar to The Worker's World, Box 697, Kansas City, Mo., and have the paper sent you for six months.

this for his safety as well as that of other prisoners. If we cannot get some federal prisoners to help bear this extra expense in connection with his care we shall have to ask to have him cared for in some other institution. We feel in justice to this that we should receive some of these federal prisoners, and, in view of the fact that the government is sending prisoners from West Virginia and Ohio to Atlanta, Georgia, we believe we can take care of them just as well as that state, and the transportation charges would be less to the government.

Will you kindly let us know if you cannot arrange to let us have 100 or 150 prisoners.

Veryt truly yours,

STATE BOARD OF CONTROL,
By E. B. Stephens, President.

[illegible] FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE SIGNED BY THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PRISONS

(Note the assurance given in the last paragraph that as soon as the army is demobilized prisons will again have sufficient slave labor.)

ORDER A BUNDLE OF THE "FREE THEM" EDITION OF THE OHIO SOCIALIST.

Incidentally—there's no need to build a fire under us to make us move.

No grass grows under our feet.

And EXPERIENCE has taught us how to proceed so as to be successful in our efforts.

We have taken the first step in the liberation of Debs and we ask you to keep step with us.

Understand first of all that in this campaign our ultimate demand is the LIBERATION OF DEBS AND ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS. We shall never lose sight of this ultimate aim. And we shall not rest until ALL political prisoners are freed.

However, together with organizing for liberation for all, we must protest and act every time prison authorities, in their ruthlessness, terrorize our comrades in jail or make life in prison a shambles.

We protest the bludgeoning of I. W. W.'s in Leavenworth. We protest turning the hose upon conscientious objectors in the same penitentiary. We protest the removal of political prisoners to Alcatras, into the dungeons under the sea. We protest hanging prisoners by the wrists until they faint.

WE NOT ONLY PROTEST, BUT WE SHALL WORK TOWARD THE END THAT THESE BRUTALITIES SHALL CEASE.

And so we also PROTEST and ACT now that we have been legally informed that the removal of Debs from Moundsville to the scorching Atlanta penitentiary was ILLEGAL.

• • • • •

Yes—we know that LAW IS INTERPRETED. We know that it is interpreted in favor of those who are on top.

Yet we shall leave no stone unturned to agitate for Debs' release, even if it does mean a trip into court.

WE HAVE DECIDED TO ONCE MORE TEST THE LAW.

WE HAVE DECIDED TO LIBERATE DEBS FROM THE ATLANTA PENITENTIARY BY HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS BASED UPON HIS ILLEGAL REMOVAL FROM MOUNDSVILLE STATE'S PRISON.

• • • •

WE have engaged Jos. W. Sharts, one of the attorneys in the case when Debs was tried at Cleveland. Samuel M. Castleton, attorney at Atlanta is co-operating with Sharts. Both these attorneys are Socialists. They will perform their duty conscientiously.

AND WE ENGAGE YOU to get to work AT ONCE to secure the funds necessary for court clerk's fees, printing bills, railroad fare etc.

UNDERSTAND PLEASE—that in the habeas corpus proceedings we intend bringing against those government officials who removed Debs to Atlanta there lies GREAT POSSIBILITIES.

IT MAY EVEN MEAN SEVERAL MONTHS FREEDOM ON BONDS.

For Debs it will mean a respite, a rest from iron bars and bolts; stone walls and darkness; prison rules and atmosphere.

THIS IS WORTH WORKING FOR!

This is our first step, and we ask you to keep step with us. LET'S GET DEBS OUT OF THE SCORCHING ATLANTA PENITENTIARY. It will mean a NEW LEASE OF LIFE TO HIM.

• • • •

There's no need to build a fire under you, is there?

No grass grows under your feet!

THEN AT IT AT ONCE!

Gather the dollars for the LIBERATION FUND.

Attorney Sharts "Goes Ahead"

DRAFTS NECESSARY PAPERS—WILL REPORT FURTHER PROGRESS.

DAYTON, OHIO, August 18, 1919.

A. Wagenknecht,
State Secretary Socialist Party of Ohio,
3207 Clark Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Comrade:

I have received your instructions to go ahead and institute habeas corpus proceedings on behalf of Comrade Gene Debs. This I am already beginning; am drafting the necessary papers; and shall presently be able to report further progress.

Let me say I realize fully the importance of what you have asked me to attempt — the release of Eugene V. Debs in spite of the mountain of prejudice and hatred which exists for him in high quarters. I am not concerned about the law, but the judges. The law is clear: he was sentenced to Moundsville —not to Atlanta. The Attorney General has authority to order a transfer on only three grounds: (1) his health—at his own request, (2) cruel treatment at his own request for removal, and (3) because of the insecurity of the place of confinement. None of these three grounds existed in Gene Debs' case. On the contrary Governor Cornwell of West Virginia has supplied [illegible] copies of the correspondence which preceded the order from Washington to transfer the prisoner from his pleasant and humane confinement at Moundsville to the dungeons of Atlanta; and we know now that it was not on [illegible]

It is not the law, I have said, but the judges that give me concern. In bringing habeas corpus proceedings I must make the case so clear [illegible] For that reason it may be [illegible] week or so before I shall be ready for the application to be made. [illegible]

ATTORNEY GENERAL DODGES PLAIN ANSWER TO PLAIN QUESTION ABOUT UNLAWFUL REMOVAL

On June 26 a second inquiry was sent to the Attorney General requesting to know upon what legal grounds the [illegible] removal of Eugene V. Debs from Moundsville to Atlanta, as the answer to the former inquiry had merely stated [illegible] had been made at the request of State Board of Control and that federal statutes do not give this among the enumerated grounds upon which a federal prisoner, once sentenced to a particular place of confinement, can be thereafter removed.

The answer to the second inquiry is as evasive as the answer to the first. It is follows:

July 1, 1919.

Joseph W. Sharts, Esq.,
127 South Main Street,
Dayton, Ohio

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 26th ultimo, you are informed that the West Virginia State Board of Control demanded the removal of Federal Prisoner Eugene V. Debs from the West Virginia Penitentiary, and the transfer thereupon was directed by the Attorney General in accordance with the power vested in him by law to transfer federal prisoners under certain conditions.

Respectfully,
Fort the Attorney General,
WM. L. FINSON,
Assistant Attorney General.

The law gives 3 grounds upon which a removal can be ordered by the Attorney General: (1) the health of the prisoner, at his request; (2) brutal treatment at the first place, at his request for removal; (3) the insecurity of the place of confinement.

None of these grounds apparently exist in the case of the removal of Eugene V. Debs.

[illegible] proves that the real reasons for Debs' removal from Moundsville to Atlanta was withheld from inquirers.)

State of West Virginia,
State Board of Control,
Charleston.

July 29, 1919.

Mr. J. D. Reedy,
Bickmore, W. Va.,

Dear Mr. Reedy: Your letter of recent date concerning the removal of Eugene V. Debs from the West Virginia Penitentiary at Moundsville has been received.

Mr. Debs was placed in the penitentiary in April, 1919. He was an excellent prisoner and gave the prison authorities no trouble whatever and left there highly pleased with the courteous treatment received at the hands of the officials.

At that time we had an agreement with the federal government to pay for the keeping of federal prisoners at our state penitentiary but they informed us that owing to the new additions that had been made to the federal prisons at Leavenworth and Atlanta they would be in position to take care of him themselves and that we would receive no more federal prisoners. Soon after that he was removed.

There was no friction whatever on the part of anyone in connection with his removal.

Very truly yours,
STATE BOARD OF CONTROL
By E. B. Stephenson, Pres.

News of The Week

It seems now that the Prince of Wales, visit to America is for the purpose of making Canada safe for the King, Canada's workers have caused no little uneasiness abroad. The One Big Union idea and the devine right idea don't harmonize very well.

"Democracy" has won a signal victory. Archduke Franz Joseph is dictator in Hungary. Large, but orderly demonstrations against this member of Hapsburg dynasty have taken place in Prague, led by Social Democrats.

Railroad transportation is seriously handicapped in and near Chicago. The railroad shopmen have refused to obey President Wilson's suggestion that they return to work.

It is reported that the German strategist, Mackensen, is training five million Chinese in the "art" of war.

A few farmers near Cleveland have been made the goat in the campaign against the high cost of living. One was thrown into the filthy city jail over night. They are charged with boosting the price of milk. The milk trust of Cleveland, against whom the dairymen organized, goes unmolested.

The A. F. of L. is busy organizing a teachers' and accountants' union.

We're on the fence. The U. S. Department of Labor is making a campaign upon the slogan "Buy Now". That is—spend your money and prosperity will be ours. The Federal Reserve Board on the other hand advises us to "work and save," thereby assuring us a reduction in the high cost of living. Now then, what do you want, prosperity or cheap prices?

Without opposition the U. S. senate adopted an resolution authorizing the foreign relations commission to make a sweping investigation of outrages against Americans and American property in Mexico. However, we frankly state it is the so-called "outrage" against American property that concerns the senate most.

Latest reports have it that some of the residents of Petrograd have turned cannibals. Well, what if they have? The blame rests with those "democratic" powers that blockade Russia.

There you have it. The papers of August 8th report the strike of 33,000 employes of the Chicago meat packing plants. The strike is in protest of employment of negro non-union help. While the thousands of white workers were walking out, a large number of negro men and women applied for employment. The dullest worker will understand that the packing companies are playing the negro labor against white labor in order to break the union and reduce wages. Result—race riots.

There's a representative by the name of Beethman sitting in the Columbus legislature, elected by the votes of workingmen, who says application of the golden rule will solve the high cost of living problem. A funny world with funny people in it.

Carnegie is dead. Flags on libraries half mast. He left an estate of half a billion. He gave away nearly as much, so it's said. He is once supposed to have said that "to die rich is to die disgraced." Well, he died rich. And again, it's easy to be generous with millions when thousands of wage slaves are at your feet making millions more for you yearly.

An actors' strike is on. Well, well. What next! Big theaters in New York and Chicago dark. The employers have filed suit for half a million against the striking actors for breach of contract. Injunctions are also asked for. Conspiracy is charged. Reads like a real strike of ordinary workmen. Times have changed!

Wilson is to name delegates and call the convention of the International Labor Conference in Washington, on Oct. 30. Wilson, mind you, president of the U. S. is to name the American delegates to this labor conference. Provisions for such a conference as contained in the peace treaty can now be declared safe by the capitalists of the world.

The miners' strike in Yorkshire, England, is considered serious. Social conditions in that country are threatened because of its continuance.

Metal workers, 200,000 of them, are on strike in Italy.

The Plumb plan for nationalizing railroads will not pass the present congress. And the railroad workers are plumb nutty if they think Plumb can lead them out of the wilderness with the Plumb plan while congress is plumb gone on capitalism.

There are 8,000 American soldiers in Siberia "keeping the railroad open" and there are 70,000 Japanese—for what?

Five thousand Paterson silk workers won a raise in wages and a 44 hour week.

Kolchak, former Czarist general, is hopelessly lost, says Protopopoff, also an ex-Czarist general. He is unable to raise another army and can not possibly win against soviets.

Striking miners, who atttempted to intercept scabs at the Fort Pitt coal mine, south of Bellaire, Ohio, were "greeted" by 20 deputy sheriffs armed with riot guns, August 5th. The deputies were under orders to shoot to kill if attacked.

Five thousand employes of the Columbia Graphophone Company went on strike.

The Gompers-controlled officials of the United Mine Workers in district 1 near Wilkesbarre, Pa., are accused of stealing the election for new officials which was held recently. The miners are up in arms and have refused to further pay the salaries of the reactionary officials.

The great victory gained by the Chicago building trades is stirring up the New York workers in similar trades to make demands for higher wages and shorter workday.

Musicians and stage hands' union are treatening to join the actors in their strike.

The German Spartacans are planning a general strike. Present government asserts it is an initial step towards a communist government.

Unless soldiers are withdrawn from the Chicago meat packing plants, the strike of workers will continue and may throw 70,000 additional workers out of employment.

The Chicago Tribune called Ford an anarchist. Ford sued the Tribune for a cool million. The jury awarded Ford six cents damages.

An industrial tie-up looms in France. Electric and stem engineers thru-out France have issued an ultimatum that unless their wage demands are settled, they will go on strike.

Labor in Belgium is getting the strike fever. What has the war hen hatched, anyway?

Three thousand Pittsburgh car men are on strike. And New York also faces a tie-up.

The convention of the United Mine Workers of America, to be held in Cleveland on Sept. 5th, will be the most important of the history of the organization. A thirty-hour week will be asked of the coal barons, it is claimed. Judging by the opinions expressed by miners all over the country, a 40 to 60 per cent wage increase will also be demanded.

Financial Consideration

Some cynic has remarked that the Anglo-Saxon peoples always find a moral reason for the depredations which they commit. The case of Mexico seems to be an exception. Moral reasons for disciplining Mexico have been thrust aside to make room for financial considerations. Carranza has offended the financial interests by his slogan of "Mexico for the Mexicans." His threat to take from wealthy adventurers the concessions in the form of oil, minerals timber and agricultural lands which they bought from his predecessors has aroused the business interests of the United States and of other countries to vigorous protest.

Mexican resources are foreign owned. The extent of this foreign ownership is not accurately known. But certain it is that a great volume of Mexican resources is included under title deeds held in Belgium, France, Great Britain and the United States.

The New York Times in a recent exhaustive statement, which is described as "very conservative—probably rock bottom," estimates the cash invested by Americans in Mexican properties at $650,000,000. A third of this investments is in oil; a third in mines and the remainder in railroads, lands, industries and public utilities. Following the table in which these figures are contained there occurs this remarkable sentence: "This invetsment of $650,000,000 had grown in value until in 1910 it was said to be worth $2,000,000,000."

The soil of Mexico is apparently as fertile as that of Wall Street when it comes to the growth of property values;—6.50 cash investment, after paying in many cases fabulously large dividends, has increased, in a few short years, to a cash investmen of $20, or a total of over 200%. The American exploiters of Mexican business have thus reaped, in addition to their dividend and interest payments, an unearned increment of $1,350,000,000 upon which they propose to realize.

The Carranza Government holds certain economic ideals. His advisors believe that this unearned increment, from the natural resources and the labor of Mexicans which has been going to foreign capitalists should now be diverted into the coffers of the Mexicans themselves.

These are some of the "financial considerations" which seem to make inevitable early intervention in Mexico.

ONE BIG UNION PICNIC

The W. I. I. U. of Akron Local 535 will hold a picnic on Sunday, August 24th at Home Ave. H. Richter, general secretary-treasurer of the international will be the speaker. Good music, racing, games and general good time for all.

To reach picnic grounds take Mountain Line car at the N. O. T. waiting room at Akron and ride to stop 8. The picnic grounds are to right of the stop.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL AMANDMENT PROPOSED

Comrade Artie Isenberg, of Jonesboro, Tenn., proposes the following as an Amadment to the National Constitution. What do you think of it.

"That the Congerss and the respective Legisatlures of the various states shall be elected by the men and women voters, and aportioned as to occupation according to numbers, no occupation having less than one representative.

"No Congressman shall be less than 30 years old and must have worked at his occupation not less than 10 years, and must not cease from his occupation except as demanded by his constitutients."

LABOR WINS ANOTHER SEAT

Again labor has scared at the polls. By-elections were held this week in Bothwell, Lancashire, a district in which the Lloyd-George coalition last year, at the general elections, had a majority of 332.

A complete political revevsal took place, in that the labor candidate won by a majority of more than 7,000 over the Coalition candidate. C. Robertson, the winner of the election, waged his campaign completely on the coal question.

[illegible]

COMRADES—

For instance, this former committee is now voting (despite the fact that it went out of office CONSTITUTIONALLY on July 1, 1919) to "expel" the Socialist Party of Ohio. Had Ohio sent the proceeds from the sale of convention assessment stamps to Adolph Germer, it would have lost this money, for it would never have been paid to the Ohio delegates to defray their fare to the convention.

Adolph Germer is [illegible] tell what actions this committee may take in regard to the national convention. Therefore it is safest to send the delegate expense money to the convention with the delegations and then let the convention itself elect a committee to receive this money and make disbursements.

We do not deny the "machine voting" or slate voting of some of the language federation branches. BUT THIS IS NOT FRAUD. Adolph Germer seems so absolutely convinced that there has been fraud. He gives no proof. How does he know there has been fraud in the election of the new national executive committee? Facts are that to him slate voting constitutes fraud—when the votes are not in his favor. He was elected national secretary several years ago by the same kind of "machine voting" which he now criticizes. He did not protest at that time because he won by it. He protests now because he and his fellow moderates lost by it.

And then comes the foolish plea that "we ought wait until the national convention before doing anyting." We should wait, but in the meantime, they, the former national executive committee plus Germer, DO NOT WAIT until the national convention before carrying out their plans. They "expel" right and left in an effort to make the national convention "sure" for them. The strong Ohio state organization is now being "expelled" by this former committee which has no power to expel, no more than any other individual member of the party has.

Adolph Germer and his fellow moderates do not wait. They only want the rest of us who oppose them towaitsoth at they may do a good job before being interfered with. Neither will we wait. We have renewed the call for the national convention to convene in Chicago on August 30th. We call upon all state secretaries to send a roster of their delegates to the undersigned. We intend to assure a national convention. We intend to see to it that all party elements are represented irrespective of the "expelling fit" of the outlawed former national executive committee.

All comrades who are with us for the Socialism of our Russian comrades, our Communist Italian comrades our Spartacan German comcrades, as against the Socialism of the Mensheviks and the Scheidemanns, will join us in our effort to represent true revolutionary workers.

Yours in Comradeship

Baker and DeQuer

AT YOUR SERVICE—BAKER AND DEQUER. Write the state office at once, applying for a date FOR EACH of these two speakers.

Every active Socialist in Ohio knows Chas. Baker. Recommendation of him by state office is rather superflous. Comrade Baker is now in Youngstown, doing organization work. From there he will go to Dayton to fill several dates. He will be open for engagements beginning September 1st. Apply at once.

John DeQuer hails from Washington state. For the last two years he has spoken in most of the western states. We know him as one of the best lecturers in the Socialist movement. He is a physician by profession, but has given most of his time to the cause by duty upon the platform. Locals engaged in municipal campaigns should make application for his services at once so that we may arrange his routing.

The fault we have to find with many locals is that they procrastinate too much. The way to GET AHEAD is to PLAN AHEAD. Plan your campaign NOW. Engage your speakers NOW. We offer Baker and DeQuer. Let's hear from you by return mail.

THE ONLY WAY

"Think it's the only way, for the Party to own its own press". These words came all the way from Alaska. With the letter in which they came was also a ten dollar donation for the press fund. Comrade Anna I. Steele writes the letter. If comrades in Alaska see the need of a Party owned press, we here in Ohio surely should see the need as clearly. Ohio Comrades should get a hump on themselves if they don't want to be out done by out of state comrades.

DOES ITS BIT

Another Local which does its bit for the press fund is Local Neffs, English Br., which sends us five dollars thru secretary Anton Hain.

Another generous donation comes from comrades Bishop and Mrs. Wm. Brown of Galion. Twelve fifty it is.

SLOVAK COMRADES HELP

Slovak comrades of Black Top Local (O.) have contributed $15.10 for the press fund. We appreciate the work of these comrades who have circulated a number of lists in making up this amount. Thru comrade Jno Moravek, secretary, we convey our thanks to the contributers.

SO. SLAVIC COMRADES REMIT

Not many days pass that we do not receive a donation for the press fund from some South Slavic Local. This week it is Local No. 58, of Monessen, Pa. which sends in three dollars. And to think there are still some Locals in Ohio which have not "seen the light" yet!

Comrade Otto Haefer, secretary of Local Cincinnati, sends three dollars for the press fund, donated by other comrades.

PROUD TO BE SOCIALISTS

A three dollar donation received from comrades Heller, of Doylestown, O. They state that they are proud to be socialists and Party members and want to see "our" 'Gene (ours, because he does'nt belong to Wall Street) out of jail at the earliest possible moment. Like all true rebels, these comrades do their bit in the distribution of literature to help the Cause.

When he isn't working for subscriptions, he's working for the press fund, but usually he's working for both at the same time. Or so it seems at least. That's comrade F. A. Bucey of Rayland, O. He sends one subcription and three dollars for the press.

Gleanings From The Log Of An Agitator

Written for the O. S. by W. E. Reynolds.

A man by the name of O'Neal, who calls himself a socialist, rushed into print in the capitalist press, assuring us all, that a revolution could not possibly come to this country, even though it was a fact that all Europe was seething with revolt. Of course Mr. O'Neal is perfectly right. You see the same forces which caused the revolution to grow in Europe, will not operate on this side of the Atlantic! O'Neal seemingly has the very great truth to learn that an unemployed laborer in Borneo will have its reflex in the labor market in Chicago. Capitalism is International. Wage-slavery is international. All of the forces which make for revolution are international, and, so logically of course, revolutions can be kept within national boundary lines!

The mayor of Muskegan will not allow socialists to hold street meetings. He did however, grant the patriots the privilege of dancing on the street Independence Day. Probably going on the theory that it is safer to allow the proletarian populace to use its heels than its head! Such is the system under which we live.

The capitalists are attempting to mobilize soldiers against socialism, but from the soldiers that I have heard talk they will be for socialism and not against it when they are mobilized.

Soldiers, most of them, were wage laborers before they were soldiers, and now they have to be wage laborers again, and as wage laborers they will be interested in the things which are of benefit to the wage earners.

A year ago the New Appeal was printing a series of articles against the bolsheviki, written by one Allan Benson. Now the Appeal is offering a reward of ten thousand dollars to any one who can prove the charges against the Bolshevists. Why doesn't Allan prove that he told the truth and not lies a year ago and grab that $10,000? He will probably need it all to make his new literary venture stick!

The productive powers of labor depend upon; "(a) the natural condition of labor such as fertility of soil, productivity of mines etc., and (2) upon the progresive improvement of the social powers of labor" and not upon the Ole Hansons, Gompers, Wilson and other "Great Men" capitalistic tools.

America is a democracy, so we are told, and in this democracy of over a hundred million people, we have a reconstruction committee of fourteen, one for each of the celebrated and now discredited fourteen points, and this committee of fourteen is to democratically decide the democratic destinies of a hundred million democrats in this trying hour of reconstruction! Verily my son, the ways of Wilsonian Democracy are strange and peculiar indeed!

[illegible]-Revolution Faces Collapse: Kolchak 'Retires' Again.

360,000 RIFLES TO AID ANTI-SOVIET FORCES. HALF MILLION BOLSHEVIKS ON TRAIL OF KOLCHAK'S FLEEING ARMY

Fleeing before the rapidly advancing hosts of the Red army of the Soviets, Kolchak, the counter revolutionist faces collapse. This is the latest official news reaching Washington and is accepted as true of the situation in Siberia where Kolchak has been forced to retire nearly 1,000 miles from his advanced position early in the year.

The latest retirement, consisting of from 160 to 270 miles is the third which Kolchak has made since his successes of last spring. His position is now considered apparently hopeless by officials at Washington. While his ragged army, poorly provisioned and munitioned, continues to give such resistance to the armies of Lenine and Trotzky as they are capable, little hope is offered for any change favorable to the anti-Bolshevik forces.

500,0000 Bolsheviks give chase.

Realizing his perilous position, Kolchak himself has gone to the front lines to rally his shattered forces. Demoralization is wreaking havoc with his army and desertions to the Bolsheviks are occuring at every opportunity. The Admiral hopes by a fortunate strategy to make another 'retirement.' That will make possible the reorganization of his ragged legions.

High American officials however, frankly admit they think Kolchak's day is done and see in his latest losses only further success for Lenine and Bolshevism.

The reported decision to evacute Omsk and transfer the capital further east to Irkutsk has not been confirmed. But it is no longer denied that the Ural front is now in the hands of the Bolsheviki.

The numerical strength of the army with which Admiral Kolchak is vainly attempting to beat Bolshevism is estimated at 100,000, partially armed and poorly equipped. The Red army of Lenine has been growing tremenduously and the number which is now in service against Kolchak is said to number half a million, probably more, well fed, and equipped for a long campaign against the counter revolutionists and traitors.

American Rifles for Kolchak.

Tho the United States government has not yet gone to the extent of recognizing the Kolchak 'government' it is reported that a great quantity of amunition and 360,000 rifles were dispatched from New York last week for a destination within his reach.

The present setback which Kolchak is experiencing make more improbable the recognition of his government by the United States and the allied powers. Nevertheless, the government seems determined to render what aid it can to the anti-bolshevist forces.

It is hoped that the large cargo of munitions dispatched to Kolchak will reach him in time to ward off the impending collapse of his anti-bolshevist campaign. Unless provisions of all kinds, particularly food and amunition reach him at the earliest possible moment little hope is expressed that he will be able to much longer continue in the field.

The rifles and amunition shipped to him were purchased from American firms before the downfall of the Czar. When the Czar went down and out the shipments were held up until last week when they were allowed exportation to the counter revolutionists.

There are few grains of comfort for the reactionaries in the late news from Russia. Bolshevism continues to retain its power and to squelch the counter revolutionists Kolchak and Denikin. Altho the 'democracies' of the west may continue to starve Russia thru their blockade and to render what assistance they can in the way of supplies to them, the Red army continues to advance, the counter revolution weakens and the final success of Bolshevism seems assured.

Debs Goes to Prison

By DAVID KARSNER

Debs passed into the station and bought his ticket. The crowd followed. For five minutes there was a buzz of voices, then a great hurrah that echoed through the station.

"Three cheers for our 'Gene,'" shouted a little Scotchman in greasy overalls and a jumper. Two hundred voices echoed the sentiment. Out on the platform they followed, first one running up to Dbes, then another, all eager to get the last handshake or the last word. Two business men could not possibly be more competitive for the good things of life than were these men competing, vieing with each other just to touch the hem of 'Gene Debs' garment.

Debs mounted the steps. A Pullman porter doffed his hat as he stepped up. Instantly Debs removed his broad felt hat. In this manner the crowd stood for some minutes.

Right up front in the crowd was a soldier in uniform. On one sleeve he wore two gold stripes, and on the other was one gold stripe. The soldier boy stood first on one foot, then on the other.

He could restrain himself no longer. He climbed up on the platform, grasped Debs by the hand and fairly shouted:

"Mr. Debs, I went through hell over there for them, and now I'm ready to go through hell over here for you."

The crowd let out a war whoop.

"And there are a million more like me," shouted the soldier back to the crowd.

Just before the train pulled out Phil Reinbold, former president of the Terre Haute Central Labor Union, stepped up. He and 'Gene embraced.

"We won't forget you, 'Gene,'" said the labor man.

"We have stood side by side for many years, Phil," said Debs, affectionately, "and we'll stick until the last drop of blood—until the last tap of the bell."

Mrs. Debs took off her hat when the crowd uncovered as the train pulled out of Terre Haute to take this man to the penitentiary for 10 years. Debs threw a kiss to his good wife and Comrade, and yelled a cheery good-by to all the rest. A little way down the platform a yound girl pulled a red flower from her bosom and threw it at Dbes, who was still standing on the platform.

We went right into the smoker until the porter made up Debs' bed. Thus began the journey to the prison.

Earlier that day Debs gave me this statement: "During my incarceration my Comrades will be true and my enemies will be satisfied, and therefore, as far as I am concerned, all will be well with the world."

I asked Debs how Mrs. Debs was bearing up under the great strain.

"She stood shoulder to shoulder with me through every storm that has beat upon me, and she is standing firm now."

Debs said that it was the regret of Mrs. Debs that she could not go with him. "But she cannot do that, so she will remain here to keep the home fires burning."

All about the Debs home there was every indication that the world's great humanist would remain undisturbed for the rest of his life. A man was working in the little garden in back of the house, laying out new flower beds for Mrs. Debs and pruning the trees on the lawn in front.

Mrs. Debs took keen delight in opening the hundreds of telegrams that came to the house all day Saturday and Sunday, and which are probably still pouring into the home. Quietly standing by his side throughout all of his trials and tribulations, throughout all of the homage and glory that have been lavished with loving hands upon her celebrated husband, Mrs. Debs refused to give out any statement concerning the plight in which Debs now finds himself. No word of antagonism has escaped her lips for these tremendous forces that conspired to silence the loquent tongue of Eugene Victor Debs.

Her hair may be just a wee bit whither; her cheek may have lost just a little of its accustomed rosiness; she may even be somewhat thinner, but withal she is quite as erect and carries her head in the same queenly manner, resembling nothing so much as a great tree in some forest over which has swept many a strong wind, yet which remains steadfast, braced to weather any storm that may again arise.

Saturday morning Debs had received in the mail copies of a photograph of the bust which is being made of him by Mayer, of New York, the sculptor who made the now famous "People's Lincoln," which is to be placed in every school and college in the land. The photograph of the Debs bust is a tribute to the artist. Every tiny vein, every line of suffering and trial, the valleys and crevices in Debs' face are revealed in the picture. When this heroic work is completed it will be placed in the Rand School of New York. Perhaps some day replicas of Debs' bust will find their way to every school and college in America, beside that of Lincoln.

BOUND FOR CLEVELAND

CHAPTER TWO

On the train from Terre Haute Debs was accompanied by his brother-in-law Arthur Baur, Terre Haute drugist, and myself.

Debs smoked two or three cigars as we sat in the club car. He talked lively and was in excellent spirits. Soon after 12 o'clock I persuaded him to retire.

During the tree-cornered conversation I said to Debs:

"Your imprisonment will certainly tend to accelerate whatever boom that would otherwise have been started for President. If the Socialists in convention again nominate you, would you consent to make the run?"

"THERE IS BETTER TIMBER IN THE WOODS THAN I," replied Debs. "LET ME SEE. THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IS TWO YEARS AWAY. WHY, IN TWO YEARS I'LL BE THE BEST SWABBER OF FLOORS OR THE BEST PRISON CLERK IN MOUNDSVILLE."

I told Debs that not a single Socialist in America would agree with him in his opinion that there is better timber in the woods than he. Not a man or woman but who would defer that honor in favor of Debs.

If Debs is still in prison when the presidential campaign rolls around, what worthier honor could the Socialist party confer upon its membership and its constituency than by honoring Debs in naming him as its choice for the Presidency?

"Debs Goes to Prison" can be had for 25c. in pamphlet form.—Order of Socialist Party of Ohio, 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O.

Damaged Goods

The H. C. L. problem is being rapidly solved—on paper So far the chief benefit of the agitation to the workingclass has been countless reams of advice from our 'superiors' upon the manner in which we should spend the miserbale pittance which is doled out to us in the pay envelope and labeled—reward for service rendered.

Not being content with exploiting the producers of wealth of three fifths of their product our exploiters now venture the brazen effrontery to offer us sage advice in household economies and individnal "thrift". Of course they never practice any of it themselves—they don't need to.

The whole solution is gradually being condensed to this so we are informed with a growing monotony, the workers must "work and save." At last the remedy is found! No doubt it will be administrated with all the energy of which our masters are capable.

But it is shopworn advice. It has lain on the bosses' shelves ever since the first master robbed the first slave. Regularly in times of stress, it is hauled down onto the counter and offered the slaves as a brand new article—all wool and a yard wide. It is damaged doods. It always was. Made for a slave class in the first place it is necessarily shoddy.

All the wealth in the world has not only been produced by the workers but has been 'saved' by them as well. The trouble is not that the workers have not saved, but that they saved not for themselves.

All the mansions of the rich were built by labor, then generously turned over to the capitalists by the workers who refused to live n them. They 'saved' them for their masters. They built the railroads, turned them over to the stock gamblers, and walked the ties, another instance of saving. They built all the beautiful cities of the world, turned them over to land sharks, profiteering landlords and money grabbers of every sort, went off into the hollows and herded among the shacks. Can you imagine a greater degree of 'saving' than that? The workers absolutely refuse to even eat the food they grow on the farms and produce in the factories! They eat the waste and the cheaper grades. The best, the richest, the most nourishing is 'saved' for the masters. Their propensity for saving even extends to the clothes they weave and fashion. In summer they sweat making the finest winter woolens only to accept the coursest and shoddiest for themselevs (and not half enough of it), the best is 'saved', but the boss wears it. They even save the coal in the earth and the wood in the forest. They prefer to freeze to death rather than to use these to keep warm in winter. They save it for the rich.

They have built the beutiful stemships and equipped them, that sail over the seas to all the lands of the arth. They are content tho if they take only a sterrage passage upon them or get a job stoking the furnaces. The upper decks, the state rooms, all the luxuries of the floating palaces are reserved, no 'saved' for these who live upon the 'savings' of the workers.

Even in the common pleasures of life the workers practice the strictest saving qualities. They accept only the cheapest the grossest leaving all the finer to the capitalists. Surely, the generosity of the workers is past understanding and this propensity for saving has brought the world to the point where the workers must shortly announce a new policy in their dealings with the master class.

We propose this as a starter.
Insted of SAVING, let's USE!

Let's build houses and live in them. Let's build ships and go see the round earth and the wonders of the seven seas. Let's build cities and inhabit the hills instead of the hollows. Let's build railroads and keep them for use insted of for the profit of speculators. Let us eat the food we produce and feed our children upon proper nourishment instead of substitutes and poison. Let us wear the beautiful clothing we make instead of the unsighfly imitations we are won't to cull out for ourselves.

In short let us enjoy the world we have made instead of making it a shambles and a hell for ourselves.

This must be the new gospel of labor. This alone is the remedy for the problems to-day All others are a makeshift and a fraud upon the workers.

Fundamental Principles

We like to read the editorials in the capitalist press. Reading them is about all the joke there is in our lives so we make the most of it—while capitalism lasts, While we read we use the back of our head. Otherwise there wouldn't be any fun in reading. Try it to see.

Just now we are talking about an editorial of the Cleveland Press of last week entitled Industrial Peace. The editor of this Scrips-McRae apologist for capitalism, Victor Morgan, is according to this writing not only a wonderful prophet but is possessed of a fund of gullibility most astonishing in proportions.

In this editorial, which is a plea for the proposed conference of employers and employees embodied in the Kelley Poindexter resolution there are a number of high lights that reflect in wonderful clearness the utter lack of economic knowledge possessed by Mr. Morgan.

That he expects, even to the point of prophesying great results of this conference, is evident by the following pagagraphs.

> That conference would work out the fundamental principles to govern the relations between employer and employed.
> The lack of agreement on fundamental principles makes great industrial problems, such as the present railroad situation needlessly difficult of solution.
> The relations between capital and labor must be put in process of solution in the very near future.

The "fundamental principle" of the capitalist system of wealth production is production for profit thru the exploitation of labor—robbery thru the wages system. This is the condition that governs the relations of labor and capital under this system. Does Mr. Morgan expect that a handful of labor men and capitalists sitting about a table can change that condition? Of course Mr. Morgan doesn't mean that such fundamental principles should be or can be changed. He merely lamely expressed the wish that some arrangement whereby the continuation of the robbery of labor by capital could be effected—peacefully without strife. An acquiescence of labor in its exploitation is his great desire and hope.

In the second paragraph quoted he unconsciously states the exact truth. The lack of agreement of labor in the justice and equity of labors' exploitation by capital DOES make industrial problems difficult of solution. To expect it to be otherwise is to prove oneself extremely at variance with human nature and the proven principle of life. If Mr. Morgan imagines that this proposed conference shall modify in the slightest degree labors' natural hatred of oppression, tyranny and robbery, he expects the impossible. Man can never voluntarily submit to slavery, he may be forced to at times but at the first opportunity he breaks his bonds.

We agree with the last paragraph. The relations of labor and capital must be put in process of solution in the very near future. Indeed they must. Too long have they remained unoslved But they will not be solved by a hand picked bunch of labor-capital confrerees. They are in no danger of modification makeshifts may demand other solutions but they are building upon sands.
at this conference. That is not what the conference is for.

However, they are being solved. Russia is solving them—by the elimination of the capitalist, the only basis upon which they can be solved. This is not the solution which Mr. Morgan would ask. Nevertheless, it IS the solution Labor is learning that it is such. Capitalist editors and other creators of makeshifts may demand other solutio nbsut they are building upon sands.

We may as well expect the Atlantc waves to remain upon their level as that these conflicting currents of our social system shall be still—while the capitalist system endures.

Former National Executive Committee Thinks it Rules by Divine Right

SITS LIKE A KING UPON THE THRONE AND CALMLY VOTES TO EXPEL OHIO.

Every party member who makes a study of party affairs knows that the national constitution specifies that the national executive committee elected in 1918 shall go out of office on July 1, 1919. Article 3, Section 3, covers this provision. Yet the old national executive committee, elected in 1918 and whose term of office ended a month ago, continues to "king" the party as if by devine right.

It is now voting to expel the Socialist Party of Ohio for recognizing the suspended federations; for refusing to remit to the national office the proceeds from the sale of national convention assessment stamps and for deciding in convention, to affiliate with that section of the Socialist Party which stands for the Left Wing program.

All of the above alleged "crimes" are acts of the recent state convention of the Ohio party. These acts have not yet been ratified by the state membership, and will not become acts of the state party until so ratified. Balloting upon these acts does not close until the last of August.

The actual reson for this attempt to expel the Socialist Party of Ohio upon the eve of the national convention is to further eliminate that great element in the party nationally which is uncompromising and demands affiliation with the Moscow Third International instead of the Berne Scheidemann International.

Information from reliable sources now gives us to understand that Germer and the former national executive committee plan to wreck the Socialist Party so that they may swing what they leave of it into Labor Party ranks. Stedman of the old national executive committee frankly stated some weeks ago that if the radical element in the party prevailed, he and others would have to join the Labor Party.

Germer is now in correspondence with Max Hays, formerly prominent in the Socialist Party and who recently organized the Labor Party in Cleveland, with a view to breaking into the ranks of the strong Cleveland and Ohio Socialist Party organizations. The Cleveland Labor Party, after voting to include in its platform the statement that capitalists are entitled to a 6 percent profit, changed this to read that capitalists are entitled to a FAIR profit. It is such an aggregation of muddleheads that Germer proposes to feed the Socialist Party to.

Whether the Ohio Socialist Party is expelled or not, its 16 delegates will be at the national convention to do all in their power to "save the pieces." There will be nothing but pieces of the Socialist Party left if the former outlawed national executive committee is to be taken reriously in its "kinging" business.

Members of the Socialist Party of Ohio are asked by the state office to pay no attention to personal attacks upon comrades whose years of loyal service in this state have earned them the commedantion of all comrades. Personal attacks are only indulged in by those whose case is weak and who are in the wrong.

The Ohio Socialist movement will remain united irrespective of the wrecking activities of the former officialdom of the party. "Expulsion" by this reactionary officialdom, which did not even have backbone enough to ally our party with the struggling Socialists of Russia, means nothing to us. It is rather a mark of merit. Every member in the state would think it an honor to be "expelled" by a clique of Spargos, Scheidemanns, Kerenskys and such like. We think it an honor to be "expelled" by the Bergers of the former national executive committee.

That's Much Better

We feel encouraged. Eight more locals and branches reported for July than reported for June. However, this is not the best we can do. We can double the number reporting for July if all Ohio local secretaries will attend to their duty.

By the way, did you know that the state constitution provides that local secretaries SHALL report monthly to the state office? This does not mean that you can if you want to, if you feel like it, if you have time. It means that you SHALL.

Just for a change, obey the state constitution and get your report for August into the state office BEFORE September 8th.

PARTY NEWS AND VIEWS

A PICNIC—ATTEND

Local Belmont County is arranging a picnic for August 31. Tom Lewis will be the speaker. Belmont county comrades are asked to get into touch with Fred Walchli and lend their assistance. Address him 980 Central ave., Bellaire, Ohio.

LAST WEEK we said—PAY DUES. This week we say—PAY DUES. We'll say it again next week. We'll say it until you DO PAY DUES.

Better pay now and save printer's ink and the Ohio Socialist the nickle or two which it costs to set up this urge.

Nick Weltlich of Masillon is a REGULAR dues stamp purchaser. He takes an interest in keeping his local members in good standing.

Sub cards and pictures "of the best loved man on earth" go forward to J. L. Arnold of Canton.

And 50 Debs' pictures to Marguerite Prevey for the Akron picnic which took place August 17th.

The are selling fast. A new lot just off the press. On higher grade paper too. Buy a Debs' picture for your home. Buy a number of them to sell to your friends. Everybody wants a Debs' picture.

"We are circulating our petitions to place our candidates upon the official ballot and we are securing many signatures Comrade Dodge has been put on the job to collect back dues and we will send the state office a large order for dues stamps soon." Wm. L. Mauntel, Portsmouth.

"Agitation for the release of all working class prisoners is a good tactical starting point from which to build up a thoro revolutionary movement." Arthur Witting Ann Arbor, Mich.

Local Puyallup, Wash., does not think much of the excuses offered by Germer for the former N. E. C. for expelling about 40,000 members from the party.

Virginia contemplates sending a delegate to the national convention, if only to get first hand knowledge of the party controversy.

Going to the Belmont county picnic 125 Debs' pictures.

J. H. Sims reports that Local Clermont county is again waking up.

Branch Tiffin of Local Seneca County held a picnic Sunday, August 3rd. Still picnic time, you know. Induce your Local to begin arrangements for one NOW.

Speakers

The following speakers are available for dates in Ohio. Terms are $5.00 per meeting and expenses. Comrades who feel that they could serve the party upon the platform are asked to secure the endorsement of their local and have it forwarded to the State Office We will then place their names in this list. Speakers who have been omitted from this list but whose names appeared in this list some time back, are asked to notify the State Office if they are in a position to fill occasional speaking engagements.

DR. EDGAR LEE SMITH DIES

Dr. Smith, one of the oldest Socialists of West Virginia, dropped dead on West Stephen street, Martinsburg, recently.

Comrade Smith served upon the state executive committee of the Socialist Party of West Virginia and was a candidate for congress at several elections. The Party has lost in him a valliant fighter.

L. J. Love, one of our Youngstown, O. boosters sends in three subs. This is not the first time comrade Love has furnished valuable assistance along this same line.

Three fifty for subs comes from comrade A. B. Hollenbaugh of Fostorio, O., for which we are very grateful.

Of course comrade Jno Rehm of Springfield, O. is here again. Two yearlies this week from him.

Comrade J. Sovikos of Moline, Ill., remits a dollar for a sub for a returned man, who has been fighting for democracy in France. Now he demands industrial democracy and amnesty for political prisoners.

A fine bunch of twelve half yearlies comes from Minneapolis. Comrade Oscar Lindholm is responsible for this good work. Thanks comrade Lindholm.

OHIO SECRETARIES—REMEMBER

Balloting upon referendums now before the membership will close very soon. Make sure to canvass the vote of your local and send tabulated vote to the state office ON TIME.

Sell—Buy—the national convention special assessment stamps. Delegates' fare to the convention must be paid BY YOU. Or do you expect us to request delegates to walk to Chicago and back again?

George Markert writes that Local Mt. Healthy is planning a picnic for Labor Day. The "full page lies" which Comrade Markert send to this office, clipped from Cincinnati capitalist papers helps to keep the editorial department of the O. S. posted as to what is happening in other cities.

The Hungarian branch at St. Clairsville, Ohio, remitted $15.00 for national convention special assessment stamps. Has your local secretary offered them for sale to your local members?

J. L. Bachman of Columbus spoke at the Guernsey County picnic in place of Marguerite Prevey, who was unable to fill the engagement.

S. M. Cross is the live literature agent of Local Dayton. A large order for pamblets was received from him the other day.

J. L. Creviston of Mullberry, Kans., in sending in $3.00 for subs requests three or four sample copies a week to get more subcribers. That's the method. Try it.

Another dozen Debs' pictures to Frank Baxa of Neffs.

Elmer Hager succeeds E. L. Rodgers as financial secretary of Local Dayton. An order from him for a book of initiation stamps leads us to think he means business.

Perry H. Shipman of Rock Island, Ill., reports the picnic held recently, at which C. E. Ruthenberg spoke, a very great success.

LITERATURE

Buy it from the state office. Send for a new price list. A very good assortment in stock. Prices in large lots very low. Enables your local to make a profit of about forty per cent. Repelnish your local treasury by buying literature at wholesale and selling it at retail.

Socialists hold Picnic for Defense Funds

A picnic will be held by Cincinnati Socialists and sympathizers on Sunday, August 31st, for the purpose of gettin defense funds to appeal the cases of the thirteen comrades recently convicted in that city.

The picnic will be held at Reichrath's Park. Take Colerain ave., Clark St., or College Hill cars to the gate. Andmission 25 cents. The Cincinnati Educational Club will direct the outing. All readers of the Ohio Socialist should make it their duty to attend.

Music -- Everything at Kenmore.

Local Kenmore will hold a Band concert and Social Gathering at Shadyside Park Aug. 29.

The Ladies Band of Barberton will furnish excellent music.

This occasion will mark the opening of the Kenmore Municipal campaign.

A great time is in store for all who attend.

SUB GETTERS ARE BUSY

TAKE THIS ADVICE

If readers receive from the State Office a notice of expiration of their subcription we request that they renew at once. Expired subcriptions will not be continued longer than one issue after the expiration. Renew at once and miss no issues is the best rule.

Comrade Chas. E. Johnson of Bellaire recently sent in $3.50 for six subs. A generous list comrade Johnson.

Comrade Louis Sterle subcribes for a year for the Socialist Club of Dunlo, Pa.

A tireless worker for socialism and a greater Ohio Socialist is comrade Nic Weltlich of Massillon. Three subs from him lately.

Comrade Stanley Marshall of Cincinnati sends a couple in for a six months trial.

Comrade Alex Allison looks after the interests of the O. S. at Robins, O. A fine list of twelve from him were received a few days ago.

"I have seen several numbers of the Ohio Socialist and believe that it is worthy of a place on every thinking man's table fifty two times a year so I send herewith $1.00." That's now we strike comrade J. T. Lester of Jackson, Mich.

A "HUMDINGER"

"Util further notice send us 200 copies of The Ohio Socialist for free distribution among our membership. From what I have seen of your paper, It sure is a humdinger. WON'T LET US MISS A COPY. J. G. Reed, Secretary Local Oakland, Cal.

"Enclosed find $3.50 for subs for the best socialist paper I have read in some years, The Ohio Socialist." M. E. Hauswald, Joliet, Ill.

Still selling them—that's comrade Jno Rehm of Springfield. We mean sub cards. Your chances are just as good, comrade.

Another Springfield booster is comrade Jack Stultz. Two cards were received from him lately.

"I am delighted with it" writes comrade Peter F. Redding of Tacoma, Wash. He subscribes for a year.

Comrade J. P. Lerch of Bangor, Pa. sends in two subs.

Vancouver, Wash. is now on our list. Thanks to comrade L. Squire we have three subcribers there at present.

A list of four from comrade Phillip Falconi of Cincinnati shows activity.

To the many, many comrades who have sent in single subcriptions recently we wish to express our thanks. A single subcription is not to be sneered at. Often it means more in future. Where the seed is planted there a crop matures. Go after the subs, and the future of socialism is assured.

Swift denied hoarding of food. That's funny. We thougt he'd admit it!

DIVISION OF LABOR

All of the able-bodied people in society are divided for the purpose of economic investigation in two classes,—the workers and the idlers. The workers produce goods and services in return for the goods, clothing and shelter that they use. The idlers use food, clothing and shelter without producing a corresponding quantity of goods and services.

Among the workers there are again two classes,—those who can get jobs and those who cannot. At the minimum there are always about 1,000,000 unemployed workers in the United States. At times this number rises to four, five or even six millions. Those who get jobs produce for a wage or salary. The unemployed beg, accept charity, live on their accumulations, or starve.

Division of labor occurs among those who get jobs. In reality, therefore, what we see in society is not division of labor but division of product. Division of labor occurs only among one fraction of the people,—the employed workers. Division of product occurs every hour of every day among all people who use food, clothing and shelter. Tolstoy suggests that instead of calling it a division of product, we should call it "a seizure by the strong of the labor of others." In one of his essays ("What Shall We Do Then") he points out the method by which the idlers seize the product created by the workers, adding, "We have our special funcitional activities. We are the brains of the people. They feed us and we have undertaken to teach them. Only in the name of this have we emancipated ourselves from labor. Now what have we taught them? They waited a year, tens, hundreds of years. And still we discuss and teach and amuse one another, and have entirely forgotten them."

Society has no division of labor. Instead it has a division of product. To the workers go subsistence; to the idlers the first fruits. For these first fruits the idlers have agreed from time immemorial to use their minds and hearts in the interests of society. Instead they have used their energies wholly for themselves. What wonder that St. Paul and Captain John Smith and Nicholas Lenine all agree that "He that will not work, neither shall he eat."

SIXTEEN DOLLARS

Living costs are climbing. Housewives know this. Men and women, living alone in the big industrial centers, daily experience the bitter hardships which it entails. The minimum standard of living is getting higher, —just how much higher, a recent investigation by the Minimum Wage Board of the District of Columbia reveals.

The Board is composed of representatives of the employers, the employees and the general public. Under its jurisdiction there are approximately 15,600 women employed in industrial establishments. The Board selected the printing and publishing industry as the first to be dealt with and made a preliminary survey of its conditions. The industry in the District employs 700 women "of whom 47 per cent. were receiving less than $11 a week, while 76 per cent. received less than $15 per week."

A committee of nine, consisting of persons representing the employers, employes and the general public, was directed to determine the minimum wage in this industry. After a number of budgets showing income and expenditure of working girls in the District had been [illegible] and [illegible], the Board announced that "[illegible] is the minimum cost of living for a woman in the District."

The committee of nine then set about recommending the minimum wage it should propose. Each of the three groups conferred separately. The representatives of the public decided on $17.50; the representatives of the employes fixed 17; the representatives of the employers were satisfied with a minimum of $14 per week. The conference finally reported in favor of a budget of $[illegible]. Of this amount $[illegible] covers board and room; $[illegible] were for clothing and the remaining amount covers laundry, health, amusement, savings, etc.

Sixteen dollars a week will buy a minimum standard of living for an independent woman in the District of Columbia. In one industry (printing and publishing) more than three-fourths of the women were working for less than that amount when the Board made its investigation. These conditions laid bare in the National Capital are paralleled in every large center of the United States where women by the tens of thousands are working for a wage upon which they cannt maintain health and decency.

INTEREST PAYMENTS

Statesmen in France, Germany, Italy and Great Britain are deeply concerned over "interest payments." The French government, to meet its interest charges, must find some nine billions of francs each year; the German government as many marks, and the British two billions of pounds. Even in the United States, where the national debt is only $29,000,000,000, the interest charge is in the neighborhood of a billion dollars a year.

What is the meaning of all this?

The warring nations, during the past five years, have spent far more than their normal income, so that despite the increase in taxes, they have been compelled to borrow great sums. This borrowing was done mainly of the property owners. The workers have helped, in a limited way, but the bulk of the huge funds have cme from the well-to-do and from the rich.

The bonds of each country are held principally by the people of that country. So it comes about that the well-to-do part of the population in each of the great countries (from five to fifteen per cent. of the people) holds most of the government bonds. Therefore the well-to-do will receive most of the interest payments. During the coming generation (if the present system of society lasts so long) each of the governments concerned will pay an annual tribute of billions to this small well-to-do part of the people.

How are these funds to be secured? They must come from the product created by the labor of the workers.

Here, then, is a system under which the government takes from the masses, who are poor, and gives to the well-to-do, who already are amply supplied with the good things of life.

This system existed for a long time. The war has brought it into the daylight. The property owners, because they are property owners, and for no other reasn, are given the first fruits. They enjoy. The workers, who produce all of the wealth, receive, in return for their labors, a bare living. The surplus of production, in the meantime, goes to the owners. Heretofore, this surplus has been carried through the channels of economic life. The owners have taken most of their profit directly from the workers in the form of rent, dividends and profits. Today, in every one of the heavily indebted countries, the government has undertaken to collect from the workers the billions of unearned income that is to go to the owners in the form of interest payments on bonds.

The French Minister of Finance or the British Minister of the Exchequer laments over the difficulty of "apportioning the budget" to meet these interest payments. He deceives himself. His real problem is that of taking from the poor and giving to the rich without arousing the poor to revolution.

United States in this matter; and that means clerk's fees, printing bills, railroad fares, etc. It is impossible to estimate beforehand just what the expense will be.

I realise the courage it required of you, as state secretary of the Socialist Party, to tell me to go ahead and look to you for the expense. But you see, like myself, the importance of speed if we are going to bring Gene Debs out safe and sound again into the free air and sunlight. Knowing his physical condition as we do, a few more months at Atlanta may give us the spectacle of a lifeless piece of clay handed back to us, which was once our comrade.

I feel sure all comrades will rally to your support in this fight. I know they will see that the expenses are met. And I believe that soon the whole country and the world will discover that when the prison-doors closed upon Gene Debs his comrades did not forsake him.

Yours fraternally,

Joseph W. Sharts.

The Foreigner

Ever since the U. S. entered into the great world war, we foreign speaking people have been watchfully kept under strict control as the man—eating animal behind teh bars. You know the way they treated them in shops, mines and factories. They said to them: "Without your support men, in the harness of labor, war will not be won. You must work hard; spend and eat little, in order to maintain freedom for humanity; through the victory of our boys and allies..." So we see the end of war a victory on "our" side, but where is the freedom they offered to us? The prediction of Lincoln is coming truth of today: "You can fool the people, but you cannot fool all the people foreever." No politician, man or pen can picture the sorrow, lonesomness and longing of the hundreds and thousands of people living in this country without their friends, relatives and little ones; so dear to every human being. All here stated in this artiale is the cry of pretest from the masses upon the unjust and unhuman manner we are receiving daily by the "leading men and [illegible]."

We are positively sure [illegible] this country was and would be without the undesirable foreigner. All the riches, luxuries and commercial system is the biggest result of torling low-educated armies of various European countries, who, in spite of all this are not appreciated. They should be. From my own realization, "Americanziation" will by without any benefit to the people at all. Stephen Pogledich

SONG OF SEPARATION

(Ralph Chapln, the writer of this poem was formerly the editor of Solidarity, the I. W. W. paper. He is serving a ten year sentence at Leavenworth penitentiary.)

Two that I love must live alone,
Far away.
All in the world I can call my own,
Only they.
Mother and boy in the rocking chair,
Thinking of one who cannot be there,
Breathing a hope that is half a prayer,
Night and day, night and day.
Here in my cell I must sit alone,
Clothed in gray.
Bars of iron and walls of stone
Bid me stay.
What of the world with its pomp and show?
Baubles of nothing! This I know:
Deep in my heart I miss them so
Night and day, night and day.

Like all boosters, comrade L. O. Thomas, of Kenosha, Wis. calls for more "pep" in the Movement. He sends us two dolars for two subs which he secured. Which reminds us that all it takes to put more pep where it belongs is for all to do as he and get busy doing the things that lie nearest to hand.

[illegible] of Women

A nearly dead story has just been revived, it seems. It is the tale of the "Nationalization of Women" in Soviet Russia. Do you believe it?

The American State Department says:

"The rumor as to the nationalization of women is not true."

The Russian Soviet Government says:

"The calumny against Soviet Russia which has had the widest circulation—the baseless lie that women have been nationalized—is the most ridiculous and absurd of them all." (Official wire less from Moscow, "Manchester Guardian," May 5, 1919.)

Mr. Jerome Davis, who spent two and a half years in Russia as Secretary of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association says:

"I am absolutely certain that leaders of the Central Soviet Government, such as Mr. Lenin and Mr. Chicherin, would be absolutely opposed to anything so preposterous as the nationalization of women. I am sure every American Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. worker who knew these two leaders, will agree with me in that statement. In all my stay in Russia, I never met any one connected with the Soviet Government, with whom I talked on the subject, who was not only violently opposed to any such immoral doctrine but who did not also think it was too ridiculous a suggestion even to discuss." ("Independent," March 15, 1919.)

Catherine Breshkovsky was asked by her biographer, Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, whether the story was true. "She denied that women have been 'nationalized' or made 'common property,' or that the Government put any compulsion upon them in matters of sex. She said to me: 'Women have more freedom in Russia now than they ever had before.'" ("Nation," March 1, 1919.)

Mr. H. V. Keeling, an Englishman who left Russia last January after five years' residence says:

"There are altogether too much nonsense and untruth printed about Bolshevism and the Soviet Government. The absurd story about the nationalization of women, for instance. I never saw or heard anything of it in Russia, and it is supposed to have taken place long before I left. It simply couldn't be true. Women there have equal political rights in all respects with men, and other countries might well learn much from Russia with reagard to the position and treatment of women." ("N. Y. Evening Post," April 12th, 1919.)

"The New Europe," which printed the story last year, has made the following retraction and apology:

"We desire to withdraw unreservedly the imputation and to express our regret for the mistake." ("New Europe," March 13, 1919.)

Do you still believe it? Then we shall not argue with you.

Anyone interested in the origin of this miserable lie should read the article by Mr. Jerome Davis, "More Light on Russia," in the "Independent," March 15, 1919, in which the fantastic rumor is traced to its source. The law of the Soviet Republic governing marriage was printed in the "International Relations Supplement" of the "Nation," Dec. 28, 1918.

MUSKEGON WORKERS RESENT HIGH CARE FARE

What was heralded as a riot by the capitalist press took place at Muskegon, Mich., August 7th. Workers, resenting an increase in car fare, overturn and demolished fifteen street cars.

Many people were hurt and several fatally. Many who witnessed the spectacle dubbed it a "six hours' dictatorship of the proletariat." However, as Socialists do not believe in destruction but in assimilation by majority rule, this term can not logically be applied. At any rate, it forms a lesson to the profiteering capitalist class of Muskegon which will not soon be forgotten.

WHEN WILL THEY MEET?

The Big Four planned that Mannerheim of Finland, and Kolchak of Omak should meet in Petrograd. But Mannerheim is having trouble of his own and insists on staying in Finland, while Kolchak is going in the other direction as rapidly as possible. Latest news is that he may even have to evacuate his capital of Omak!

Evidently we must be patient. In about five years time, if Kolchak keeps on going east at the rate of ten miles a day, and Mannerheim holds his ground they will meet at last—that is, if it is 18,000 miles around the earth at the latitude of Petrograd and if Kolchak runs straight!

SEATTLE UNION RECORD.

Truth About Debs' Transferal

Department of Justice,
Office of the Superintendent of Prisons.
Washington, June 5, 1919.

Mr. E. B. Stephenson,
President State Board of Control,
Charleston, W. Va.

Sir: I have your letter of the 2nd instant, in which you request the further use of the West Virginia penitentiary for federal prisoners.

The fact is that some months ago the number of federal prisoners was greatly increased because of war conditions which resulted in a large number of military prisoners being committed to the federal prisons, as well as a large number of prisoners charged with violation of the espionage law, and other so-called war laws. This situation so overcrowded the federal prisons that it become necessary to divert some of the prisoners to the state prisons, and we made use of the West Virginia penitentiary, the Maryland penitentiary, and possibly one or two others. However, the situation was releived with the signing of the armistice, and the federal prisons were again able to accomodate all federal prisoners. We, therefore, discontinued the commitment of the federal prisoners to state prisons. At both the Atlanta and Leavenworth federal prisons a new cell wing is nearing completion, which will still further increase the accomodations of those institutions, and unless unforeseen conditions arise, I feel sure the federal penitentiaries will be able to care for all federal prisoners for some years to come.

It is true that we are now sending West Virginia and Ohio prisoners to Atlanta, Georgia, but the institution at Atlanta is a federal penitentiary and not a state prison. Of course, the transportation charges of prisoners from West Virginia and Ohio would be much less to the West Virginia penitentiary than to the Atlanta institution, but the cost of transportation is not a determining factor, for the reason that congress has directed the construction of the federal penitentiaries for the accommodation of federal offenders who were formerly all sent to state prisons.

In accordance with your request, I will have orders prepared immediately for the transfer of Federal Prisoner Eugene V. Debs from the Moundsville institution.

I may add that I believe the situation in the Moundsville penitentiary is a temporary one. It is being experienced by practically all of the state prisons. This situation no doubt will be relieved in the mustering out of large numbers of men from the army and their return to civil life. Statistics show that the greatest percentage of offenders in state prisons are between the ages of twenty and thirty years, and this being the military age, it follows that in the return to civil life of several million men of this age there will be an increase in the number of offenders in the state prisons.

Respectfully,

(Signed) F. H. DUEHAY,.....
Superintepdent of Prisons.

Let Anise tell why YOU should help buy a printing plant for The Ohio Socialist Anise, our comrade out in Seattle knows the value of a public press controlled by capital—for capital. Also she knows the value of a press controlled by the workers—for the workers. She writes exclusively for the Seattle Union Record, the great Seattle daily which is owned entirely by the workers of Seattle. One of the reasons the workers of the Northwest are sending shivers of apprehension up and down the spines of American capitalists is due in a large measure to the fact that the workers there have built up a strong press of their own TO FIGHT THEIR OWN BATTLES.

Let Anise tell why YOU should help to build a workers' press here and now.

HOW IT IS DONE!

By Anise

"If we should have a war
With Japan," she said,
"England is bound to help
Her ALLY,
And the Japanese troops
Would come in by Canada."
"You are dreaming," said I,
"Can you imagine Canadians,
Our own blood-brothers,
Filling their land with Japanese
Against us?"
"Not right away," she said.
"Their feeling is too strong
The OTHER WAY!
They would first have to be
CONVERTED!
But that's
A rather SIMPLE matter.
There would be a story
In the Canadian papers
That the U. S. President
Remarked to Congress,
That he had no USE
For the words "In God we trust"
Stamped on our COINS;
For there ISN'T any God!
Then the good Canadians
Would say in horror:
"The MATERIALISM
Oft those Yankees'!
A few days later
There would be stories
Of NEGRO lynchings
With 'unprintable' details,
And how some labor leader
Said: 'D—— ALL negroes'!
Then the workers of Canada
Would think: 'How BRUTAL
Are their LABOR MEN,
EVEN their common people'!
Then after a time a tale
Of the Mikado of Japan
How he rushed
Into a burning building
And said: 'I myself
Am of course not a Christian,
But my AUNT
From this BOOK'!
Then the good folks of Canada
Would say: 'Those Japanese
Have TENDER SENTIMENTS!
What touching, noble feelings!'
It would take
A LOT of stuff like that —
Stuff for the BUSINESS MEN,
Stuff for the WOMEN,
Stuff for the WORKERS,
And hot, fiery stuff,
But IN THE END
It COULD HAPPEN!"
Then I remembered
What I had seen done
ALREADY
About Mexico
And about Germany,
And about Russia,
And I thought: "He who owns
The PRESS of any country
Has BOUGHT
The PEOPLE'S SOULS!"

And that is the question. Shall the workers continue to sell their souls as well as their bodies to capitalism? Shall they continue to allow their thoughts to be molded to suit the interests of capitalism and their exploiters. Shall we continue to allow ourselves to be whipped into a frenzy of hate and revenge whenever it suits the parasites who rob us from the cradle to the grave? We Americans pride our selves that we "do our own thinking". We don't tho. It is done for us—mostly by the hired lackeys of capitalism. Most workers' reading consists of the daily paper. It's the bosses paper he reads. It prints the truth as the boss wants it to look to the worker. It is truth distorted, falsified. It is the bosses' weapon against the worker in every skirmish and every battle. It is his reliance to keep the worker on the treadmill of outrages exploitation.

Truly it is time we workers quit SELLING OUR SOULS to the brigands who live upon our toil. It surely is time we quit supporting the press that damns us year in and year out for the bosses' benefit. It certainly is time we established our own press—to fight OUR battles. The workers whose names appear in the columns below realize this necessity. They are doing their part. How about YOU. Show that you are one who wants to quit selling your soul to the boss by contributing to the fund that is to buy a press and printing plant for the Ohio Socialist.

We are at Atlanta— Knocking at the Gate

We're at Atlanta.

We're knocking at the prison gate.

AND THE KNOCK IS NOT A TIMID ONE!

As loud as a peal of thunder from a bolt of lightening a second in distance, our knock re-echos and reverberates thru-out the land with our demand that the prison gate be opened and that Debs walk forth a free man.

* * * *

We're at Atlanta.

We're knocking at the prison gate.

And by WE we mean ALL OF US—all of us who want Debs and all political prisoners freed.

The pounding at the prison gate is the pounding of a milion fists of a million men and women who have solemly resolved that DEBS SHALL NOT CLOSE HIS LIFE BEHIND PRISON BARS.

As we write this Debs is in consultation with Marguerite Prevey, Jos. W. Sharts and Samuel M. Castleton at Atlanta penitentiary.

Marguerite Prevey, a Socialist veteran, is known nationally for her uncomproimsing attitude against capitalism. Jos. W. Sharts, Socialist and attorney, was one of the three able lawyers who conducted the Debs' trial at Cleveland. Samuel M. Castleton, Socialist and attorney is Sharts' local representatives at Atlanta.

WE—YOU—ALL OF US are at Atlanta this week in the person of these three comrades, consulting with Debs.

ALL OF US ARE KNOCKING AT THE PRISON GATE.

AND THUNDEROUS BLOWS THEY ARE!

* * * *

The consultation now going on between all of us and Debs at the Atlanta penitentiary will have important results.

HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS ARE PLANNED and may be initiated AT ONCE.

Other important steps in DEBS' liberation may be decided upon.

Nothing WILL BE LEFT UNDONE IN OUR EFFORT TO RELEASE DEBS and everything will be done within our power to RELEASE HIM IMMEDIATELY.

No more waiting for us. No more hesitation. No more fooling away time expecting the capitalist class and its political retainers to "let Debs go".

Marx said years ago that the emancipation of the working class must be the work of the working class.

And the liberation of working class prisoners must be done by the working class as well.

* * * *

WE ARE AT IT!

We are hard at work, we at this end of the forward marching army of liberators.

AGAIN WE ASK—ARE YOU KEEPING STEP?

Are you with us in this fight?

When the battle is over, will you be able to say—"I did my part in liberating Debs from the clutches of capitalism."

* * * *

THIS THEN, IS YOUR IMMEDIATE DUTY.
SECURE LIBERATION FUNDS!

We sent you a communication and contribution list last week.

DID YOU GET IT?

If you did, put it to work AT ONCE. Ask EVERYBODY to give and give liberally to help FREE DEBS and all. If you did not get it then write us immediately. We'll send you another. You'll want it for it contains here-to-fore unpublished pictures of Debs, the prison gate, the steel cells.

THE STEEL CELLS!

Debs is there.

And you are where you can help get him out of there.

HELP DO IT!

GET BUSY WITH THE LIBERATION FUND CONTRIBUTION PETITION.

GET BUSY TODAY!

They are Coming Fast!

Liberation fund contribution lists, loaded with money, are already being received at Liberators' Headquarters.

The entire office force was astonished at the immediate response when the first half dozen lists strolled into the office showing generous total contribution of from $15.00 to $20.00 on each list.

The comrades seem to understand that we must pay—even for justice. Understanding this, they have gone to work determined to get justice for Debs and all political prisoners, no matter what the price.

We shall next week begin publishing the names of contributors and amounts of contributions. BE AMONG THE FIRSTS is our plea to you.

Yes—BE AMONG THE FIRSTS AND THE LASTS AND THOSE EVER AT IT.

No rest for any of us until VICTORY IS OURS!

A Message From Debs To You...

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 18, 1919.

TO ALL LIBERATORS,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Comrades:—

Saw Debs again Saturday and had a good interview with him.

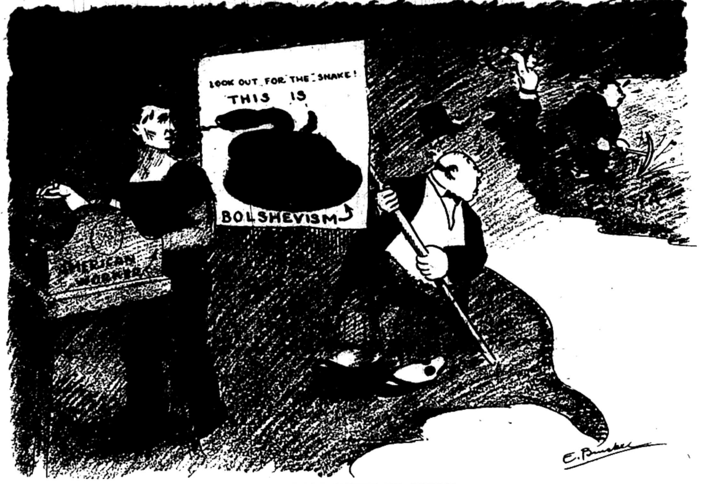
I wired Comrade Sharts, also wrote him a letter, explaining Debs' attitude.

I am with you to the end, until Debs is freed.

Shall write you a letter for publication some time this week [illegible]

DEBS SENDS HIS LOVE AND GREETINGS TO ALL COMRADES.

Yours in Comradeship,
Samuel M. Castleton,
Attorney.



LOOK BEHIND THE PICTURE, MR. WORKER.

65,000 Miners on Strike in Ill.

PROTEST UNIQUE IN LABOR HISTORY IN THAT IT IS AIMED AT UNION OFFICIALS AS WELL AS AT BOSSES.

A unique strike is in progress in Illinois. Miners, 65,000 of the 100,000 in the state, are on strike because of fines imposed upon them for taking part in the Mooney strike and other grievances, one of the most important of which is that against the reactionary district officials of the miners' union.

It is claimed that thugs, in the employ of President Farrington of that [illegible] for the slugging of a committee of striking miners which appeared in Collinsville to induce miners to join the strike.

The striking miners called a convention to meet in Springfield on August 19th over the heads of the union district officials. The call asks all local unions to continue the strike and ask others to join, subject to the action of the convention.

The policy committee of the striking miners, of which L. A. Coffey is president and Henry Schilling, secretary, both of Belleville, have sent out the following resolutions:

RESOLUTION

[illegible] the following petition for a [illegible]

Whereas, our contract was drawn up for the period of the war, and,

Whereas, since said contract has been drawn the third party to said contract has been withdrawn namely the U. S. Fuel Commission, thereby annulling our present contract.

Whereas, our National Officials called our State Presidents together in March, 1919. At this meeting, our President authorized the National to call a special convention in May 1919.

In April 1919, the Coal Operators of the United States held a meeting in Chicago and at that meeting said Operators passed a resolution favoring the continuation of the present contract until April 1, 1920.

In May, 1919, the National sent out a telegram to the State Presidents notifying them, that this special convention ahd been cancelled without consulting said District Presidents, or explaining why they did so.

And, Whereas we deem it necessary to call a strike to get action from our National Officials.

And, Whereas, it has become necessary to call a strike of all miners to have a special state convention called for the purpose of having a new scale of wages made to take effect immediately instead of waiting for a regular convention called by National Officers, which will take at least six months before wage agreement may be ratified,

And, Whereas, owing to the high cost of living, the miners' condition has become deplorable; therefore we ask all Locals to take immediate action, so our condition can be rectified.

We therefore appeal to all Locals to send out a call for speciall State Convention."

The most interesting part of these resolutions is the paragraph which reads that "we think it necessary to strike to get action from our national officials". The question of reactionary officialdom in the United Mine Workers' Union has long been a subject of debate in miners' meetings in Illinois, and this strike of 65,000 miners marks the beginnin of war to the end of deposing all pets of mine owners now "running" the national organization.

Following a meeting in sub-district 4, the following statement was issued by Lawrence Lamb, chairman of the meeting.

Lamb Issues Statement.

Following the meeting the following statement was made by Lawrence Lamb, who acted as chairman.

"At a mass meeting held in the union hall Sunday evening the miners of Sub-District No. 4. U. M. W. of A. aroused over the conditions existing in the mines of the state, as expressed by delegates from Collinsville, Belleville, Gillespie and various other parts of the state where the miners are now on strike and over the brutal mauling of the delegates from Collinsville Thursday last, voted unanimously to cease work immediately and to remain on a strike until such a time as President Farrington and all the executive officers of the state resigned or were deposed from office."

The secretary of the meeting was ordered to send a message to state headquarters demanding the immediate resignation of the said officials in the name of the members of Sub-District No. 4. Farrington was directly accused of being the employer of the thugs who slugged the committee from Collinsville and it was with great difficulty that a sentiment to arouse the miners to send committees out to give Farrington and the others blamed for the slugging a dose of their own medicine was subdued by the chairman and President Thompson of Sub-District No. 4.

The spirit of rebellion against the autocratic administration of affairs by Farrington and the executve officials was intense. Speaker after speaker taking the floor in turn, accusing and denouncing these officials.

The secretary was also notified to advise national officials of the action of the mass meeting.

Important Problems Faced by Convention Delegates

L. E. KATTERFELD, IN AN ADDRESS TO THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, MAKES VALUABLE SUGGESTION FOR A VIRILE ORGANIZATION.

FORWORD: Nationally the Socialist Party has been very planless. As a result it has marked time instead of marching forward. It has in fact retreated, for its avenues of activity in organization, education and propaganda work are less numerous now and have been for several years, than ever before.

There was a time in the history of the national organization when comrades were inspired and encouraged by and enlisted in special activities which were well planned and executed with credit. Of late years nothing but discouragement has come out of the national office and the motto has seemed to be, "it can't be done."

L. E. Katterfaild, who renders the report below to the new National Executive Committee has had years of experience in party work. By this we mean that he has taken part, actively, in the "small jobs" which are so numerous and which, after all, are the main essentials which will build us a big party He has not been a "shining light" in the movement and yet is known from coast to cast by the Jimmy Higginses. In this report he sums up the actual needs of the workers' political party and without which the party will never gain the strength it must have for victory. We ask a careful reading of this report by every party official and member.

Comrades of the National Executive Committee:—

The greatest problem that confronts us as an Executive Committee is the development of efficient instruments of propaganda, education and organization through which to reach the workingclass with the message of Revolutionary Socialism and organize them for action.

In the past this was left almost entirely to private agencies over which the Party membership had no control. These competed with each other and with the Party causing a tragic waste of energy and funds even where not influenced by private profit and personal ambition. Some of these private agencies had far better access to the Party's membership than even the State and National organization itself. Inevitably they diverted the attention of the Comrades to their private schemes. This is one of the reasons for the small measure of success attending the work of the Party as such.

Our predecessors in office made practically no effort to solve this problem. Some of them were far more vitally interested in these private enterprisess than in the success of the movement as a whole. It is our supreme duty to consider this problem seriously and to devote our very best talents toward its solution.

To be more specific, I consider it our duty:—To keep every member so well informed regarding the Party's activities that he can function intelligently;—To develop active workers out of as many members as possible;—To provide facilities for the education of our entire membership and the class conscious workers generally;—To provide the best possible training for those that will enter the Party's service;—To put to work every Party member competent and willing to give all his time to Socialism;—To eliminate the waste of competition between different units and institutions of the movement and organize the entire campaign, so that instead of hindering each other and working at cross purposes each will help the other and the strength of our entire membership will unite in pile driver blows against the ramparts of ignorance upon which the power of capitalism rests.

To meet these needs I propose that we establish at once, and develop as rapidly as conditions make it possible,

Mooney Strike Re-Affirmed by Second Chicago Mooney Convention.

No one knows until September 1st, whether the Mooney Protest Strike July 4th has failed. It will be a success if Tom Mooney and young Billings go free before Sept. 1st. If they are not freed, a still larger section of organized labor will strike again and again. The second Chicago Mooney Convention re-affirmed their decision to strike September 1st to 5th.

Such was the unanimous decision of the Second Mooney Convention that met in Chicago August 10th at the call of the Chicago Mooney Defense League. This convention was held in the fine hall of the new forty thousand dollar property of the Machinists' Union at 113 So. Ashland.

Delay since July 4th in giving Justice and Fair Trials to Mooney and Billings has added still more fuel to the flame of discontent. Mr. Densmore, the Department of Labor Official, has appeared before Congress with his dictaphone report. It was held unprintable because of the foul language of Attorney Fickert, who prosecuted Mooney and Billings by frame-up methods.

But there are more in prison than Mooney and Billings. Labor is interested in fair trials for all. Debs is serving 10 years — for expressing ideas. Haywood too is in for 20 years, for the same reason, now released on bonds. Thirty percent of organized labor in Chicago has decided to demand freedom for all class-war prisoners — Mooney Debs, Haywood, and all others.

One lone speaker in this convention sounded the strident note that there must be no more protest strikes for Mooney unless the majority of all organized labor would strike.... Boos and cat-calls!!! The whole convention seemed to arise to its feet to explain that all causes are won by the militant minority,—to act—not waiting for the majority.

"Labor's International Officers have abandoned the Mooney Case to the Higher-Ups in the Labor Movement" was charged. The Mooney Convention was itself represented almost entirely by the rank and file,—300,000 workers in all, of which 100,000 are in Chicako. This growing section of labor proposes not to rest until all unjustly imprisoned are free. And this regardless of their uinon affiliation or political beliefs. Social consciousness is surely growing in labor's ranks.

The One Big Union proposition pushed to the front by the Winnipeg Strike at present day industrial developments, was discussed and a resolution adopted for investigating and presenting to Organized Labor the means and methods by which this idea can be effected. United solidarity is an ideal that American Labor, divided into 113 craft unions, does not now present. The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Chamber of Commerce always show a solid front against labor—hence the necessity—it was argued for the One Big Union.

The Mooney Case has fathered international complications, says President Wilson. This three years of delay in giving justice to Mooney and Billings bids fair to see formidable National questions "brought to the bat."

The Chicago Mooney Defense forces in Convention assembled now demand freedom for all Class War prisoners and urges labor everywhere to increase their demands likewise. They endorred also a resolution looking to the practicalization of the One Big Union Idea. They condemned the presence of allied troops in Russia and interference with the Governments of Russia and Hungary and demand that the Allies cease such interference.

They protested against Race Riots and Pogroms instigated by the dominating class. Chicago decided to Strike Sept. 1st. and will surely join the one day protest on October 8th and again in November if Mooney and others are not freed meanwhile.

Whoever has complained that the issues in the Mooney Case were "not big enough" may now contemplate the foregoing formidable developments. Labor now demands freedom for its own and self-determination for the nations of the world.

Such was the Second Mooney Convention held in Chicago August 10th.

Important Problems Face Delegates.

our own Press, Publishing House, Lyceum Bureau and Training School.

I. PARTY PRESS.

The Party Press must perform several distincts functions. It must first address itself to the non-Socialist and interest him in Socialism. It must carry the news from the workingclass viewpoint, and bring the reader to the point of joining the Party. It must educate the Party member. It must keep him informed regarding the affairs of the Party and inspire him to be an ACTIVE worker. I shall consider these in their inverse order.

(a) An Organization Paper. As an essential for achieving the full measure of success in whatever else we may undertake we must establish an organization organ, or PARTY BUILDER. This should be sent direct to EVERY member. The subcription must be included in the dues. The "Official Bulletins" issued by the national office heretofore have been effective means of concealing the Party's business from the membership. It must be our first task to establish direct contact with the entire membership. State and Sectional editions of this Party Builder can be issued so as to serve the needs of the State Offices as well as the National.

This organization paper can not be started too quickly. Once the membership realize what we are trying to do, they will carry the whole program through to triumphant success.

Let us decide upon this immediately. I am sure that we can secure enough personal subscriptions RIGHT AT THE CONVENTION to entitle us to second class mailing rates. Then request each State Office to furnish a list of its membership as quickly as possible so that before the year ends every member may receive inspiration every week through the Party Builder. That will do much to weld our entire organization into an effective fighting force.

(b) Educational Journal. We need a periodical to record and interpret the events of the world wide struggle for Communist Socialism, one that will educate our own membership as well as the workers generally, and constantly broaden their horizon. The REVOLUTIONARY AGE has been doing splendid work along this line. Its editorial policy has hit the bulls eye. I suggest the we invite the Comrades of the Left Wing section to turn the Revolutionary Age over to the national organization to be the Party's official organ.

Every English reading member should receive this paper. The simplest and best plan would be for the Convention to increase the regular national dues enough to cover the cost of pubilcation and to place every member on the subcription list. If this is done it might be practicable to combine the Party Builder and the Revolutionary Age into one publication.

(c) News and Propaganda Papers. The time is very auspicious for the development of Socialist news and propaganda papers under Party ownership. Most of the periodicals that used to distract the attention of the Comrades are either out of business or have gone over to the enemy. The membership generally is now disgusted with private ownership of our propaganda means. It is up to the Party to supply the need.

Instead of doing this planlessly, Comrades starting papers helter skelter everywhere merely on impulse, then competing with each other, all trying to become national in scope with the certainty that most of them must inevitably fail, I think that our Committee should survey the entire field, consider carefully the needs of the movement, estimate the possibilities, and proceed deliberately to encourage the development of the Socialist Prers along those lines.

Ultimately I think that we should have a chain of Socialist Dailies covering all the great industrial centers of the United States. Our local and state weeklies should be placed and developed with this end in view. To avoid waste of competition in circulation getting etc., each paper should confine itself to a well defined district to cut down production costs, co-operation should be arranged between all the papers in news gathering and editorial work, so that each additional paper instead of being a competitor will be a source of strength to our Press.

As these papers achieve a sufficiently sound financial foundation and reach a certain minimum of circulation, they can then be changed into dailies, but the system of district territories and editorial co-operation should be preserved. Under this plan a chin of daily papers will have far greater chance for success than any one paper could have by itself. I believe that within a year this point can be reached with the Ohio Socialist or Socialist News, the Chicago Socialist, the Oakland World and a number of others, so that by the time that the next national campaigns becomes hot we can have a whole battery of workingclass dailies to meet the lies of the capitalist press. If the co-operation of existing dailies can be secured it will of course make our work easier, but this is not essential to success for the Party owned Press.

As an immediate step I suggest that we invite the managing editors of all existing Party owned local and state papers to meet with our Committee to consider with us this entire problem and if possible work out immediately the districting of the territory and a practical basis for co-operation in the business and editorial management of the Socialist propaganda press. The least that we should accomplish is the organization of a Socialist Press Association.

(d) A General Propaganda Paper. Even under the best possible system of co-operation because of limited circulation the production cost of Local and State papers will always necessitate a rather high subcription price, and it will be difficult to get the person who is not yet interested in our movement to some extent to subscribe. We need also a national propaganda sheet which can be published at a price so low that an immense circulation can be worked up among the non-Socialists, who thereby would become "prospects" for our other papers and for our organizers.

I suggest that we immediately begin to use the Eye Opener for this purpose. It should contain the best and most timely material from our other papers, articles that would interest the NON-Socialists. It could be published monthly at ten cents a year, or five cents a year in bundles. Comrades could than afford to place long lists of their friends upon the subscription list and to use it for house to house distribution and for house distribution where there are strikes. A tremendous circulation should be achieved. This would in no sense be a competitor of the local and state papers, but could be used to help advertise and establish them, acting as a "feeder" for them.

In these several ways we should begin AT ONCE to develop the Party's Publicity Power.

II. PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The National Office should be the great publishing center for the Socialist movement. Our entire party organization, State Office, Local, Branch and individual member, should be organized as a distributing force for the output of leaflets, pamphlets and books. In this way a volume of business can be developed that will cut down the production costs of Socialist literature to a fraction of what they are under the present anarchistic lack of system.

I suggest that we IMMEDIATELY invite Kerr and Company and other publishers of Socialist books that are worth while to state on what terms they will turn this function over to the Party, or at least co-operate with us. We should achieve for the Party Publishing House a monopoly of the publication of what are known as the standard classics of our movement. We should keep abreast of the times with the publication of new literature to supply the demand both in and out of the Party.

This does not necessarily imply the ownership of a printing plant. Kerr and Co. have never owned any machinery. Personally I believe that it would be a great advantage, but whether it is or not requires technical knowledge that none of us on the N. E. C. possess. I suggest therefore that we at once engage a printing expert to submit to us as quickly as possible an itemized estimate of the cost of a printing establishment to supply our probable needs, cost of upkeep, paper, etc., and what volume of printing would be required to make it a paying venture as compared with hiring our printing done by commercial firms. Arthur Brooks did this for the N. E. C. years ago. His conclusion was that if we made our leaflets, pamphlets, books and periodicals all of such size as to be fractions or multiples of a certain unit size, then we would have a great enough volume of work to keep a highest speed machine busy full time, and would be able to produce more cheaply than any private firm. The matter is worth investigating.

Under this head I have also a minor suggestion. Let us publish a "Red Almanac", patterned after the Almanacs distributed free by Paten medicine concerns, giving in connection with the usual calender a chronicle of national and international events to show the inspiring spread of the red the world over, explaining recent developments in the Socialist movement of the U. S. for the understanding of the outsider, and containing enough entertaining and humorous matter so that the average family will keep it and use it. I think that this could be produced cheaply enough so that Locals and individuals would use it for free distribution and assure a tremendous circulation, and thus advertise our publishing house and the Party as whole.

III. LYCEUM BUREAU.

The National Office should be the central Bureau through which all demands for Socialist speakers can be supplied. All available speakers should be listed and the needs of State offices supplied from there. Locals and Branches should be encouraged to secure their speakers and organizers through their State offices and the Party Lyceum instead of through private agencies.

I suggest that we immediately engage individual speakers of national reputation for booking with the larger Locals and arrange at least one lecture course for the same purpose. In addition to being offered on a cash basis those might be offered on a subcription basis in connection with the various party owned publications to build up their circulation and act as an outlet for the Party publishing House.

IV. TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Party needs thousands of trained workers, organizers, agitators, shop agents, solicitors, secretaries, etc. There is IMMEDIATE need for several hundred. We have not got them. We must develop them at once.

In the past these duties have fallen largely upon those who received special training in a capitalist environment before they become Socialists. Practiceless lawyers, pulpitless preachers and busted businessmen have almost had a monopoly of these positions and thereby influenced our movement out of all proportion to their number. The way to overcome this condition is to train up our own young people, workingmen and women who were Socialists first.

This training school should be started at once, and the co-operation of the convention delegates secured before they leave for home. An educational director should be engaged immediately to outline courses etc. The business administration, at the start at least, could be left to the Executive Secretary and the necessary overhead expense paid from the regular receipts of the national office. A Field Secretary should secure sufficient financial support from well to do Socialists, from units of the Party and from other labor organizations to make this school an immediately practicable proposition.

A correspondence Course should also be worked out immediately and every active Local and YPSL branch encouraged to take the same this winter

As far as possible we should make use of the experience of existing schools and secure their co-operation, instead of becoming their competitors. The correspondence course work and the full time training courses of the Rand and other schools should be absorbed by the Party School, for which I would propose the name: Marx University.

When the support warrants it, the Party should extend these educational facilities and develop local schools in the principal industrial centers as branches of an International Socialist and Labor University with a view not merely to train party workers, but to educate the workingclass in general as much as possible before the responsibility of administrating all the affairs of this nation falls upon their shoulders.

The beginning for this Extension University can be made from the Party's Lyceum. It can be gradually developed from the lecture courses in those centers where the local organizations make them a real success.

Each one of these four institutions, the Party Press, the Publishing House, the Lyceum and the Training School, will be an instrument to help build the others. Developed simultaneously they will assure stability to each other. Together they may become the most influential educational force that the world has ever known. Through them and with them our Party organization, local, State and National, should beable to measure up to its opportunities, adopt itself to whatever tactics the capitalist opposition makes necessary, and become the dominant power.

The criticism may be made that the capitalist powers may make 'laws'' to prevent us from working along these lines. If they do, we may be forced to adapt ourselves, give up one line of endeavor and continue another. But until they do we should make use of all these opportunities that we have. To the extent that we develop these efficient instruments now we shall be in better shape to meet the eventualities of the future.

Others may think that the unsettled condition within the Party makes it inadviseable to make new departures. I hold that this very condition is an argument in favor of beginning this constructive work right now. Those that would have sabotaged these Party enterprises will bolt from the Party as soon as they learn that we are the majority at the convention and their opposition will be less dangerous because it will have to come openly from the outside. The very act of making these plans NOW, and founding these institutions in this time of crisis will give confidence to those that may waver and will rally to the banners of our Party immediately all the thousands that are in earnest in their desire for Communist Socialism. At this coming convention the Party will purge itself of Reformism, will ally itself unreservedly with the Communist International, will become in FACT the Party of the Revolutionary elements of the workingclass of the United States. Let this historic gathering mark also an end to the era of private profit connection with Socialist propaganda in the United States. From now heceforward let all that is built up through the unpaid efforts of Comrades working for our Cause belong to the Party to strengthen it as an instrument for the emancipation of the workingclass. The inspiration of this hour will make available tremendous reservoirs of energy that have never yet been tapped for the welfare of our movement. Let us organize this energy for action.

L. E. KATTERFELD.

Members of Scandinavian Branch of S. P. of Youngstown, O. have been very active of late. Thru comrades Theo. Erickson we are in receipt of $22.00 which the members collected on press fund lists. Surely a generous list and shows how desirous the comrades are that we soon have our own press in operation at the earliest moment.

Gompers got bumped. He had an idea he could capture the International Labor Congress, which convened at Amsterdam. Instead he got a peach of a black eye. The possibilities of a break between the A. Tobin and Gompers are intent upon saving the face of Anglo-American capitalists. They also oppose recognizing the soviet governments of Russia and Hungary, lifting of embargoes etc., whereas the tripple alliance of labor composed of unionists of France, Italy and England favor these measures. It and England favor these measures.

Press Fund Notes

A comrade who was many times lent assistance to the State Office in its work of furthering the Socialist Cause sent five dollars to the press fund this week. Like many others, this comrade finds it necessary to donate without names being mentioned. We thank you comrade.

Comrade E. S. Smith of Warren dropped into the State Office last week. He immediately began to cover the desk with fives and tens spots in a most generous fashion. His contributions consisted of $20.00 to the press fund and $30.00 to the Ruthenberg-Hacker defense fund of Local Cleveland. Comrade Smith also left us some valuable historical matter concerning the rise of the Bolshevika to power in Russia as interpreted by New York press. The few moments comarde Smith could spend with us were much appreciated.

Thru comrade T. J. McKenna we received last week the sum of $20.00 contributed by comrades of Local Marietta, O. Ten dollars of this sum is from comrade S. B. Cole. Comrade Cole has guaranteed to match dollar for dollar the contributions of the other members of the Local to the press fund. Comrade Cole is certainly some game RED.

One of our press fund list circulators is comrade Frank Jancovic of Akron, O. A list from him this week contains $8.00. Shows how easy it is to get sums for the press fund.

Recently back from France, comrade A. B. Ferguson of New Lexington, O., hastens to enlist in the fight for real democracy. He contributes $4.00.

Comrade J. P. Young did a bit of collecting for the press fund also. His list says three dollars, one being his own. Every little bit helps a lot, comrades.

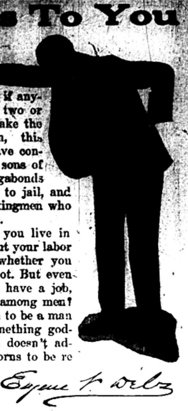
Sending cold chills up and down the spinal column of the capitalists is a trick comrade Frank Centliver of Troy, O. delights in playing. To make the trick perfectly effective, he orders $5.00 worth of sub cards and drops two dollars in the press fund. That's helping.

Comrade L M. Deimer of Akron, O certainly played a joke on our General Boss when he got that list of 8 comrades to donate $11.00 to the press fund. That's playing very cruel jokes on the old gentleman. Thanks comrade Diemer. We can almost hear the roar of that new press already.

"It's calamity to have to depend on outside printing plants". That's the way comrade F. Schon of Kalamazoo has sized up the situation. He's righ too. But he helps to remedy the matter by sending a dollar for our own press.

Comrades Geo. Hinger of Bell Center, O. and B. F. Hoffman of Hamilton, O. don't want to be without the Ohio Socialist. Both renew their subscriptions an send a dollar each to get a printing plant of our own.

Debs Says To You



"What can the present economic organization do to improve the condition of the workingman? Very little, if anything. If you have a wife and two or three little children, and you take the possibilities into consideration, this question ought to give you grave concern. You know that it is the sons of workingmen who become vagabonds and tramps, and who are sent to jail, and it is the daughters of the workingmen who are forced into houses of shame.

"You are a workingman; you live in capitalism; you have nothing but your labor power, and you don't know whether you are going to find a buyer or not. But even if you do find a buyer, if you have a job, can you boast of being a man among men?

'No man can rightly claim to be a man unless he is free.' There is something godlike about manhood. Manhood doesn't admit of ownership. Manhood scorns to be regarded as private property."

Eugene V. Debs

Debs Goes to Prison

I reminded Debs that he had already been nominated, so far as New York was concerned. He wanted to know how that came about, and I told him that several weeks ago, when Scott Nearing was given a reception following his trial, some one, in paying a tribute to the Socialist educator, mentioned him as the party's candidate for President. Whereupon Nearing instantly put the quietus on that spontaneous boom by declaring that 'Gene Debs was the logical leader of the party in the presidential race.

"That is so characteristic of Nearing," said Debs.

Debs did not say positively to me that he would refuse to run for President. Neither did he give me any authority for assuming that he would accept the nomination.

This conversation led Debs to speak of "leaders."

"Very often," said Debs, "a leader is in fact, a misleader. It is the workers, the men and women who do the hard work in building up their branches and their locals, to whom all the credit, homage, honor and glory is due. They are the salt of the earth, the gold in the rainbow.

"The simple people, these Jimmie Higginses who work early and late for the cause, who arrange the meetings, who wash the dishes after the festive dinners—O my soul! How much we owe to the workers in our movement. They expect no pay, they receive no honors. If you were to approach them with your thanks for the good they have done, they would blush to the roots of their hair.

"I have had a regret all of my days that I shall not live long enough to repay these dear and beloved Comrades of mine for the wonderful love and honors they have showered upon me with their loving hands—their seamed and scarred hands, worn and shriveled from the toil that has been their lot.

"Their joy is to serve, and yet none serve them."

Debs was thinking more than he said. His face, at moments, was sad and grave. While he was speaking of the service of the workers to the cause dearest to their hearts his face was radiant and a moisture came to his eyes.

"All that I am in this world," he was saying, softly, "is what my Comrades have made me. They are the fruit of the choicest tree that ever grew."

Across from us, sitting in the brightly lighted smoking car of the Big Four Line, sat several smooth and soft gentlemen, clothed in immaculate linen. They were going somewhere to make a trade, or to strike a bargain. They knew Debs sat within a few feet of them. Each man had either a newspaper or a magazine before his eyes, pretending to be reading it. But I saw each man look over his book or paper, and steal a glance again and again at Debs on the sly. A little while before they had run out on the platform of the Pullman at Terre Haute to see what all the racket was about.

People asleep in their berths in several cars ahead and below the one in which Debs was assigned came out in their pajamas and nighties under their coats.

One tall fellow, with a fine face, and clothed in his pajams, shook Debs by the hand and said: "Mr. Debs, I am going to Canton. Have you ever been there?"

"Oh, yes," replied Debs, appreciating the humor, "I made a speech there once." The old guard standing down on the dimly lighted platform of the station laughed heartly.

It was at Canton that Debs made the speech on June 16, 1918, that resulted in his indictment, conviction and imprisonment.

Shortly before five, the porter came to my berth at the opposite end of the car. I was sleeping soundly.

"Are you with Mr. Debs?" the porter inquired. He seemed to regard me as a deputy. "Mr. Debs has just gotten up."

A few moments later, Debs was in the wash room writing a note. He said he had slept only an hour, "but," he added, "I was resting with my thoughts." If one could only write what those thoughts were.

We again went to the club car, and in a moment Baur joined us. A stranger was sitting opposite. He approached Debs and I was alert, thinking the stranger might be a deputy to place Debs under arrest. He was just a man who wanted to shake 'Gene's hand and give him his love. Debs said he did not know the person.

In the early morning while the train was creeping slowly into the Cleveland yards Debs leaned over to me and asked me to take his statement for his comrades throughout the United States. I fished about for some paper in my coat, and not finding any, took a book that I had in my grip. Although I was unaware of it at that moment I had picked out the book: "Debs: His Life, Writings and Speeches," by Stephen Marion Reynolds. When I had written that statement in the back of the book Debs remarked, "That makes a nice addendum, doesn't it?" I asked him if he would sign his last statement for me. This is the statement:

"As I am about to enter the prison doors, I wish to send to the Socialists of America who have so loyally stood by me since my first arrest this little message of love and cheer. These are pregnant days and promising ones.

"We are all on the rthreshold of tremedous changes. The workers of the world awakening and bestirring themselves as never before. All the forces that are playing upon the modern world are making for the overthrow of despotism in all its forms and for the emancipation of the masses of mankind.

"I hrall be in prison in the days to come, but my revolutionary spirit will be abroad and I shall not be inactive. Let us all in this supreme hour measure up to our full stature and work together as one for the great cause that means emancipation for us all.

"Love to all my Comrades and all hail to the revolution.

"EUGENE V. DEBS."

Earlier in the night I asked Debs what would be his attitude toward a possible pardon.

"Suppose," I asked him, "President Wilson should cable a pardon for you without anw strings attached to it, an unconditional pardon, what would you do, what would be your attitude?"

Debs took another draw on his cigar. As the smoke curled from his lips his answer was ready:

I shall refuse to accept it, unless that same pardon is extended to every mand and women in prison under the Espionage Act. They must let them all out—I. W. W. and all—or I won't come out. I do not want any special dispensation of justice in my case. It 's perfectly clear. I always have taken that position, and I cannot too strongly reassert it now."

I understood. Every one of his followers will understand.

All during the trip to Cleveland Debs talked gayly enough. He told us stories of how back in 1896 he had campaigned for Bryan for president. "Even during that campaign," Debs said, "I was getting along fast toward Socialism. I was talking straight industrial unionism, and some of Bryan's lieutennats did not like it. They said I was directing more attention to myself through my speeches delivered direct to the workers than was Bryan with his free silver pannaea." Debs chuckled merrily as he recalled the incident.

"Debs Goes to Prison" can be had for 25c. in pamphlet form.—Order of Socialist Party of Ohio, 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O.

We are at Atlanta--Knocking at the Gate

We're at Atlanta.

We're knocking at the prison gate.

AND THE KNOCK IS NOT A TIMID ONE!

As loud as a peal of thunder from a bolt of lightening a second in distance, our knock re-echos and reverberates thru-out the land with our demand that the prison gate be opened and that Debs walk forth a free man.

* * * *

We're at Atlanta.

We're knocking at the prison gate.

And by WE we mean ALL OF US—all of us who want Debs and all political prisoners freed.

The pounding at the prison gate is the pounding of a mililon fists of a million men and women who have solemly resolved that DEBS SHALL NOT CLOSE HIS LIFE BEHIND PRISON BARS.

* * * *

As we write this Debs is in consultation with Marguerite Prevey, Jos. W. Sharts and Samuel M. Castleton at Atlanta penitentiary.

Marguerite Prevey, a Socialist veteran, is known nationally for her uncompromising attitude against capitalism. Jos. W. Sharts, Socialist and attorney, was one of the three able lawyers who conducted the Debs' trial at Cleveland. Samuel M. Castleton, Socialist and attorney is Sharts' local representatives at Atlanta.

WE—YOU—ALL OF US are at Atlanta this week in the person of these three comrades, consulting with Debs.

ALL OF US ARE KNOCKING AT THE PRISON GATE.

AND THUNDEROUS BLOWS THEY ARE!

* * * *

The consultation now going on between all of us and Debs at the Atlanta penitentiary will have important results.

HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS ARE PLANNED and may be initiated AT ONCE.

Other important steps in DEBS' liberation may be decided upon.

Nothing WILL BE LEFT UNDONE IN OUR EFFORT TO RELEASE DEBS and everything will be done within our power to RELEASE HIM IMMEDIATELY.

No more waiting for us. No more hesitation. No more fooling away time expecting the capitalist class and its political retainers to "let Debs go".

Marx said years ago that the emancipation of the working class must be the work of the working class.

And the liberation of working class prisoners must be done by the working class as well.

* * * *

WE ARE AT IT!

We are hard at work, we at this end of the forward marching army of liberators.

AGAIN WE ASK--ARE YOU KEEPING STEP?

Are you with us in this fight?

When the battle is over, will you be able to say—"I did my part in liberating Debs from the clutches of capitalism."

* * * *

THIS THEN, IS YOUR IMMEDIATE DUTY. SECURE LIBERATION FUNDS!

We sent you a communication and contribution list last week.

DID YOU GET IT?

If you did, put it to work AT ONCE. Ask EVERYBODY to give and give liberally to help FREE DEBS and all. If you did not get it then write us immediately. We'll send you another. You'll want it for it contains here-to-fore unpublished pictures of Debs, the prison gate, the steel cells.

* * * *

THE STEEL CELLS!

Debs is there.

And you are where you can help get him out of there.

HELP DO IT!

GET BUSY WITH THE LIBERATION FUND CONTRIBUTION PETITION.

GET BUSY TODAY!

They are Coming Fast!

Liberation fund contribution lists, loaded with money, are already being received at Liberators' Headquarters.

The entire office force was astonished at the immediate response when the first half dozen lists strolled into the office showing generous total contribution of from $15.00 to $20.00 on each list.

The comrades seem to understand that we must pay—even for justice. Understanding this, they have gone to work determined to get justice for Debs and all political prisoners, no matter what the price.

We shall next week begin publishing the names of contributors and amounts of contributions. BE AMONG THE FIRSTS is our plea to you.

Yes—BE AMONG THE FIRSTS AND THE LASTS AND THOSE EVER AT IT.

No rest for any of us until VICTORY IS OURS!

A Message From Debs To You

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 18, 1919.

TO ALL LIBERATORS,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Comrades:—

Saw Debs again Saturday and had a great interview with him.

I wired Comrade Sharts, also wrote him a letter, explaining Debs' attitude.

I am with you to the end, until Debs is freed.

Shall write you a letter for publication some time this week which I think will be of much interest to your readers.

DEBS SENDS HIS LOVE AND GREETINGS TO ALL COMRADES.

Yours in Comradeship,
Samuel M. Castleton,
Attorney.

65,000 Miners on Strike in Ill.

PROTEST UNIQUE IN LABOR HISTORY IN THAT IT IS AIMED AT UNION OFFICIALS AS WELL AS AT BOSSES.

A unique stike is in progress in Illinois. Miners, 65,000 of the 100,000 in the state, are on strike because of fines imposed upon them for taking part in the Mooney strike and other grievances, one of the most important of which is that against the reactionary district officials of the miners' union.

It is claimed that thugs, in the employ of President Farrington of District 12, were responsible for the slugging of a committee of striking miners which appeared in Collinsville to induce miners to join the strike.

The striking miners called a convention to meet in Springfield on August 19th over the heads of the union district officials. The call asks all local unions to continue the strike and ask others to join, subject to the action of the convention.

The policy committee of the striking miners, of which L. A. Coffey is president and Henry Schilling, secretary, both of Belleville, have sent out the followning resolutions:

RESOLUTION

"We, your Policy Committee, recommend the following petition for a call for a convention.

Whereas, our contract was drawn up for the period of the war; and,

Whereas, since said contract has been drawn the third party to said contract has been withdrawn namely the U. S. Fuel Commission, thereby annulling our present contract.

Whereas, our National Officials called our State Presidents together in March, 1919. At this meeting, our President authorized the National to call a special convention in May 1919.

In April 1919, the Coal Operators of the United States held a meeting in Chicago and at that meeting said Operators passed a resolution favoring the continuation of the present contract until April 1, 1920.

In May, 1919, the National sent out a telegram to the State Presidents notifying them, that this special convention ahd been cancelled without consulting said District Presidents, or explaining why they did so.

And, Whereas we deem it necessary to call a strike to get action from our National Officials.

And, Whereas, it has become necessary to call a strike of all miners to have a special state convention called for the purpose of having a new scale of wages made to take effect immediately instead of waiting for a regular convention called by National Officers, which will take at least six months before wage agreement may be ratified,

And, Whereas, owing to the high cost of living, the miners' condition has become deplorable; therefore we ask all Locals to take immediate action, so our condition can be rectified.

We therefore appeal to all Locals to send out a call for speciall State Convention."

The most interesting part of these resolutions is the paragraph which reads that "we think it necessary to strike to get action from our national officials". The question of reactionary officialdom in the United Mine Workers' Union has long been a subject of debate in miners' meetings in Illinois, and this strike of 65,000 miners marks the beginnin of war to the end of deposing all pets of mine owners now "running" the national organization.

Following a meeting in sub-district 4, the following statement was issued by Lawrence Lamb, chairman of the meeting.

Lamb Issues Statement.

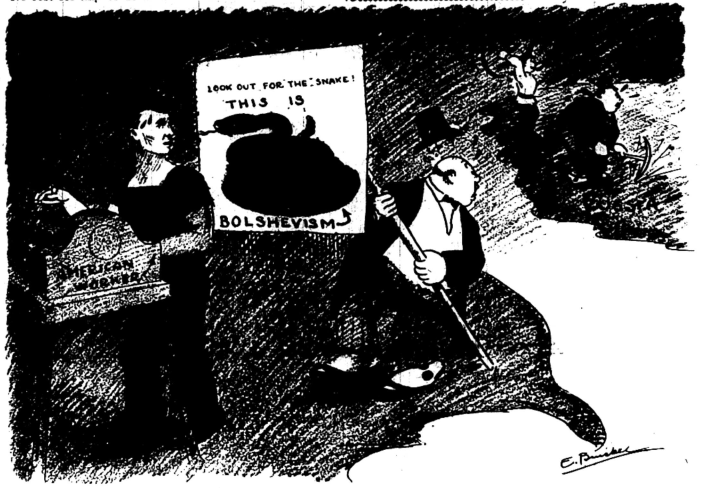
Following the meeting the following statement was made by Lawrence Lamb, who acted as chairman.

"At a mass meeting held in the union hall Sunday evening the miners of Sub-District No. 4. U. M. W. of A. aroused over the conditions existing in the mines of the state, as expressed by delegates from Collinsville, Belleville, Gillespie and various other parts of the state where the miners are now on strike and over the brutal mauling of the delegates from Collinsville Thursday last, voted unanimously to cease work immediately and to remain on a strike until such a time as President Farrington and all the executive officers of the state resigned or were deposed from office."

The secretary of the meeting was ordered to send a message to state headquarters demanding the immediate resignation of the said officials in the name of the members of Sub-District No. 4. Farrington was directly accused of being the employer of the thugs who slugged the committee from Collinsville and it was with great difficulty that a sentiment to arouse the miners to send committees out to give Farrington and the others blamed for the slugging a dose of their own medicine was subdued by the chairman and President Thompson of Sub-District No. 4.

The spirit of rebellion against the autocratic administration of affairs by Farrington and the executve officials was intense. Speaker after speaker taking the floor in turn, accusing and denouncing these officials.

The secretary was also notified to advise national officials of the action of the mass meeting.



LOOK BEHIND THE PICTURE, MR. WORKER.

Important Problems Faced by Convention Delegates

L. E. KATTERFELD, IN AN ADDRESS TO THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, MAKES VALUABLE SUGGESTION FOR A VIRILE ORGANIZATION.

FORWORD: Nationally the Socialist Party has been very planless. As a result it has marked time instead of marching forward. It has in fact retreated, for its avenues of activity in organization, education and propaganda work are less numerous now and have been for several years, than ever before.

There was a time in the history of the national organization when comrades were inspired and encouraged by and enlisted in special activities which were well planned and executed with credit. Of late years nothing but discouragement has come out of the national office and the motto has seemed to be, "it can't be done."

L. E. Katterfelld, who renders the report below to the new National Executive Committee has had years of experience in party work. By this we mean that he has taken part, actively, in the "small jobs" which are so numerous and which, after all, are the main essentials which will build us a big party He has not been a "shining light" in the movement and yet is known from coast to cast by the Jimmy Higginses. In this report he sums up the actual needs of the workers' political party and without which the party will never gain the strength it must have for victory. We ask a careful reading of this report by every party official and member.

The greatest problem that confronts us as an Executive Committee is the development of efficient instruments of propaganda, education and organization through which to reach the workingclass with the message of Revolutionary Socialism and organize them for action.

In the past this was left almost entirely to private agencies over which the Party membership had no control. These competed with each other and with the Party causing a tragic waste of energy and funds even where not influenced by private profit and personal ambition. Some of these private agencies had far better access to the Party's membership than even the State and National organization itself. Inevitably they diverted the attention of the Comrades to their private schemes. This is one of the reasons for the small measure of success attending the work of the Party as such.

Our predecessors in office made practically no effort to solve this problem. Some of them were far more vitally interested in these private enterprisess than in the success of the movement as a whole. It is our supreme duty to consider this problem seriously and to devote our very best talents toward its solution.

To be more specific, I consider it our duty:—To keep every member so well informed regarding the Party's activities that he can function intelligently;—To develop active workers out of as many members as possible;—To provide facilities for the education of our entire membership and the class conscious workers generally;—To provide the best possible training for those that will enter the Party's service;—To put to work every Party member competent and willing to give all his time to Socialism;—To eliminate the waste of competition between different units and institutions of the movement and organize the entire campaign, so that instead of hindering each other and working at cross purposes each will help the other and the strength of our entire membership will unite in pile driver blows against the ramparts of ignorance upon which the power of capitalism rests.

To meet these needs I propose that we establish at once, and develop as rapidly as conditions make it possible,

Mooney Strike Re-Affirmed by Second Chicago Mooney Convention.

No one knows until September 1st, whether the Mooney Protest Strike July 4th has failed. It will be a success if Tom Mooney and young Billings go free before Sept. 1st. If they are not freed, a still larger section of organized labor will strike again and again. The second Chicago Mooney Convention re-affirmed their decision to strike September 1st to 5th.

Such was the unanimous decision of the Second Mooney Convention that met in Chicago August 10th at the call of the Chicago Mooney Defense League. This convention was held in the fine hall of the new forty thousand dollar property of the Machinists' Union at 113 So. Ashland.

Delay since July 4th in giving Justice and Fair Trials to Mooney and Billings has added still more fuel to the flame of discontent. Mr. Densmore, the Department of Labor Official, has appeared before Congress with his dictaphone report. It was held unprintable because of the foul language of Attorney Fickert, who prosecuted Mooney and Billings by frame-up methods.

But there are more in prison than Mooney and Billings. Labor is interested in fair trials for all. Debs is serving 10 years — for expressing ideas. Haywood too is in for 20 years, for the same reason, now released on bonds. Thirty percent of organized labor in Chicago has decided to demand freedom for all class-war prisoners — Mooney Debs, Haywood, and all others.

One lone speaker in this convention sounded the strident note that there must be no more protest strikes for Mooney unless the majority of all organized labor would strike.... Boos and cat-calls!!! The whole convention seemed to arise to its feet to explain that all causes are won by the militant minority—to act—not waiting for the majority.

"Labor's International Officers have abandoned the Mooney Case to the Higher-Ups in the Labor Movement" was charged. The Mooney Convention was itself represented almost entirely by the rank and file,—300,000 workers in all, of which 100,000 are in Chicako. This growing section of labor proposes not to rest until all unjustly imprisoned are free. And this regardless of their uinon affiliation or political beliefs. Social consciousness is surely growing in labor's ranks.

The One Big Union proposition pushed to the front by the Winnipeg Strike at present day industrial developments, was discussed and a resolution adopted for investigating and presenting to Organized Labor the means and methods by which this idea can be effected. United solidarity is an ideal that American Labor, divided into 113 craft unions, does not now present. The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Chamber of Commerce always show a solid front against labor—hence the necessity—it was argued for the One Big Union.

The Mooney Case has fathered international complications, says President Wilson. This three years of delay in giving justice to Mooney and Billings bids fair to see formidable National questions "brought to the bat."

The Chicago Mooney Defense forces in Convention assembled now demand freedom for all Class War prisoners and urges labor everywhere to increase their demands likewise. They endorred also a resolution looking to the practicalization of the One Big Union Idea. They condemned the presence of allied troops in Russia and interference with the Governments of Russia and Hungary and demand that the Allies cease such interference.

They protested against Race Riots and Pogroms instigated by the dominating class. Chicago decided to Strike Sept. 1st. and will surely join the one day protest on October 8th and again in November if Mooney and others are not freed meanwhile.

Whoever has complained that the issues in the Mooney Case were "not big enough" may now contemplate the foregoing formidable developments. Labor now demands freedom for its own and self-determination for the nations of the world.

Such was the Second Mooney Convention held in Chicago August 10th.

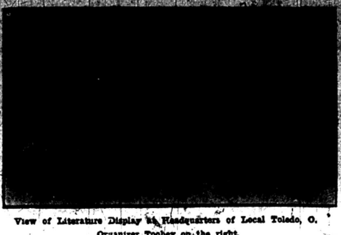
Tears for Kolchak

Whatever substantial aid is lacking in the allies' support of Kolchak is made up in tearful sympathy extended by capitalistic editors.

But where guns and food fail we can hardly expect that tears and sympathy however sincere, can avail. Kolchak is decisevely beaten. His summer's campaign against the Red army is a total failure. All successes belong to the Bolsheviks. Instead of following up his gains early in the spring, he has retreated nearly a thousand miles. Omsk, which he styles the capital of his "government" stands ready for evacuation at any hour as the Red army advances. Kolchak, as the strong man upon whom the allies and the capitalist world depended to rehabilitate capitalism, is proven to be a straw in the wind of the proletarian revolution that is steadily winning out in Russia.

Once more are the emissaries of capitalism proven false prophets. After months of foretelling daily the immediate downfall of the Soviet government, they are forced to admit the growing strength of New Russia. This does not deter them tho, from continueing to prophesy that "in the end, Bolshevism must turn itself out". Of course one can always prophesy and if one had no respect for their reputation as a forecaster of events, such bland prophecies will likely follow. No one will take them seriously however. The fact that Kolchak is being driven into a corner without hope of escape will have a strong tendency to raise faith in the Soviet power. The Soviets are winning, not only in Russia, against the counter revolution, but in moral support among the working class thruout the world.

The proletarian revolution is winning. Tears for Kolchak may provide a vent for disappointed capitalistic feelings, but they also reveal the weakness of capitalism to rebuild itself in Free Russia.



View of Literature Display at Headquarters of Local Toledo, O.
Organizer Toohey on the right.

The above pictures show the Headquarters of the ocialist Party in Toledo, they are at 213 Michigan st. open at all times, for all comrades. All kinds of Literature of all branches of the radical movement is for sale there, from the Anarchist's sheets to the New Republic. There is a well-stocked Icebox with all kinds of soft drinks. Pool tables are in the rear, a full line of tobacco and cigars is for sale. The meeting date is given in other part of this paper. No one passing thru Toledo should miss calling at the Headquarters, they are located in the down-town district, and have a bell telephone. PARTY NEWS AND VIEWS

PIQUA SOCIALIST TO WIN.

"We are driving the old gang into a corner. At this primary election there were only 17 votes cast. Our petitions are being signed and we find that the workers are with us strong. Am making an effort to have the Socialists of Troy put a ticket in the field. They would win this fall." Mayor Hamilton, Piqua.

The state convention of Oregon decided to retain money derived from the sale of national convention assessment stamps in the state treasury and send it to the convention with the state delegates.

Morris Millquit has declined the nomination for delegate to the national convention offered him by the "regular" party organization in that state.

Edwin Firth, who for the past six months has had charge of the literature department under Adolp Germer, and who, considering handicaps, has made a signal success of that department, has been discharged. From information at hand Germer claims he can not afford to employ Firth any longer because receipts do not warrant it.

A contribution of $7.25 from Local Zanesville for national convention expenses has been received. And $10.00 from Local Rock Island, Ill.

Ella Reeve Bloor is engaged in organization work in Kansas City. We We hope to secure her for a tour of Ohio shortly.

Locals Seneca County and Portsmouth have ordered several thousands of the "Open Letter to President Wilson" leaflet, which appeared in a recent issue of the Ohio Socialist. This leaflet sells for $2.00 a thousand. Order a thousand for distribution.

Local Girard makes inquires for a speaker. Fred Wilson writes: "We now meet each Tuesday eening in the Finnish Hall, Market and Second Sts. Can we have Ruthenberg for a Saturday evening meeting. No trouble to hold meetings here."

LASALLE CLUB PICNICS

The LaSalle Club, the German Socialist Branch of Local Cincinnati, held a picnic in conjunction with the sympathizing farmers at Batavia, O. The Herwegh Maenner Chorus provided singing for the day. The comrades intended to organize at Batavia but opposition was had in the person of the Catholic priest, who has informed the farmers that if they join the Socialist Party or listen to its speakers the consequences will be the loss of their farms.

Another picnic will be held at Batavia in a short time, writes Otto Hoefer. The proceeds of the last picnic will go to the Ohio Socialist press fund.

A $17.00 remittance from Local Fremont was the surprise of the state office the other day.

WORKERS' DEFENSE LEAGUE ORGANIZES IN AKRON.

On Sunday, July 20th, at the C. L. U. Hall, the Workers' Defense League was organized, composed of various working class organization of Akron and vicinity. Local Akron of the Socialist Party and each of its branches have two delegates in the league. The purpose of the league to defend workers persecuted by the employing class. The league will also defend victims of strikes of unorganized workers. An International Labor Day picnic will be held September 1st at Frank's Farm on the Wooster avenue extention. P. Monoldi is the president and Jas. B. O'Brien the secretary-treasurer of the league.

The Socialist Party of Minnesota met in State Convention on August 24th.

Local Warren is still on the lookout for a comrade to act as canvasser in that city. Any party member desiring to learn particulars is asked to address J. F. Denison, 416½ Washington st., Warren, Ohio.

Local Columbus donates $5.00 to help defray national convention expenses.

A BREEZY LETTER FROM SENECA.

Dear Comrades of the State Office:—Received your letter acknowledging the $11.00 for press fund and note what you say. I think we did well considering that after comrade Geiger returned from the Left Wing conference we had $50.00 debts and 4c. in the treasury. We have since paid all the debts, donated $27.00 to press fund, have twenty some dollars in treasury, and are working for the picnic funds now. We have about 7 or 8 comrades in Branch Tiffin, whose first, last and middle name are work, pay and fight. They are in training for the big days ahead when they may have to work in 24 and 36 hours shifts.

This same crowd is always on the job. Comrade Ralston broke the news to the comrades gently, with a sledge hammer, that from now on dollars instead of dimes must go into the collection basket. I hope we get the habit.

We had a picnic at comrade Henry's—104 present—cleared $8.80. We are going to meet at Comr. Ward's boat house up the River next Sunday the 17. I am selling some copies of Com. Reed's "Ten Days That Shook the World." They say one can be miserable, but it takes two to be glad, that's why every time some thing good happens in Local Seneca Co. I tax the patience of the State Office by unraveling the whole yarn.

Yours in comradeship

NELLIE LESCHER,
Tiffin, O.

Geo. H. Houghton is poneering in Wellington, Ohio. He writes the state office a very encouraging letter.

Local Belmont County will picnic September 14th instead of August 31, as first announced.

Local Toledo applies for a week's dates from John DeQuer.

Local Robins donated $5.00 towards the expenses of delegates to the national convention.

"Presumably Innocent"

Concerning the indicted and alleged food profiteers of Cleveland, a capitalist contemporary asserts that "of course they are entitled to a speedy and fair trial before a jury of their peers, and until this occurs they are to be considered innocent of the charges". Verily, in this land of boasted liberty and government by law, it is every accused man's right to be judged innocent of crime until guilt is proved.

No worker would dispute that right. We are for it, we would not have it otherwise, not even for those capitalists who have been known for years to be guilty of the grossest crimes against thousands of workers.

Our aim in drawing this matter to the attention of our readers is to point out the difference in the attitude of the capitalist press toward workers and shirkers when they find themselves ensnared in the law. We recall the time in the case of workers of Cleveland when no such magnanimity was offered them. Apparently there is a difference as to whether the accused is a worker or one who works the worker. When the apostles of law-and-order of the city of Cleveland led the avalanche of death upon the peaceful parade of workers on last May Day, and only those were accused of riot who were victims, there was no assurance of a just and speedy trial with "presumed innocence" until found guilty.

Not by a hell of a lot. This same dirty, slimly capitalist prostitute spread barrells of ink and used thousands of reams of paper in damning the workers who fell innocent victims to the onslaughts of the insane henchmen of the Chamber of Commerce. THEY were found GUILTY in every page of this mouthpiece of capitalism a thousand times before the mockery of trials took place. Before the blood had been washed from the heads of the wounded and outraged, this moral degenerate was wriggling himself into the good will of his bosses by lying about the workers and calling for further outrages against them even to the point of inciting to riot.

Yes, a fair trial is certainly assured our dear alleged profiteers. But we would very much like to see a jury of common laborers in that jury box—but we won't.

Virginia Comrades:—

I want to open this sermon by reminding you of our obligation to support The Ohio Socialist. I am aware that you have done something in this direction—possibly all you could. When we support a good, clear-cut revolutionary Socialist paper like The Ohio Socialist we are not only helping the paper, we are helping our organization in the very best possible way. So if we have not already been doing our darndest for The Ohio Socialist let us get busy. This is one of the very best propaganda papers in America and it is owned and controlled by the Party Organization

The time has arrived when ALL propaganda papers advocating Socialism must be owned and controlled by the Party Organization or else submit to dictation from Official sources. Too many free-lance teachers, each teaching his particular brand of Socialism is a fruitful source of confusion, and is largely responsable for our present woes. The membership, in convention and by referendum MUST formulate a definitive policy. then each publicist who claims to serve the cause MUST drop into step with the march, else get out of the procession. This may be "Prussianism"; if so make the most of it. Concentration and co-ordination are the prime essentials to success in ANY line of endeavor.

The Capitalists practice this policy remorselessly. Somewhere in the financial metropolis is the solar plexus of their system. There, certain lines of action and certain policies are agreed upon. Then somehow and in some electric manner the order is flashed throughout the land and every cuckoo editor, little and big, religiusly takes this dictation, and behold a chorus arises simultaneously everywhere in exact harmony. Yes, I know. These cuckoos sing cuckoo for their daily bread. They sink their principles and their individuality when they take the job. But it is this harmony and concerted effort that makes the Plute Press the mighty instrument for subjugation and enslavement that it is. If we would make our press a mighty instrument for emancipation we must have harmony and concerted action too. If a man will sink his individuality for well-fed slavery, how much more readily should we be to make sacrifices for INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM.

This has been a quiet month in our movement. Only one Local, Dante, reports gains. I guess all hands are awaiting to see the result of the Chicago Convention. After that I look to see the movement take on new life.

Comrade Reichle of Madison Heights sends in his donation to the Convention fund and reports that Local will be organized in Lynchburg soon as the Emergency Convention flurry is over.

Comrade Vernon Taylor, Corresponding Secretary for Local Norfolk has resigned and is leaving to better his condition and satisfy his wander-lust. We are sorry to lose him. Comrade Taylor is a fine piece of clay.

Comrade Edson of Portsmouth says we Socialists MUST learn better discipline—we must march in solid phalanx, not straggle. Wonder if he is not right about it?

Comrade Beggs of Portsmouth sends in a smile and a liberal donation from his Local to the Convention fund. Thanks for both.

BELLAIRE, O. SOCIALISTS CONTINUE FIGHT FOR FREE SPEECH

The Socialists of Bellaire, O., are not a bit dismayed on account of Attorney General Price's ruling that the referendum petitions to submit the question of free speech upon the streets are illegal.

Tho the petitions have been thrown out by this ruling, unless that it can be shown that he is in error, the fight is being carried forward on other fronts. Socialists are determined that the gag law imposed upon socialists shall not be allowed to stand.

Fred Walchli of the Free Speech Committee states that if necessary, they will circulate an Initiative Petition. Also, the workers of the city are working thru the labor unions to bring pressure to bear upon the city administration with the intention of having the law repealed.

The socialists are determined to carry the fight for free speech and constitutional rights direct to the highest court, the workers. Attorney Jos. W. Sharts of Dayton is lending legal aid in the fight.

AKRON SOCIALISTS OPEN CAMPAIGN

Sunday, Sept. 7th marks the begining of an energetic campaign to be waged in the coming municipal election by the Akron Socialists.

A full city ticket has been nominated, headed by Albert C. Holloway as the party candidate for mayor. This election is the first to be held under the new city charter. This charter gives the control of the city to a Council of eight members and a mayor. The council electes a city manager, said manager being elected for life.

The Socialists will make a straight out Socialist campaign for the capture of the city by the workers on the basis of the class struggle.

The opening speaker in this campaign will be Tom Clifford of Cleveland who is dated for Sep. 7th. The following Sunday, Sep. 14th, the speaker will be Tom Lewis and on Sep. 21st Socialist mayor, Frank Hamilton of Piqua will be the speaker. All Socialists and Socialists sympathizers are requested to attend all these meetings. Other speakers will be announced from time to time and the best speakers available will be escured. From one to ten thousand copies of the Ohio Socialist will be distributed weekly after the campaign is fairly opened.

No. 3.

(By Ruby Herman)

Acting State Secretary, Socialist Party of Wash.

A comrade came into the State Office, the other day, all "het up"! Said he,—"What sort o' business is it that N. E. C.'s been up to? And what IS all this talk about the "Left Wing", any way? I'm plum disgusted with the Socialist Party; they don't do a thing but just fight and howl among themselves, and ask for money!"

"Member of the Party?" I asked. "Oh, yes: I've been a member, now, for ten years." I remarked that he "must be pretty well acquainted with the Organization", and he modestly acknowledged himself to be. Questioned further he admitted that he hadn't been to a business meeting of his Local for two months; admitted that he wasn't sure if his Dues were paid up to date; had not heard of the clause in the State Constitution which provides that EVERY member SHALL be a subscriber to the party paper. AND HE WASN'T AWARE THAT THERE WERE TWO STATE REFERENDUMS TO BE VOTED ON AT THIS PARTICULAR TIME!

One Local Secretary writes: "It is so hard to get members to come to meetings. I call a meeting, and they all come down town, alright,—AND GO TO A SHOW! And two or three of us wait around at the hall till they come out of the show, and then we try to transact a little business when it is so late we all ought to be in our beds." And the funny part of it is that some of those theater-going members have, at divers times, sent in Resolutions calling upon the workers to "Unite! and each work for the good of all: We have naught to lose, and all to gain, by STANDING SHOULDER TO SHOULDER, in this crisis, and WORKING for our emancipation." Honestly, now. I can't see any particular progress in the work of emancipation by going to a show on Local meeting night. Can you?

Another member approached me and anxiously inquired,—"How shall I vote on this "Left Wing Manifesto" "Have you read it?" I asked. "Well, no; not entirely—that is, just a little along at the first—that is, I did read some of it—I think I read most of the program,—But I don't know how to vote—Do you think it will carry?" I suggested that the comrade go home and READ THE ENTIRE THING, and then, if it seemed to conflict with Marx, to vote "No". "O, I have so little time", complained this "active" Socialist, "and it is such a long and un-interesting article!"

And these are the Socialists who, operiodically, become terribly excited and pass lurid, condemnatory resolutions regarding the actions of certain Party Officials whom they have indolently allowed to be elected; and to whom they have been perfectly content to leave the entire management of the Organization affairs. These are the Socialists who comprise a vast majority of our Organization,—in short, they are YOU. Don't YOU thing it is high time that YOU MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS!

(Series 4 will appear next week.)

Acting for the German Branch of Local Hamilton, O., comrade John Sommer, remits $5.00 for the press fund. This is another instance of a Party branch doing its bit for the printing plant.

Get Ahead by Planning Ahead

This is an official communication to all Ohio locals by the state office. It's a sermon. It's meant for every local member. The secretary will please read it at the next meeting.

As we said at the beginning—THE WAY TO GET AHEAD IS TO PLAN AHEAD. Your local will never GO FORWARD if it spends its time waiting for some one to do something for it. Your local is organized to do something for others—to work for the emancipation of the workers. Therefore QUIT WAITING and BEGIN DOING.

Here's your program. DECIDE WHAT YOU WANT TO DO, then PLAN HOW TO DO IT and then FOLLOW PLANS.

For instance, decide to have a propaganda meeting. Next get your hall or designate your street corner. Engage the speaker. Advertise. Get literature to sell. Come out IN FULL FORCE to attend the meeting. Give it your enthusiastic support. Do this and you'll but be the doing your duty, for you are organized to do work such as this.

BAKER AND DEQUER ARE READY TO SERVE YOU. Here are two as good speakers as were ever toured. Why not apply for a date from each? Municipal campaigns are coming on. You'll need speakers. Better engage them now. Write the state office at once.

OHIO DELEGATES TO NATIONAL CONVENTION.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOVIET RUSSIA.

By M. Philips Price

(First Instalment)

At the end of the eighteenth century the French people after two hundred years of embittered struggle threw off the tyranny of a feudal aristocracy. During this struggle they were surrounded by armed forces of a coalition of European kings, who had invaded France to subject her people to that slavery from which they had just freed themselves. Prussian peasants shed their blood in the Argonnes that Royalty might once more oppress the French people. British seamen died at Toulon that feudal seigneurs might rule again at Versailles. Looking back on these times today we recognize that the role of the English and German governments during the French Revolution was not a creditable one.

A little over a century has passed. Mediaevalism has given way to modern bourgeoisdom; the Divine Right of Kings to the Divine Right of Mammon. Russia, which has never been touched by the purging fire of the French Revolution, has groaned under a three-fold tyranny—a theocratic Tsarism, the relic of her proximity to Asia; an agrarian feudalism, which had escaped the European conflagration of last century; a middle class, grown up under the influence of Western industrialism, but demoralized and corrupted by its two companions. At the beginning of his century, the governing power in Russia rested on these three rotten pillars—two of them, decaying relics of a bygone age; the third an abortion of modern bourgeoisdom. It could not last long, but was bound to collapse from its own internal weakness. How did the governments of England, France and Germany treat the new Russia, which, phoenix-like, rose from the ruins of the old? History will prove that they treated the new Russia as shamefully as the governments of England and Prussia treated the French Revolution at the end of the 18th centry.

The Russian Revolution, like every great popular movement was set in motion by vast, elemental, anarchic forces, which had been pent up throughout the ages and like a lava-flow burst the overlying crust of convention, unreality and insincerity. Everyone was discontented with Tsarism. The war caused untold miseries. Famine, for which the Bolsheviks are accused of being the authors, was already raging in the autumn of 1916, and got steadily worse under Kerensky, as the war, like a great pump, sucked the life blood out of the country's industries. I know from my own observation as a war correspondent that after the summer of 1916, the Russian army was no longer fit for the offensive, owing to the impossibility in an economically undeveloped country of feeding and supporting fifteen million soldiers. By the winters of 1915-16 and 1916-17, when no one in Russia but the intellectuals had heard of the Bolsheviks, the principal towns of central Russia were filled with deserters. One of the Tsars retired diplomats even admitted in the columns of the "Novaya Zhizn," in July, 1917, that the Russian Revolution was nothing more than a mass uprising against the war. But it was something besides.

The working classes of the Russian towns used to live in conditions of want and misery probably without parallel in Europe. They were forced to work such long hours that they often dropped of fatigue. They were systematically underfed. The factories where they worked were simply spy-dens. Nor was the peasant's lot any better. Half the land of Russia belonged to the landlords, the Church and the Imperial family and that was the best half. On it the peasants had to work like serfs. The rest of the land, much of it forest and swamps, was left to them to get what they could out of it. The corn produced on the good land (a large percentage of the cereal production of Russia) was systematically exported under the bounty system to pay for Tsarist warships and armaments, while the peasants in the villages nearby were often starving. Add to this the miseries of the three years of war and it is not difficult to see why, as soon as the rumor got about that over the length and breadth of the gigantic plain that "little father Tsar" was no more, that policemen had been locked up by the workmen in Petrograd, that Cossacks had gone over to the masses, that the spell-binding discipline, born of fear, vanished. Everywhere throughout the land in those days squads of soldiers got together to talk things over. Groups of workmen hung about the factory shops and peasants crowded round the village commune building. The same word was on everyone's lips. "What next?" These thousands of informal meetings that took place from the Baltic provinces to the Pacific coast, from the Arctic circle to the oases of Turkestan, were not summoned by anyone. They were the creation of the free spirit of man, which had just burst the bonds of an archaic, now useless form of society. They were the first rude instruments, now anarchic soon to be organized, which were to build the new order of society. They were in fact the embryo Soviets.

For the new social order the first necessity was to create a new discipline. The informal gatherings of workmen, soldiers and peasants which were called Soviets (the Russian name for a Council) had now this task before them. In Petrograd on the second day of the March revolution the garrison soldiers issued an order that there was to be no more saluting officers, that no order was to be obeyed unless it was countersigned by the Soldiers' Soviet. Inasmuch as the bulk of the officers and all the generals were known to be Monarchists or at the best only supporters of a bourgeois republic the necessary measures had to be taken to protect the Workers' Revolution. "What is the meaning of this war with Germany?" began to come from a thousand throats. "Is there no means of stopping it by appealing to the German soldiers directly,' they argued. Surely a natural and obvious, if somewhat unconventional thing for war weary soldiers to do. Soldiers using Soviets to fraternize with people whom they no longer wished to fight, became now a common phenomenon. No one had heard of Bolshevism in these days.

In the factories, meetings were held and committees elected. The latter were to see to it that wages kept pace with the cost of living. They were to look into the proprietors' books and see how much war profit was being made and lop off enough to fill up that ever narrowing margin between weekly wages and weekly expenses. And was the peasant with his dessyatine of land, on which he had to starve, going to allow the rich black earth near by to fill the barns of the "baryn"? Here too the spell was broken, the "Zemsky Nachalnik" (chief of the county administration) was sitting in the local jail, whither he was used to send others. The fruits of that seigneur land were to go to the peasants' barns that year. And they went—somewhat anarchically it is true, and not without heartburnings as to how much should go to each peasant.

By the summer of 1917, the class which considered itself the rightful successors to the Tsarist heritage—the bourgeoisie, manufacturers, and war-profit parvenus—began to recover from the shock of this revolution, which had gone so far past what they considered respectable. Girondin-like, they began to organize resistance to "anarchy," to insist on discipline in the army, to demand that every citizen of the republic should carry out his patriotic duty. Alas! what duty? To shoot at and be shot at by German workmen in order that Russian warprofit parvenus should dominate at Constantinople and French bankers exploit the Alsace-Lorraine iron mines! No, the time for this had gone by. The spell had been broken. The people now must know the reason why they were to die. But the Russian bourgeoisie could not read the signs of the times. The Mene-Tekel hand was writing on the wall, but they could not see it. Desperate, they organized the Korniloff rebellion, which only aggravated the strife. This rebellion first showed the real power of the Soviets. The soldiers' committees put their men into the field telegraphs, they had their comrades on the railways. No message of the counter-revolution passed. Their messages for help and instructions flew all over Russia. The counter-revolution vanished, but the war did not. Winter was coming down, The soldiers came to the Soviet offices and said: "start negotiations with the Germans for a general peace; we shall stay in the trenches till the first snows and after that we go home with our rifles and divide up the landlords' land." No, it was not Bolsheviks who said this; Lenin at the time was in hiding and accused by the very soldiers who were saying this of being a German spy. Lenin's friends, who had control of most of the soldiers' Soviets, by September, 1917, were trying to calm these war weary soldiers and indeed, when they came into power in October, they exhorted them to remain in the trenches and not anarchically to demobilize and turn Russia into a chaos. A mighty power—the will to international solidarity, had laid hold of the psychology of the Russian masses. That power was manifesting itself in disorderly, anarchic ways, because it was crude, elemental, and sprung from the masses themselves. If the Bolsheviks had not put themselves at the head of that movement, some other unknown group would have done so and have become world famous. The Bolsheviks, finding the movement there, led and directed it into orderly channels, and seeing the Soldiers' Soviets, those informal bodies, which had sprung up spontaneously in the first days of the Revolution, used them as the channels through which their will could be expressed to the outer world.

All through the summer of 1917, Petrograd and Moscow workmen tried to better their conditions through their own elected factory or shop stewards' committees. But every step they took to control the action of the employers was met by countermeasures of sabotage and often of open resistance by "white guards," hired by the employers to defend the "sacred rights of property." Heads of the shop stewards' committees were arrested and sent off to the army, raw materials hidden and the men locked out on the plea of no work to be done. The workers replied by organizing Red Guards, seizing the factories and trying to run themselves without a staff and without technical knowledge. Chaos increased. One group of workmen often struggled with another group in the attempt to get hold of the much needed raw materials. Meanwhile, famine became worse and worse and the Workers' Soviets were in danger of turning into committees for grabings whatever they could get for their own members. Then the Bolsheviks same along, and in October, when they came into power to control the Soviets, gave the latter political as well as economic power, as an organized proletarian mass.

And so with the peasants. During the summer of 1917, the landlords and their agents among the war-profiteer parvenus organized a resistance to the peasant land committees. Peasant elders were arrested and thrown into prison, some were even shot. The peasants replied by sacking the landlords' mansions. Anarchy was raging in the provinces long before the Bolsheviks came into power in October. The latter, restraining the righteous indignation of the peasants, declared their informal committees, the first fruits in the villages of the March Revolution, to be the legal authority, possessing the right to take the landlords land and work it in the interests of the whole community. Long and difficult has been the struggle of the Bolsheviks with the disorderly forces among the Russian peasantry. The latter, divided into rich and poor, struggled among themselves for the landlords' land, split up into two contending factions—one, of small proprietors and rich speculators, the other of laborers or those peasants who hire no labor. The latter group became the "committees of the poorer peasantry," or the reconstituted rural Soviets, whose duty it became to stop the disorderly scramble for land and to create the new communal system of land tenure. Thus the seed sown in the soil of anachic revolt germinated into the young shoot, which fed in the atmosphere of order and discipline.

The Struggle With Foreign Imperialism

The regeneration of Russia could only begin when once the Soviets hah completed their development and come to the zenith of their political power. After October, 1917, it seemed that order, through the Soviets would prevail over the chaos bred in the first days of the March Revolution For the working classes, schooling themselves in their factory and village committees, were fighting famine and struggling to raise production. But the war was still nominally going on with the Prussian war lords. The country was open to any tyrant that chose to walk in. The soldiers had nerly all gone from the front by Christmas, 1917. The Bolshevik leaders of the Soviets had now the most terrific task before them. They had to secure some sort of peace in order to give the ruined and exhausted land a breathing space and the workers a chance to repair the damage of the war.

There will probably be nothing more tragic in history than the picture of Russia struggling with the German war-lords and deserted by the Allies. Not possessing any material resources to enforce the justice of his cause, Trotsky relied upon the conscience and sense of justice of the Western world. This was the time when the Allies, if they had known the day of their visitation, if they had understood what was the driving force of the true Russia, would have declared their peace program and, sustaining Trotsky, would have exposed to the world the cynical intrigues of the Prussian militarists. The Allied governments did not do this because they could not. They did not dare face their people and tell them that they had plans of conquest. The moment for uniting the moral front of the Allies with that of revolutionary Russia passed. It never came again.

Revolutionary Russia was thus left alone in the world to face the German war-lords. Two courses were open to it. It could either play the idealist and decline to accept any peace which did not embody its principles in toto; or it could pursue Real-Politik and, estimating all the forces which were making for the internal breakup of their enemies, could make an agreement with them as a temporary expedient. In the days preceding the signing of the Brest-Litovsk peace, two very fundamental human impulses were struggling together inside the Russian Revolution. The one was altruistic, ready for self-sacrifice, Brunnhilda-like upon the flaming pyre of an idea. The other was wise and calculating, prepared to save what could be saved now in order to gain the surer in the end. The struggle between these two impulses, old as the human race itself, was reflected in the controversy between those among the Russian revolutionaries, who would sign the Brest-Litovsk peace and those who would not. The left socialist-revolutionaries and the anarchists in Russia, like artists, lived only for their ideals, which they would have realized at once or else would perish. The greater part of the Bolsheviks, and the hungry masses following Lenin, lived not only for their ideals but for the means to realize them. The former, rather than sign the Brest-Litovsk peace, renounced all claim to participation in the government and resorted to acts of individual terror in the hopes of striking fear into the breasts of the tyrants. The latter recoiled, pour mieux sauter, fostered their forces till the day came when they knew they could strike.

The Prussian warlords, not because they wanted to, but because they had to, gave a breathing space to the Russian Revolution. For they were engaged in playing their last card in a terrific onslaught on France. Revolutionary Russia is accused of being responsible for this onslaught, but I submit that its tactics did more than anything else to break the power of Prussian militarism. The very fact that the politically non-conscious elements of the German people got a taste of peace on East front, broke their will to war. "If we can have peace with Russia," their minds instinctively argued, "why can we not have it also with the Allies." But month after month went by and they began to see that the German army must either conquer the world or else make a compromise peace. They knew they could not do the former, because of America; their own warloards would not let them do the latter. But the example of the peace with Russia was before them, and seeing it, their spirit of rebellion against the war rose ever stronger. The German towns began to fill with deserters, workers struck, discipline collapsed, and with it the army. And the Russian revolutionaries knew how to make use of this new psychology in the German people's mind. The peace on the East front was made use of to flood the Ukraine with Bolshevik agents, who spread revolutionary literature broadcast and who, within a few months, had turned the Kaiser's glorious "Hoer im Osten" into a little better than a hybrid between a rabble and a revolutionary committee. M. Joffe, while playing at diplomacy with the Kaiser's Ministers was distributing pamphlets right and left, calling upon the German proletariat to overthrow their tyrants. The fear and hatred in which the propertied classes of Germany hold Bolshevik Russia can be seen by the fact that at the moment of writing, Russian Bolsheviks are now pining in German prisons, are hunted like hares, and murdered by the armed hooligans of the Ebert-Scheideman-Noske government of "socialist" Germany. I ask an unprejudiced observer: Does this look as if the Bolsheviks are the agents of German Imperialism?

Youngstown Picnic Boosts Press Fund Another Notch. Still Climbing Up, UP!

Figureing big in this weeks' press fund receipts is a $100.00 remittance from Local Youngstown, O. A special picnic was pulled off there for the press fund. It was a huge success and no end of high praise is due to the comrades for their more than generous help in securing the necessary $$$$$ to get our own printing plant.

You were fooled last week if you thot a little slump in press fund receipts indicated a falling off in the enthusiastic support which heretofore has marked the steady stride of our comrades toward the goal of success—$10,000, for a press and printing plant for The Ohio Socialist.

We were under no such delusion ourselves. We know too well the spirit which is flourishing among the comrades who read The O. S. That we interpreted this spirit alright when we declared that the time had come for the Socialist Party to own its own printing plant is being vindicated with each day's mail delivery.

To interpret the spirit of the workers, to help that spirit to become a ruling element in their lives—that is to make the worker's cause triumphant. That alone is the key to success in the revolution.

We are moving steadily toward our goal. This week receipts bring the total paid into the fund far and to put it to work in the interests of the workers above the $3,000 mark. The coming week should bring it to at least $3,500. And also we must not forget that there are many comrades who have pledged a dollar weekly or monthly for various lengths of time, many until the press is paid for. Then too, there is the $1,000 pledged by comrade Brown, of Galion, O.

And it might be well to remind ourselves that the conditions of comrade Brown's offer was that the comrades should raise their $9,000 before election day in November. Surely it is time enough. In Ohio alone we have nearly that many Party members. It should be an easy task for us to get this amount together before November.

Of course there are many calls upon the slim purse of the worker. But enthusiasm for our revolutionary cause makes slim purses cover many necessities. The spirit of our comrades and readers are not to be dampened by the high cost of present day existence.

Upon every hand we can see the revolution growing toward success. Yes, even in America. The revolution speeds on its course nor can any of the obstructions of capitalism stop its onward march.

Several generous contributions to the press fund this week will surely revive the dropping spirits of any comrade who may have felt a bit downcast thru viewing the total for last week. No cause for anxiety, we assure you. The higher grows the amount subscribed, the nearer is the goal, and the greater should be the enthusiasm for our own press and printing plant.

Below are the names of the donors to the press fund during the last week. Cheer up, we mean to duplicate this weeks receipts many times.

"IF YOU CAN RETURN IN THIRTY DAYS". DEBS

DEBS' RENUNCIATION

By JOSEPH W. SHARTS.

One thing is still left to Eugene V. Debs in his prison-cell—his smile.

I think it will be with him to the end, like a halo.

On two days I have talked with Convict 9653 at the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Georgia, in the office of Warden Fred G. Zerbst.

The first day I came with Marguerite Prevey of Akron, Ohio, and Samuel M. Castleton, the Socialist attorney at Atlanta, as emissaries from the Socialist Party of Ohio, sent by the State Secretary, Alfred Wagenknecht. We came bringing him legal papers to sign, which in the ordinary procedure of courts would insure his release upon bail for weeks, perhaps for months, perhaps would end his captivity for all time.

The second day I came—it was this morning—to receive, with others, his decision; he had asked for one night in which to think.

It had been a night, he confessed, of sleepless reflection and striving of the spirit. There is no man who loves freedom more than Debs, no man who needs it more; it is to that he has dedicated all his years of manhood. And there is no man upon whose physical being the slow poison of the unsunned prison air works more terribly its intended havoc. The marks were visibly upon him, graven in his face.

I came and heard this soul in this living tomb put simply and smilingly behind him the gift of liberty.

"This is not the time for me to try to save myself," said Debs. "Coming now it might weaken the force of pressure that is being brought to bear to free all that are suffering for opinion's sake. Later, perhaps,—if you can return in thirty days."

To all great souls Gethsemane comes at least.

Debs, I think, has met his Gethsemane.

He had made his great renunciation; he has done it for the sake of the others who like him sinned against the thought-and-speech-suppression laws proclaimed by those who sit in the seats of power.

Some who hate Debs may sneer, sying thirty days will soon be gone; but they can know nothing either of the prison or the prisoner. Greater love hath no man than this. If I do not tell all it is because he asked us to be silent.

With this imperishable smile upon his wated face he gave us his quiet decision to remain. I recalled the scene in the courtroom at Cleveland when he stood before the judge who was to sentence him and said, "While there is a soul in prison I am not free!"

And tonight the words with which he bade us farewell are echoing in my hart like a battle song:

"Tell the comrades out there they can be assured I am as firm and unshaken in my position as before. Tell them if they will cast their eyes towards Atlanta, over the dome of the prison they will see my torch flaming in the sky!"

He clung tight to our hands a little while with his emaciated hands; and then his thin, bowed form in its shabby faded blue prison-shirt and shabby faded blue prison-trousers and gray canvas prison-shoes went softly back through the cold stone corridors; the steel doors clashed behind him and he was gone.

As I write this tonight, the night of that day, I can look down from my hotel window upon the lighted streets, strident and strenuous with automobiles, of this great Southern city of two hundred and fifty thousand humans, this great commercial harlot that sucks a flood of profits from the labor of the wide lands of corn and cotton round about her where peons, freed only in legal fiction, still bend at their unrequited toil.

I look and I remember how this great city, fifty-five years ago, was invested by Northern armies mraching and fighting in the name of freedom, and how they girdled it with smoke and flame and roaring guns and burned it at last, all in the name of freedom.

There rise to my ears gay strains of dance music; I see the dancers; they are young white people. Just now I was told by some who live here and have lived here many years, that in this city the Ku-Klux still ride by night, hooded and armed; that they still murder systematically, in cold blood, men and women of black skin who dare dream of freedom. I was told the bodies of murdered negroes are found at dawn, and the serville press is silent, not even chronicling the death, for such

A 20th CENTURY CRUCIFIXION

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

Do you know that 'Gene Debs is being slowly crucified at the Atlanta, Ga., prison because he refuses to waver in his faith, or turn traitor to the principles he holds dearer than life itself.

Debs has been assigned to drudgery in the Atlanta prison. He toils eight hours every day. At five o'clock in the afternoon he is locked away in a 5x10 cell, where he remains until seven o'clock the next morning.

This means a living death for Debs, 64 years old. It means death by inches in the excruciating heat of the southern summer.

"Our 'Gene" is cut off from the outside world. Packages are not delivered to him. Socialist and radical papers, books and pamphlets, sent to him, never reach him.

There can be but one purpose in all this. They are trying to cut Debs off from the real happenings of the day, and make conditions unbearable in the hope of breaking his spirit, IF THERE IS NOT A MORE SINISTER MOTIVE BEHIND IT ALL.

To confine a man of 'Gene's years in a cell, i a hot southern climate, for 14 consecutive hours out of 24 each day is nothing less than death by torture; and no one knows this better than official Washington.

If the powers that be press the flattering function of their sordid souls in the hope that 'Gene Webs' spirit will be broken, they do not know the man. He may perish in a prison cell but his spirit will remain undaunted.

Debs is permitted to write but one letter each week, upon a single sheet of paper. This must be submitted to the prison censorship, and a copy of everything he writes is kept for the prison files.

Do you know that Kate Richards O'Hare has already suffered three heat prostrations, unable to fight back the choking heat of the unventilated overall factory in which she is forced to toil nine hours a day at the Jefferson City, Mo., prison?

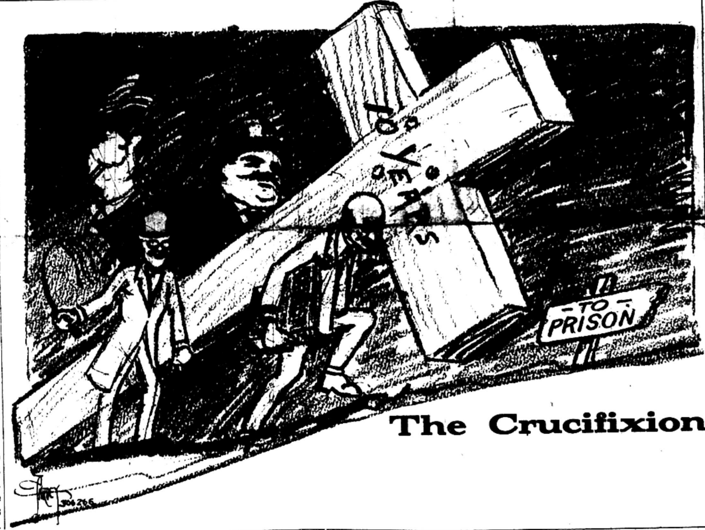
The window thru which a cool breez might sometimes enter is nailed down and the glass painted over because years ago a girl prisoner once smiled at a male prisoner out in the yard.

Mrs. O'Hare's oldest boy came to Jefferson City alone all the way from St. Louis to play on his violin for the women convicts at their chapel exercies. He was denied this privilege. Instead he stood in the street at night outside the prison and played his violin for his mother and the rest up there locked away in steel cells.

These are incidents in the lives of two political and industrial class war prisoners. The thousands of others suffer just as much, if not more. They are enduring and have endured the torture of the, "solitary" and all the other relics of savage barbarism that America still clings to, to crucify her rebels in dark age fashion.

Help make these facts know to the American people—to the workers of America. Help get the truth to the masses.

When the working class get all the facts, the wave of indignation that will sweep the nation will rise so high, that official Washington in fear and trembling will release every political and class war prisoner now confined in the dungeons of American capitalism's bastiles.



The Crucifixion

The Czar put to Shame in Brutalities to Politicals

It is to put the matter squarely up to you, who are now reading this, that we print below extracts from letters ent to relatives by Socialists and other political prisoners incarcerated at Fort Riley, Kansas.

These letters tell of the most shocking and savage cruelties perpetrated upon political prisoners by subordinates of President Wilson, commander of the United States army. Altho these brutalities occured a year ago, similar treatment is this very day being meted out to political prisoners at Leavenworth and many other prisons.

Members of the Industrial Workers of the World have died in prison—contracted tuberculosis because of undernourishment and foul atmosphere. Prisoners at Leavenworth have only lately been given the cold water treatment, that is, cold water has been played upon them so long and with such force that they became unconscious and were half drowned. In Leavenworth also, the guards aided by negroes of criminal tendencies, made a concerted "black-jack" attack upon political prisoners, beating many of them insensible and inflicting serious wounds.

The demand for the release of political prisoners must eventually make itself felt in working class organization toward that end. All workers, organized and unorganized, must eventually see the need of uniting their strength and finances, in order that a concerted campaign can be made to liberate Debs and all other prisoners now behind the bars for their conscientious opposition to the world war.

Read these letters and then join the Liberators in their systematic effort to liberate our comrades.

"Sunday, Aug. 25th.... Kaplan (after refusing work) was similarly questioned by the officer and likewise said that he could not stand 'Attention' nor do any work of a military nature. Thereupon his arms were tied, a rope fastened around his neck—the free end being thrown over a rod above and held by one of the guards. He was ordered to stand 'Attention.' Upon his refusal, his feet were kicked from under him by the Officer of the Day and prison sergeant, and finally the latter took the free end of the rope from the guard and pulled it, lifting Kaplan off his feet. When the latter's eyes began to bulge and his tongue to stick out, he was let down and asked if he would do some work. He again refused. The rope was then taken from his neck and fastened around one arm, between his elbow and shoulder. The rope was again pulled, and Kaplan lifted from the ground. The pain was intense, the arm was being forced out of joint and he emitted loud, agonizing cries, imploring them to shoot him rather than torture him thus. While in this position he was again asked whether he would do some work, and he again refused. The Lieutenant then ordered that the hose be turned on his face. The force of the stream of water tended to hinder his breathing, and he began to choke. Asked now whether he would agree to work, he finally said that he would police up around his cell, whereupon the officer ordered him to be released.

"While Kaplan was undergoing this treatment, the hose was being played upon Hennessy and Breger alternately for about 15 or 20 minutes. The sensations experienced by them during this process are almost indescribable. While Kaplan was emitting his agonizing cries, the Lieutenant would come over to the the other two and ask whether they would work, and upon their re-

Here is Mrs. Kate O'Hare in the prison at Jefferson City.

She made a speech somewhere up in the northwest. The trouble is, she made it publicly. Probably she did not say anything worse than hundreds of women have said privately. But she made the egregious blunder of saying it to an audience.

Now she is in prison at Jefferson City amongst criminals. She has several children nearly grown,—fine, young people.

The other day, one of the sons, who is a musician, came to see his mother. They allowed him a little conference with her, but they would not allow him to play in the prison.

So, as the twilight settled down, he took his stand across the road and with his cornet, played "Lead, Kindly Light, Amid the Encircling Gloom," and "The Rosary", and a few of those good, old tunes, while all the prison held its breath and listened.

Throughout the woman's ward there was not a dry eye, but there were audible sobs.

Fancy the lad with his heart breaking, playing to his mother who is NOT a criminal, but who bears the odium of a prison sentence.

Isn't it about time for a democratic and peace loving people to open jail doors and let mothers back to their children and husbands back to their wives?

Four more readers at Martins Ferry, O. Now. Comrade M. F. Finnish deserves credit for these. Thanks comrade.

Eli Niemi of Fairpoint, O., one of our boosters, sends us a list of three.

You've probably never been in prison.

You've probably never felt the burning desire for freedom which eats into the very vitals of the caged.

You've probably never heard the shouts down the prison corridors as, with the awakening of another day, the prisoners cry to each other, "Only ten more days for me"—"Only 99 more days for me"—"Only 213 more days for me."

Each day is greeted as a day nearer freedom. Each day "inside" is damned.

AND DEBS LOOKS FORWARD TO TEN YEARS INSIDE!

And other political prisoners look forward to 15 and 20 years "inside" of steel bars and stone walls.

• • • •

With the chance of freedom at hand, Debs said, "Not now. Later perhaps, if you can return in thirty days.

Shall we return in thirty days?

IT'S FOR YOU TO SAY?

• • • • •

You've probably never been in prison.

You've probably never felt the burning desire for freedom which eats into the very vitals of the caged.

You probably do not understand nor realize the sacrifice that Debs is making.

With everything in readiness to sue for his liberation; with legal talent at hand no better than which can be secured; in opposition to the advice of comrades very near and dear to him, advice from whom he readily accepts under other circumstances, Debs has renounced freedom for another thirty days—hoping.

THIS IS SACRIFICE!

This is giving one's life for others.

Yes, Debs is doing this very thing—giving his life, sacrificing his freedom in the hope that ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS WILL SOON BE FREED.

Marguerite Prevey and Attorneys Jos. W. Sharts and Samuel M. Castleton were with Debs on August 20. and 21. The advisabilty of habeas corpus proceedings considered from every angle. The success of such proceedings was discussed thoroly.

DEBS HAS ANSWERED.

[illegible] To us it can mean one thing only.

WE MUST DOUBLE OUR EFFORTS IN BEHALF OF ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS DURING THE THIRTY DAYS TO COME.

We must keep our eyes open September 20th.

That is the day upon which this campaign will take a definate course so far as Debs is concerned.

That is the day upon which it will be decided whether Debs shall sue for his freedom, gain it and battle beside us for the release of all other political prisoners, or whether Debs would rather permanently sacrifice his freedom, staying "inside" with his fellow political prisoners until the workers gain the necessary strength to release THEM ALL.

• • • •

DEBS LOVES FREEDOM.

Every prioner loves freedom.

Yet, with the chance for freedom at hand, Debs said, "Not now. Later perhaps,—if you can return in thirty days."

SHALL WE RETURN IN THIRTY DAYS?

It's for you to say!

Shall we keep the printing presses busy day and night producing a million or more of the leaffets entitled "An Open Letter to President Wilson"?

Shall we use the coming thirty days in coordinating our forces for the serious contest ahead of us?

IT'S FOR YOU TO SAY!

And those will speak loudest and to a greater purpose who make immediate use of the LIBERATION FUND contribution lists sent them.

As usual—MONEY TALKS.

The dollars you collect from friends, relatives, fellow workers—EVERYBODY, will speak an uncompromising demand for the liberation of Debs and all.

WE IMPLORE YOU—DO NOT OVERLOOK LIGHTLY THE "CALLS FOR HELP" WE SENT YOU.

It is a call, not from us, but from those behind prison bars.

And really, there is but one thing you can do RIGHT NOW, and that is to—

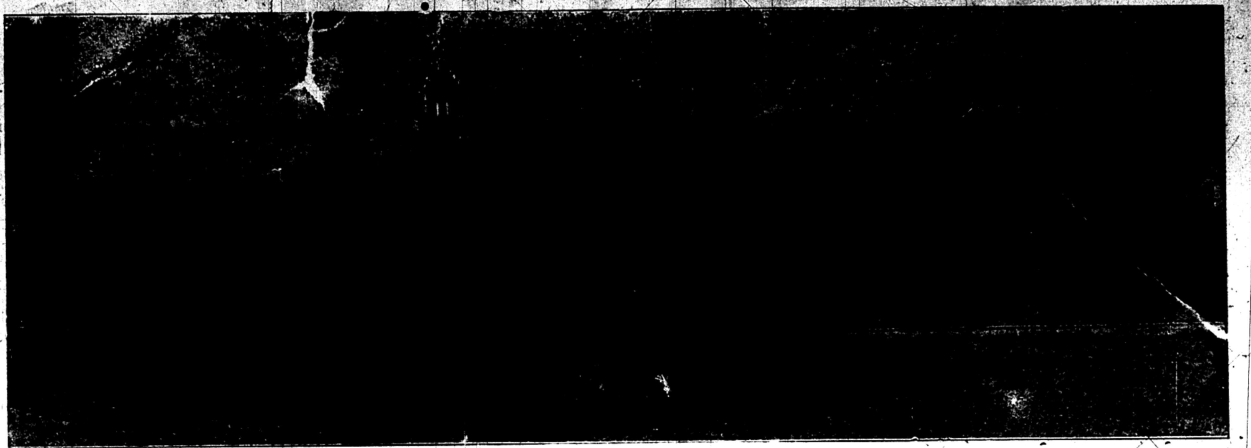
HELP!

The Liberators Program.

1. A Liberation Fund of thonsands of dollars.
3. Printing and posting of thousands of posters.
   3. Printing and posting of thousands of posters.
4. Circularize Labor Unions, suggesting such organized and well directed action as may be necessary to insist upon our demands.
5. Engage and route speakers to Socialist locals and Labor Unions to help arouse the workers to action.

Your every thought and every act must from this minute on be mobilized around the demand for freedom for all political prisoners. The need of the hour is to speed up—to hurry, to talk twice as much and act twice as fast for the liberation of all politicals. Let no day pass but that you consecrate every minute you can spare to this worthy cause.

"Look toward Atlanta over the Prison dome, You will see my Torch Flaming in the Sky"! Debs



The Prison

This is the United States prison at Atlanta, Georgia, where Eugene Victor Debs is now enrolled as Federal Convict No. 9653. There are at present 1,700 prisoners there, many of them being persons convicted under the Espionage act. This prison is situated at the southern extremity of Atlanta, on a slight earth swell, and is 1,100 feet above the sea. Debs was transferred from Moundsville prison, West Virginia, to Atlanta on June 15, 1919, to serve his 10 years.

The Man

Eugene Victor Debs was sent to prison because he spoke the truth as he saw it about the war, declaring that he had been opposed to war all his life, and would be opposed to war if he stood alone. He has told the world that he has no regrets, and that, if it is a crime under American laws to express opposition to wholesale murder, punishable by a term in prison, then he is willing to spend the remainder of his days in a prison cell.

With Our Liberal Liberators

The campaign for a large Liberation Fund is on. The mails bring word from hundreds of workers who say in effect, "I'm on the job. I'm circulating my contribution list for donations. Depend upon me for I shall do all I can."

The United Mine Workers local at Pierce, W. Va., thru the efforts of John Korosec, sent in $14.85. The contributors were D. A. Brown, John Korosec, Andy Bell, Steve Boliker, Roy and Earl Ferguson, Ed. Zickafoose, John Morlin, Jim Bartell, Donata Pavoul, Jules Biese, Dom Brene, Mike Gohotsky.

Robt. Kerr of Columbiana, Ohio, sent in a list containing $10.00 in contributions. From E. B. Wharton, Columbus, a list containing $2.00 was received and E. A. Genia of Hart, Mich., remits $3.06.

Other liberators returning lists with substantial contributions are: Horace Shank, Hamilton, $3.00. H. Markoff, Gary, Ind., $8.50; D. B. Dale, Wise, Va., $9.25; Alex Sherbin, Kempton, W. Va., $10.30; Adolph Koch. St. Louis, $10.25; Glenn Finch, Grand Rapids, $5.00; Humer Kline, Girard, $2.00; Jake Schoolenberg, Kalamazoo, 2.00; R. M. Apitzsch, Hollidays Cove, W. Va., $5.00; Alex Hlenny, Warren, 11.00; Matt Markovich, Wendel, W. Va. $16.95.

"Enclosed I am handing you on behalf of Mrs. Brown and myself ten dollars in the hope that you will find some way to admit us to the Army of Liberators, though we can not sign the pledge, because we are not technically members of the working class.

"But we are doing all we can to help the working people overthrow the economic system which makes it possible for those who produce nothing to have everything and for those who produce everything to have nothing.

"We are continually on this job, every day from morning till night, and expect to remain, until it is accomplished, or until for us the night cometh in which no man or woman can work."—Bishop Wm. M. Brown.

"Please find my check for twenty dollars enclosed as a starter for the Debs' release fund. I have no time to distribute literature but I certainly consider it an honor to contribute a few dollars towards the release of Gene Debs."—J. H. Sanders, Jamestown.

"Enclosed you will find a five dollar war savings stamp, which our employer made us buy to help the present government! Now let's see if you can change it into money to help our Gene."—R. M. A.

"I am away too far to do much but anything I can do will be done gladly for our dear, loyal comrade whose grand soul is entirely beyond the reach of the crawling, ignorant element that is trying to harm him."—Mrs. Dandridge Cook.

"Here's $5.00 from Mrs. Boring and myself for the Liberation Fund."—K. W. Boring, Wellsville.

"I enclose money order for $15.00 for the Liberation Fund, I was successful in collecting this money in a very short time and I expect to collect more but I need more contribution lists. Send me some at once."—J. Grunelfest, Lorain.

"Want to join the Liberators and will add that the article in the Ohio Socialist for August 13th entitled "An Open Letter to President Wilson", would make a good leaflet for distribution."—Chas. Yoder, Martins Ferry.

"A few more 'Open Letters' to President Wilson by Sharts and we will shake hands with Debs in the open soon."—Glenn Finch.

"I am just a poor, old shoe cobbler with a large family to support but I am more than glad to help liberate our much loved Debs with all other political prisoners. So lets push the work fast."—J. J. Plaster, Texico, N. M.

"Shall be glad to distribute all the literature sent me".—G. A. Harrison, Kalamazoo.

Debs Ill

As we go to press word reaches us from comrade Castleton of Atlanta that he has just visited Debs "in the hospital". Debs' declining state of health since his removal to the Atlanta prison is the cause of his removal from his cell to the hospital.

Tally of Vote for National Convention Delegates

We are not printing the vote as cast by locals in order to save space. As convention delegates were elected from eight groups of congressional districts, a full tabulation would take up to much of the paper. We therefore give totals only.

Districts 1, 2. 3, 6—three delegates to be elected Chas. Baker 220, Lotta Burke 393, Clifford King 226, Anton Mandzcik 92, Hugo Ruemele 128, Arthur Sapo 43, Horace Shank 40, Jos W. Sharts 97.

Districts 7, 8, 9.—one to be elected. Joseph A. Johnson 102.

Districts 4, 5, 10, 11, 12—one to be elected. John P. Baker 33 Thos. J Eiler 7, Jos. F. Wagner 35, Frank Hamilton 5.

Districts 13, 14—two to be elected. A. B. Hollenbaugh 44, Wm. O. McClory 103, Emil Oster 29, Marguerite Prevey 111.

Districts 15, 16—one to be elected. Marshal Jeannero 34, Frank L. Martin 5, Herbert Knecht 4.

Districts 17, 18—one to be elected. Chas. Bonsall 91, J. R. Larimore 45.

District 19—two to be elected. Thos. H. Davies 92, J. F. Denison 86, C. Rufus Swope 63.

Districts 20, 21, 22—five to be elected. A Bilan 149, Walter Bronstrup 137, Tom Clifford 248, Harry Kaden 75, Walter Karath 119, C. E. Ruthenberg 297, Jacob Spitz 76, A. Wagenknecht 251, L. A. Zitt 172.

NOTICE!

On account of other important matter contained in this "Free Them Edition" the press fund contributions for the past week have been laid over for one week. Some very generous donations have been made last week which we will tell you about in next issue.

"As a protest in general" states comrade C. L. Steinborok of Columbus. And he sent some protest! subscriptions amounting to $8.00. Comrade C. Fremai co-operated with him in this good and effective work. We can't imagines a more effective way to protest than to assist in educating the workers.

„More coming" writes comrade W. F. Norling of Holland, Mich. He sends two this time.

Debs vs. "The Best and Freest Government on Earth"

Why did this government transfer Eugene V. Debs to Atlanta, Georgia, Prison. Why is it, now the war is over, that Debs must still lie in prison?

In the first place we hear that Debs was transferred because he found a humane Warden in the coal-trust ridden state of West Virginia, and the Coal barons could not stand for that kind of treatment for their hated enemy. In the second place, we have the answer from United States Attorney General Mitchell Palmer (with Presidential ambitions) who says, in an interview with a correspondent of the Terre Haute Post of July 8:

> "It is true, as you say, that the war is over; but how can we let Debs go back into the world, only to continue his open opposition to the best government in the world?"

SOME REASON!

That would get a lot of "good" people. It seems that the recent antics of the executive force of the nation, in its bulldozing tactics with the Congress of the nation, might implicate some of the congressmen in saying that "this is not the freest nor the best nation on earth."

In fact, however, Debs has not compared capitalist nations at all. He does not say that this is the freest nor the most enslaved nation, he just knows that slavery exists in all nations where the wages system is in vogue. That none of them will be free until the wage system is abolished.

Mr. Palmer must know this country has the reputation of being trust ridden. He must know that the Beef Trust operates here and the Standard Oil has a reputation that has outlawed it in several states. He has certainly heard of the Steel Trust and its anti-union career, its bludgeon methods to beat the government into line, he certainly has heard of Wall Street and knows of the gambling there and the robberies there and the crimes committeed there in the name of commerce and industry.

Mr. Palmer, in removing Debs to Atlanta, Georgia, has, of course, punished his body, but the great heart of Debs still beats in unison with the onward march of the workers. The removal only emphasized the brutality of capitalism.

Debs in Atlanta is doing much to make this one of the free countries on earth. He is doing it in a different way than Mr. Palmer would do it His great soul is pushing hard against all the great walls that imprison the truth. But the truth will, forever, break down the walls and be free.

Make way, Mr. Palmer, for a man is passing!

"If you dam up the rivers of progress,
At your peril and cost let it be;
That river will seaward despite you,
It will break down your dams and be free!"

is the policy of the ruling race and class. I surmise the terrorism behind the slinking mien of these blacks, the reason why the cap comes so quickly off. And yonder in the State Capitol, I am told, sits a Governor who rose to political fame upon the lynching of Leo Frank, the Jew.

I know that exploitation is the foundation of all this imposing semblance of civilization. I know that the foundation is as unstable as the shifting sands. I know it is written in the stars therefore that all this magnificent structure will be broken like Babylon,—the beauty of the Chaldeans' pride, and a bosom of wrath will sweep it,—else there is no truth in history, no righteousness in the heavens, no substance in the soaring dreams of all those bright souls who have burned like beacons through the mists of ages.

And as I ponder these matters, I look out above the music and the clamor and glitter of the streets, across the black roofs, and on into the great darkness.

Out there the torch of Debs is flaming in the night above the prison-dome!

Debs Goes to Prison

"Many years ago," he went on, "during the great Cripple Creek strike in Colorado I was asked to go out there and help to organize the miners. I would not go into a situation like that one I found out there again for anything in the world—not for anything except for Socialism.

"The towns were flooded with armed thugs and they were all ordered to shoot any labor agitators that arrived on the scene. The business men and the mine owners had determined they would not allow a union in that district. I went out there. At the station I was met by a large group of armed thugs. They had made up their minds that I should not make a speech that night." Debs said he told the leader of the gang that "this would either be the beginning of organized labor in Colorado or the end of me."

They held a conference together while I went to a hotel. That night I made my speech and held one of the most successful meetings that it has ever been my privilege to hold.

The next morning I was standing on the curb near my hotel, talking with several of the union men, One of the men drew my attention to a big, hulking fellow not ten feet away. He was the biggest man I ever saw. He had a deadly eye. I could see that the fellow had guns in his pockets.

"'See that follow over there, Mr. Debs?' one of my friends said to me. 'Well, he is a sure shot. He was never known to miss the man he went after. Last night that man stood not ten feet away from your stand all the time you were speaking. He has never left you since then. He has been following you every step, and he will be the last man to see when you get out of this town.'

"'Is that so?' I said to my friend. I walked over to the strong man on the curb and extended my hand to him.

"'My friends have been telling me that you were at my meeting last night, and that you have been watching my movements ever since,' I told him.

"'Yes, Mr. Debs, I have. I knew that they were out to get you in this burg. I come from Vincennes, Indiana, and I know you're on the level with the workmen. I made up my mind that any,— — — who laid his dirty hands on you would be carted out of this here region a corpse.'

"The man blushed to the roots of his hair," said Debs, "when I thanked him for the personal service he had rendered to me. I have found so many times that it is almost impossible to accurately declare who are our friends and who are our enemies."

SPIRITED AWAY TO PRISON

CHAPTER THREE

In this story I want to tell about the extra legal methods through which Debs was spirited out of Cleveland, where he arrived at 6:30 o'clock Sunday morning. Nothing like it ever has been known in the American labor movement.

At 10 o'clock Saturday morning Debs, at Terre Haute, received a telephone call from District Attorney Wertz at Cleveland. Wertz was the man who prosecuted Debs last September. Debs was told to come at once to Cleveland. He might come alone, the prosecutor said.

In spite of the fact that Debs had been at his home only a few days to convalesce from a serious attack of lumbago, with which he was afflicted at Akron, Ohio, at the home of Mrs. Marguerite Prevy, one of his bondsmen. Debs told the prosecutor he would proceed to Cleveland on the 10 o'clock train Saturday night.

When, the Cleveland Saturday evening newspapers carried the news that Debs was leaving Terre Haute for that city, Cleveland Socialists hastily organized a monster mass meeting for Sunday afternoon. Dodgers printed in scarlet ink announced the meeting for 2:30 o'clock as a protest against the imprisonment of 'Gene Debs. He was announced as the speaker for the occasion. The streets in the business part As Debs strolled from the restaurant were littered with the red circulars, where he had just had breakfast with his party to Gilsay Hotel he tread upon these thousands of red printed papers. Despite the fact that Debs was hustled out of the city in the morning the meeting was held in the "Free Speech Park," dedicated to the city in memory of the late Mayor Tom. L. Johnson. That afternoon 15,000 workers marched to the city park singing the "Marseillaise".

At Cleveland there was no one to meet Debs except Mrs. Prevy, her sister, Mrs. May Deibel, and John Deibel. They had all motored from Akron, leaving that town before 5 o'clock.

Debs, Baur, the Prevy party of three and myself took an auto to a restaurant for breakfast. Mrs. Prevy went to a telephone to get Attorney Morris Wolf, one of Debs' lawyers at his trial. He told her he would come at once. Mrs. Prevey said she had not been notified by the District Attorney to surrender Debs. Mrs. Prevy, with Henry Moscowitz, a Cleveland tailor, were Debs' bondsmen. The regular legal procedure would have been for the District Attorney to have notified Debs' bondsmen to surrender Debs to the marshal's office. Neither Mrs. Prevy nor Moscowitz knew Debs would be taken to prison so soon until they read of it in the Saturday newspapers.

After breakfest, Debs with his party went to Gilsey House. He wrote a letter while Mrs. Prevy again tried to get Attorney Wolff. Shortly before 8 o'clock, Deputy Marshal Thomas E. Walsh and Deputy Gauchorte, both of Cleveland, learned, probably through the reporter who met Debs at the depot, that their man was in the city.

Mrs. Prevy, who was at that moment in Debs' room with J. Louis Engdahl and Alfred Wagenknecht, both of whom had just arrived from the national office of the Socialist party in Chicago, protested that she had not been notified as a Debs bondsman to surrender him, and that the proceeding was irrelgular. There was a half-hour's controversy, during which Deputy Walsh telephoned to Marshal Charles W. Lapp at the Federal building for instructions.

"I have a mandate from the United States Supreme Court to take you to the United States Marshal and from there to prison," said Walsh to Debs.

"All right," replied Debs, somewhat weary of the wrangle. "I am your man, and am ready to go with you.

Wolff had not appeared, and did not appear.

While I was talking with Debs in his home at Terre Haute Saturday afternoon, a telegram arrived from Saymour Stedman in Chicago, Debs' chief counsel. Stedman said he was coming to Terre Haute. Theodore Debs immediately wired to Stedman that 'Gene was leaving for Cleveland.

Debs' other Chicago lawyer was William A. Cunnea. Debs' fourth attorney was Joseph W. Sharts, of Dayton.

In the moment of the greatest single incident in the history of the American labor movement, the greatest figure in that movement was being kidnaped by deputies through extra legal proceedings, and with no one to interpose objection, save a woman, Mrs. Prevy, one of Debs' bondsmen.

Debs was placed in an auto and driven to the Federal building, a few blocks away. Half an hour later, or about 9 o'clock, he came out of a side entrance between United States Marshall Charles Lapp and Deputy Walsh. Their pictures were snapped, and Debs, carrying his heavy grip, stepped into an auto between his bodyguards.

"Debs Goes to Prison" can be had for 25c. in pamphlet form.—Order of Socialist Party of Ohio, 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOVIET RUSSIA.

By M. Philips Price

(Second Instalment)

Allied Intervention

The month that immediately followed the signing of the Brest-Litovsk peace were used by the Soviet government of Russia for realizing two objectives. The first was the building up a Red proletarian army, which would be a menace in the East to Prussian militarism. The second was the reconstruction of the economic life of the country upon socialist principles, which would be an example to the proletariat of Central Europe and break their loyalty to their own Imperialist warlords. If the Allied governments even at this period of the revolution had chosen to examine the facts, they would have seen that with clean hands they had nothing to fear of working with Bolshevik Russia. But the hands of the Allies were not clean. London and Paris has become, since the early months of 1918, a centre of all the royalist emigrants from Russia, sinister forces on the Stock Exchanges dreamed of seeing in power the same servants of Czarism to whom they had lent money in the past and who were expected to remain their contended slaves in the future. Instead of responding to the invitation of Bolshevik Russia to send instructors to drill the red army and reorganize the railways and open concessions, in payment for the Czar's war loans, the Allied governments became responsible for one of the most disgraceful acts of modern history. In May, 1918, there was formed in most of the chief town of Great Russia, under the directions of General Alexieff, a secret society of officers and members of the bourgeoisie, whose aim it was to organize counter-revolutionary guards and overthrow the Soviet Republic at the given moment. Letters discovered by the Soviet authorities at this time prove that close relations existed between General Alexieff and the French military mission. The plot of the officers' secret society was discovered, but the majority of persons implicated escaped, and in June took up their activities in the towns of East European Russia. Plans were then worked out by General Alexieff and the French Military Mission to seize the towns on the Volga and cut off the food from Central Russia and draw the country into the war again by establishing the East front on a line running from Archangel to the mounth of the Don. The Czecho-Slovak volunteer forces which had been on the southwest front before the Brest-Litovsk peace were taken under the protection of the French Military Mission. The Czecho-Slovak commanders asked for leave to go to the West European front and the Soviet Government gave this permission. The Czecho-Slovak troops were therefore sent by slow stages across Russia to Vladivostok, where they were to embark for France. About the middle of June the Soviet authorities became aware of the fact that during the previous weeks the sum of eleven million rubles had been paid by the French Consul in Moscow to the Czecho-Slovak National Council and eighty thousand pounds by the British consul. Becoming suspicious of the objects for which this large sum of money was paid, the Soviet authorities asked for explanation and meanwhile delayed the transport of the Czecho-Slovak troops. The latter, having been duly prepared by propaganda to believe that the Bolsheviks were laying a trap for them to hand them over to the Germans, lost their heads and seized the railway stations of those towns in East Russia where they happened to be at the moment. These towns were all on the line drawn up in the plans laid by General Alexieff's secret society of officers and the French Military Mission. As soon as the frightened Czecho-Slovaks had made their impulsive coup, they found themselves surrounded by these officers' guards, led by Frenchmen, and were forced to follow them in the war which the latter immediately declared against the Soviet government of Russia. Thus the way to a reconciliation was blocked by the carefully prepared plans of the counter-revolutionaries, who made the Czecho-Slovaks their tools. Thus the revolt became an accomplished fact, and Central Russia, cut off from Ukraine corn by the Germans, was now deprived of its last corn stores on the Volga. The famine in that part of Russia where the Soviet government still existed, increased as a result of the Czecho-Slovak rebellion, and it was confidently hoped by the leaders of the counter-revolution that the masses would rise in revolt against the Bolsheviks. These people, however, forgot that, when the Russian masses would rise, it would not be against the Bolshevik government but against the foreign invaders.

But that was not all. The evidence given before the revolutionary tribunal of the republic in November, 1918, proved that in August of that year the French and British diplomatic representatives to Moscow, M. Grenard and Mr. Lockhart, received in their rooms an officer of the Lettish Soviet regiment and paid him two million rubles for the purpose of securing the support of the Lettish soldiery for the overthrow of the Soviet government. Further, a letter from M. Rene Marchand, correspondent of the "Figaro" in Russia, a strong anti-Bolshevik, to President Poincare, was discovered by the Soviet authorities. In this letter, M. Marchand describes a meeting at the American Consulate, at which he and the French and British diplomatic representatives were present, and at which certain agents of the consulates discussed plans for blowing up bridges over the Volkhov river. The effect of this would have been to reduce Petrograd to complete starvation. As an honest man, M. Marchand protested to the French president against the behavior of Allied officials in Russia. Some of these plans actually did mature and food trains destined for Petrograd and Moscow were blown up at Voronezh by these agents.

Now in the face of the above it is not to be wondered at that the Soviet authority replied to the "White Terror" of the Allied agents by the Red Terror. Up till May of 1918, the Soviet government had only executed murderers or persons caught pillaging. The application of the death penalty for political offences was only reintroduced when the Czarist officers and the Russian bourgeoisie, and as we see above, the official representatives of the Allies in Russia, commenced a systematic terrorist campaign against the Soviet government.

The appalling position of Soviet Russia, bound by the German tyrant at Brest-Litovsk on the one hand, and treacherously attacked by the Allied intervention on the other, roused the Russian workers and peasants to feats of heroism which have only been equalled by the French people in their revolutionary war against the European coalition headed by Austria. "Russian people, rise against foreign tyranny! We must dare and dare again and dare always," came from the lips of hundreds who had never heard the name of Danton. With the energy of despair, the nucleus of the red army was mobilized, clad in cotton shirts and wooden shoes. Regiments of Petrograd workmen and Kronstadt sailors who knew they were fighting for their all, marched eastward and hurled themselves upon the enemy with the cries, "Long live the Russian Revolution! Workers of all countries unite!" The agents of the foreign tyrants wavered and fell back before the terrific onslaughts of these revolution-inspired men. Kazan fell, then Simbirsk, Sizran and Samara. By the autumn, "Mother Volga", that artery in which courses the life-blood of Russia, was cleared of the tyrants and their hirelings. But it was too late to bring up food for the starving towns, for the ice had begun to set in.

After the German revolution, the Allied governments had the field in Russia all to themselves. Their strategy during the winter of 1918-19 aimed at cutting off industrial Russia from all its sources of food and raw materials, in order to ruin, through blockade, the Russian Revolution. Money and ammunition was sent to royalist Generals who were mobilizing Czarist officers on the Don, North Caucasus and in Siberia. General Krasnov, former editor of the official War Office Gazette, under the Czar, made no secret of his Monarchist leanings. Having pumped the Kaiser's treasury till Kaiserdom fell, he now appealed to his other class allies, the British and French governments, from whom he received supplies of money and ammunition. General Denikin in the North Caucasus and Admiral Kolchak in Siberia more clearly covered their royalist principles by calling themselves "constitutional democrats" and by attaching to themselves a number of intellectuals who called themselves "socialists," but who are not known in Russia to anyone outside the counter-revolutionary camp. Such was the cynicism of these tactics, that the right socialist revolutionary party of Russia, hitherto bitter opponents of the Bolsheviks, decided at the beginning of 1919 to support the latter in their fight against the foreign invaders. The occupation of the Don by Krasnov had for months cut off all coal supplies from the Moscow and Petrograd industrial area. The occupation of the Urals by Kolchak had cut off iron and copper. The occupation of the North Caucasus and the Caspian litoral by the Denikin counter-revolutionaries had cut off oil from the railways of Central Russia. But the Allied governments are not troubled by any of the mistery that this causes the Russian people. If the industries close and the railways cease running and there is no heating in the houses of the Petrograd workmen, so much the better for the "cause of justice." The British and French capitalist press can all the better accuse the socialist system of Soviet Russia for being responsible for the mistery which the Allied governments alone have created.

Anarchy Let Loose

Gradually the iron ring around Central Russia began to break. Revolutionary Russia had allies in all the territories hitherto occupied by the counter-revolution. These allies were found among the working classes of the towns and the poorer peasantry. No greater service has in reality been rendered to Revolutionary Russia than by the behavior of the Allied governments and their agents in the territories they have occupied. On the Don, in Siberia and Archangel the whole of the social programme of the Bolshevik government has been reversed. The feudal landlords, who had taken refuge in England and France, as soon as they heard that the Allied troops had taken the territory where their land was situated, returned, and with the aid of foreign bayonettes reduced the poorer population to the condition of poverty they were in under the Czar's tyranny. Free sale and speculation in land was allowed again. Labor organizations were either broken up or else reduced to committees which had purely nominal power. Everywhere where the Union Jack or the Tricolor flew along with the old flag of Czarist Russia, there was a restoration of the enslavement of the Russian people. But this only aroused the Russian workers and peasants to a hatred of the Allies hitherto unknown. A deputation of peasants recently coming from the Volga provinces said: "The Allies have taught us a lesson and we shall never again oppose the Soviet Republic." Gradually in all the outlying parts of Russia, in the Baltic provinces, the Ukraine, the Don and the Cossack territories the oppressed workers began to come together to decide upon a common action against foreign tyranny. In Courland, Lithuania and White Russia the native workers and peasants formed their own Soviet governments, which took power as soon as the old German army left. The landlords and rich people fled with the Germans and in Berlin, Paris and London started a propaganda for Allied military support to reinvade these territories. The touching sympathy between the propertied classes of England and France, and their erstwhile foes, the propertied classes of Germany, was never so clearly seen as now. It is a fact that during February and March of this year the German General Staff in East Prussia was in touch with the British naval authorities in the Baltic and that Prussian junkers' volunteer corps have received the protection of the British fleet to carry on operations against the Bolsheviks.

Further south, in Ukraine, the local Bolsheviks had been organizing during the autumn of last year an Ukrainian Red Army. As long as the Germans were there the soldiers of this army hid in the forest, dug in their rifles and artillery and contended themselves with propaganda. But by Christmas, 1918, large numbers of the German troops came over to the Bolshevik side and the rest anarchically demobilized and went home. Then the Red flood was indeed let lose. The 10,000 army of Ukrainian Bolsheviks came out of their hiding and marched south with the cry, "War on the mansions, peace to the cottages." They were met everywhere with the wildest enthusiasm. Young men fled to join the red army. Old men brought their blessings. The landlords' domains became once more the property of the peasants; the sugar factories came again under the control of workers. Everywhere along the West and South Borders of Muscovite Russia there has come into being a chain of socialist republics. They sprung up everywhere like mushrooms, as soon as the artificial force of the foreign bayonets had been dispelled like an unhealthy miasma before the pure wind of heaven. There has been no invasion of these provinces by the red army, no Bolshevik Imperialism spreading west and south in imitation of Czarist traditions. The advance of the red army has been brought about by the triumphant social revolution within these territories, which took place as soon as the German tyranny had been removed. The red armies that have been formed in these border regions of Russia are all from the local population. It is not true that Chinese mercenaries are used by the Bolsheviks. Lies of this type are spread by counter-revolutionists in order to stir up race feeling and thereby hinder the creation of a united proletarian front. Moreover the local socialist governments in the Baltic provinces, Ukraine and the Don are in practice quite independent of Moscow and have only gone into federation with the Bolshevik government there, because of the common interests and social ideals which inspire both. The Soviet Government of Central Russia does not seek to impose its authority on any people in the world. It only seeks allies, which exist in all lands among the working-class, and is ready at all times to work with them.

for the Socialist party. Between campaigns he lectures, or writes for Socialist newspapers. When the American Railway Union went to pieces, it left debts of $40,000. From his lecture receipts, Debs has helped others to pay every dollar of this indebtendness, though not a dollar of it was a legal claim against him.

THE ORATOR.

As an orator, Debs stands without an equal in the United States. I say this, having heard every orator in the United States who is worth hearing. Beside him, Bryan is as the moon's beams are to sunlight. I have heard Debs speak, every ten minutes, to little crowds at stations through which his campaign trains passed; I have heard him speak in little halls, big halls, and in tremendous auditoriums in New York; but never did I hear him speak when he did not sway his audience as the wind sways the leaves of a tree — gently if he desired to; with cyclonic fury if he wished. And the whole secret of his oratory, as he himself has said is in believing so mightily in something vital that the thing says itself.

"If Debs were a priest," said Eugene Field, "the world would listen to his eloquence, and that gentle, musical voice, and sad, sweet smile of his, would soften the hardest heart."

"Debs is not so much size as quality," said Horace Traubel the literary executor of Walt Whitman. "Debs has ten hopes to your one hope. He has ten loves to your one love. You think he is a preacher of hate. He is only a preacher of man. If man is hate, then Debs is a hater. When Debs speaks a harsh word, it is wet with tears."

That is pretty nearly true, too. The sufferings of the poor cut him to the heart, and when he is considering their wrongs, he voices his grief in words that burn and cut and tear. And, when not whipped into impassioned oratory by such thoughts, he is the poet and artist, seeking superlatives with which to express his joy. His French blood makes him so. Nothing pleases Debs better than to gather the flowers of language and hand them to someone whom he loves — and he loves everybody; even those who hate him. Debs cannot express any pleasure moderately. When a public reception was given to him, upon his return to Terre Haute, after the Great Northern victory, Debs did not say "I am much obliged to meet you," as Ellis O. Jones might have said, but instead:

"As a rosebud yields to the tender influences of a May shower, just so does my heart open to receive the expressions of gratitude and esteem from you, my friends and neighbors."

Debs was married in 1885 to Miss Katherine Metzel — his "Kate", as he effectionately calls her. She believes in him, idolizes him, works with him and for him. Whatever she can do to make his burden lighter she does. They have no shildren, so they have taken a little nephew to live with them.

THAT "UNDESIRABLE" CITIZEN

Debs an "undesirable citizen"! Branded as such by Roosevelt. Yet Roosevelt, in all his life, never uttered a sentiment half so fine as this sentiment which Debs expressed to an assemblage of workingmen:

"I am not a labor leader. I do not want you to follow me or anyone else. If you are looking for a Moses to lead you out of this capitalist wilderness, you will stay right where you are. I would not lead you into this promised land if I could, because if I could lead you in, someone else would lead you out. You must use your heads as well as your hands and get yourselves out of your present condition. As it is now, the capitalists use your heads and your hands."

DEBS AND THE WAR.

When the great world-war came to America, in April, 1917, Eugene V. Debs, fearless as ever in the cause of the oppressed, kept right on with his work in the Socialist movement.

Each week his uncompromising editorials appeared in the columns of the "Social Revolution," of St. Louis, Mo., until that publication was crushed under the tyrannical rule of the postal censorship.

Whenever his health permitted, he was out on speaking tours, addressing huge audiences everywhere he went.

It happened, therefore, that on Sunday afternoon, June 16, 1918, he delivered a speech at Nimisilla Park, Canton, Ohio, incidental to the meeting in that city of the Ohio Socialist Convention. While speaking Debs could see in the distance the Canton, Ohio, workhouse where Ruthenberg, Wagenknecht and Baker were confined for one year terms because of speeches they had made in the public square in Cleveland in the early days of the war.

It was on the basis of Debs' Canton speech that a federal grand jury at Cleveland returned a secret indictment against him on Saturday, June 29, 1918. He was arrested the following day, June 30, as he was about to enter the Bohemian Gardens, in Cleveland, and address a Socialist picnic. Debs was forced to spend the night in jail, bondsmen coming forward to bail him out the following day.

The trial came on in September before Judge Westenhaver in Cleveland. The prosecution in addition to showing Debs had made the Canton speech, also put much emphasis on the fact that Debs had upheld the St. Louis proclamation before the conference of Socialist Officials in Chicago in August. A capitalist newspaper reporter was also called as a government witness, and on the basis of an interview he had with Debs regarding it, the St. Louis proclamation was presented in its entirety to the jury.

Debs told the reporter that he would not repudiate the St. Louis declaration but said, "If necessary, I will die for it."

The veteran Socialist offered no witnesses in his own defense. He made his own speech to the jury while his lawyers stood aside, reaffirming all that he had said in his Canton speech, voicing again his opposition to war, and resting his case on the constitutional right of free speech, declaring, 'American institutions are on trial here before a court of American citizens."

After four hours' "deliberation" the jury returned a verdict of guilty. Debs again spoke in his own behalf before sentence of ten years' imprisonment at the Moundsville, West Va., penitentiary was imposed. In concluding he said:

"I ask no mercy. I plead for no immunity. I realize that finally the right must prevail. I never more clearly comprehended than now the great struggle between the powers of greed on the one hand and upon the other the rising hosts of freedom."

The case was immediately carried to the United States Supreme Court to test the constitutionality of the Espionage Act. This high court upheld (March 10, 1919) the lower court, but refused to rule on the constitutional points raised.

Debs gave his opinion of the Supreme Court decision in the following language:

"The decision is perfectly consistent with the character of the supreme court as a ruling class tribunal. The supreme court has dodged the issue. It has held the Espionage Law valid without affirming its constitutionalyty. The real issue before the court was the constitutionality of the act. This issue the Supreme Court did not dare to decide.

"Great issues are not decided by courts, but by the people. I have no concern in what the coterie of begowned corporation lawyers in Washington may decide in my case. The court of final resort is the people, and that court will be heard from in due time."

But little time then remained until Debs was ordered sent to prison to begin serving his ten year sentence.

Just about two months after his imprisonment in Moundsville he was transferred to the Atlanta federal penitentiary.

fusal the guard with the hose was directed to continue with the "water cure." This guard several times admitted that he hated to do it, but—it was the order.

"Having finished with Kaplan, the Officer again approached Hennessy and Breger, asking: 'Are you ready to come to terms and do some work, or shall we proceed with the torture?' They replied that, though not anxious to be tortured, they could nevertheless do no work. They then proceeded to hang Hennesy, who was already in a semi-conscious state due to the effects of the shower. The rope was fastened around his neck, and, as soon as he was hoisted from the ground, he collapsed and was carried to the large cell.

"Then Breger, who during this time was being subjected to the shower, was taken from his cell. His arms were tied behind his back. The rope was then strung beneath the armpits and around the biceps of his arms. The free end was thrown over the bar above. Thereupon a Captain came up to him and attempted to persuade him to do some work, pointing out that he was a prisoner and must work. Breger replied that he could not work.

"The prison sergeant pulled upon the free end of the rope, lifting Breger about five feet from the ground, blows being inflicted upon him while he was being raised. For 3 or 4 minutes he hung in this position, a continual stream of water being directed into his face. The effect of the rope was to cut off his air supply and force the arms backwards out of their sockets, causing excruiating pains. This, together with the force of the stream of water, caused his exhaustion, and when he began to gasp, he was lowered to the ground. The Lieutenant asked him if he were ready to do some work, and, receiving unfavorable response, the torture was repeated, lasting for a similar length of time. When he again gasped for breath and indicated complete exhaustion, he was lowered to the ground. After repeating the question regarding to work, and receiving a negative reply, he was taken to the large cell, where he immediately collapsed, began kicking with his legs and swinging his arms wildly. He was stripped of his wet clothing by his mates, and covered with blankets.

"Hennessy in the meantime was still unconscious, and before either he or Breger revived, doctors arrived. Upon inquiry by the doctors, the guards explained that it was necessary to give the men baths because of their refusal to bathe volutarily! Larsen, one of the Consientious Objectors, hearing this, contradicted the guard, but was immediately told to shut up and mind his own business. Medicine was proscribed and when it was brought over, the Officer of the Day raised Hennesy and Breger to a sitting posture, and administered the medicine to them, remarking as he did so: 'Here, I hope you choke with it.' There was nothing more of interest that happened on this day, which will be remembered by us as 'Bloody Sunday.'"

What is Wrong with Mr. Wilson?

The above heading might well have graced the editorial in The Nation of August 16th, which we take pleasure in reproducing below. The Nation, edited by Oswald Garrison Villard is not a socialist magazine by any means. But it does represent splendidly that great class of American liberals who use their heads for other purposes than to hang a hat upon or as a reservoir for decayed ideas. The Nation has led the fight in this field in spreading the truth about Soviet Russia. It is now engaged in fighting in an able manner the reactionaries who sit in the high places in American politics.

"We trust that liberals everywhere will keep up the demand for a general amnesty for military, and especially for political prisoners. As one of our correspondents points out, it is, or ought to be, a humiliation to every American that there should be such a thing as a political prisoner in America. We should have laughed to scorn ten years ago anybody who dared to prophesy that this could come to pass in the land of the free and the home of the brave. But there the fact is. More than that, in direct violation of the Constitution, they are only just now beginning in Kansas to try men who have been held in filthy county jails for nearly two years, without having their day in court—something which we used to pride ourselves could take place only under the Czar or the Kaiser. With Senator Chamberlain, arch-militarist, demanding the release of all military prisoners not guilty of felony, there should be a similar proposal for the release of all civilian political prisoners, notably Eugene Debs, and many another who ought not for a moment to be in jail. England and Canada have now released all their conscientious objectors, but we do not follow suit. Some are in damp, below-watermark cells on Alcatraz Island; one died in Leavenworth Prison last week. What is wrong with Mr. Wilson that he appears so devoid of the magnanimity which should be inseparable from the just and the trully great man?"

The just and truly great are revealed by the spirit of magnanimity which rules their conduct toward those who have opposed them formerly. To gloat over ones' victims in the hour of victory is the act of pygmy souls. There is nothing of greatness in such conduct. The really great will scorn such actions.

The question arises: Has President Wilson such a soul; Is he really great, great in himself, as a men? Mr. Wilson has proven a disappointment to millions of the common folk ofthe world. Will he prove a disappointment in his conduct toward those who could not see affairs thru his spectacles and are now as a result, languishing in the American bastiles?

What is wrong with Mr. Wilson? is a very apt question right now. Millions look to him to swing open the prison doors to the thousands of polical and class-war prisoners, many of whon are fully his equals in every respect, if not his superiors. Why does he not open them?

What is wrong with Mr. Wilson?

Fires of Hate Burn Low

The gospel of hate toward Germany is meeting with many reactions these past few weeks. Hate of man toward man and nation toward nation is an artificial condition which can only obtain in abnormal times. Man's natural attitude toward his fellows creatures is one of toleration. There are no natural racial antipathies. Such as exist in our artificial civilization are but cultivated by-products of the scramble for pelf and power.

During the war we were taught by those who sought to be our mentors that the German nation, people of all classes were devils incarnate. That all hitherto believed high qualities of the Teuton race were shams and artifices. But of late the fires of hate have been allowed to smolder. German music, we understand is to return to the American stage. Trade in many essentials is already under way. No doubt we shall soon be wearing German dyes upon our backs. (The Italian rag rug weaver next door tells us we need the dyes badly an account of the inferiority of the American product.) The mouths that preached hate are now preaching other, and we woud hope, worthier gospels.

Perhaps the most striking instance of the passing of this phase of our relations with the German nation is contained in a number of recent dispatches from Coblenz concerning the unexpected conduct of American soldiers. During the American occupation the strictiest rules against fraternizing with the civilian population were enforced. Nevertheless, dispatches tell us that some hundreds of American soldiers have applied for passports for their German brides! And now the latest reports state that "several thousand" American soldiers are loose in Germany, having left their unites without leave, have donned civilian clothes, mixed with the population and are hopelessly lost to the army and this country. Hundreds of others, after discharge refuse to return home prefering to remain in the land of the Hun.

Rather a strange coincidence is it not, that the stories of despisible German characteristics can not be verified by those who would be most likely to have first hand knowledge? The American soldiers are finding the Germans a very cordial and human people, very much like themselves. Their relations with them are a direct refutation of all we have been taught recently of German traits.

The fires of hate now burn low and the artificality of the substance from which the flame arose is seen in all its hideousness. Its kindling was brought about thru the capitalist controlled press. It had no substance in fact. Lies, lies, lies.

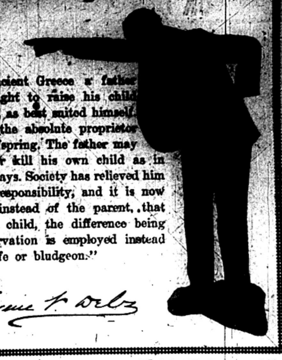
Debs says to You



"In ancient Greece a father had a right to raise his child or kill it, as best suited himself. He was the absolute proprietor of his offspring. The father may no longer kill his own child as in ancient days. Society has relieved him of this responsibility, and it is now society, instead of the parent, that kills the child, the difference being that starvation is employed instead of a knife or bludgeon."

Eugene V. Debs

THE LIFE OF EUGENE V. DEBS.

Some men cannot think of Debs without thinking of the devil. Other men cannot thing of the devil without thinking of Debs. No man was ever more lied about. For twenty years he has been a great public figure in this country, but the people do not yet understand him. They have had no chance to understand him. The persons who make public opinion in this country do not want him understood. they might be understood, too. Debs is and long has been the implacable foe of the class that makes public opinion in this country That class is the capitalist class. It controls almost all of the magazines. It controls many of the churches. It has had the power to stifle truth and spread falsehood. It has stifled truth and spread falsehood.

I happen to know Eugene V. Debs well. I have known him for ten years. If everyone knew him as I know him, he would be one of the best loved man in America. Some day, everyone will know him as I know him. The time may not come until after he is dead. A white marble finger may be pointing up from the grass, somewhere. But the time will come. To such men the time always comes. It came to John Brown. It came to Wendell Phillips. It came to William Lloyd Garrison. It will come to Debs.

Let me here set down his story. So far as it can be told from facts of record, I shall tell it from facts of record. So far as it must be told from the lips of others, I shall tell who are those others. In no case shall I stretch the truth to stretch his stature. I shall show Debs as I know Debs to be.

The blood of the French runs through the veins of Eugene Victor Debs. He was born in Terre Haute, Indiana, November 5, 1855, of Jean Daniel Debs and Margaret Marie Betterich, who came to America from France in 1849. It was a wonderful family into which he was born. It was not wonderful because of the affection that the parents gave their ten children — parents usually give their children affection. It was wonderful because of the affection that the children gave to their parents and to each other. It was a solid block of twelve that nothing but death could disintegrate. The parents became old, but the children could not forget. The children became old, but the parents could not forget. Particularly, Eugene could not forget his mother.

"She has been the dominant influence of my life," he once said. "Whatever of good there is in me, I owe to her. I care absolutely nothing for the praise or the condemnation of the world so long as my wife and my mother think I am in the right."

The mother lived until the spring of 1906. So long as she lived, the father wanted to live. But when she died, he seemed no longer to want to live. Nor did he long survive her. Early in the following autumn, at the age of 86, he took his place beside her in the tomb.

Debs's childhood did not last long. He had not finished high school when, at the age of 15, poverty knocked at his schollroom door, beckoned him from his seat and told him to come out. He came. He had to come. Nor did he ever go back, except to take a night course at a business college. He had no time to go back. The father—a small country merchant — needed his help. Debs was not one of the eldest, but he was one of two boys in a family of eight girls.

Eugene's first job was in the paint shop of a little Indiana raiload that is now a part of the Pennsylvania system. By the time he was 16 he was firing a locomotive on the road. He continued to be a locomotive fireman until he was 19.

THAT "TOW-HEADED BOY"

About this time the Debs we now know began to grow. Something happened that revealed him to himself and to others. He had left the employ of the railroad company to take a better position with a wholesale grocery house. But when, the next year, a local branch of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen was established in Terre Haute, Debs was one of the first to apply for membership. In fact, he was a charter member. He was no longer in the railroad business. The troubles of the firemen meant nothing to him. Yet, in a way, they meant everything to him. He could not forget his own experiences. He knew how hard the men worked and for what little pay. He knew the railroads could afford to pay more. He knew that, with organization, the firemen could compel the railways to pay more. So, when the grocery closed, on the night of February 27, 1875, Debs went to the hall where the firemen were to meet in an effort to organize a union.

Joshua A. Leach, grand master of the brotherhood, had come to Terre Haute to get the movement under way. Debs, in characteristic fashion, sought him out and, without waste of words, told him precisely what he wanted. Grocer boy that he was, he wanted to join the local branch of the firemen.

"My boy," said Leach, "you are a little young, but I believe you're in earnest and will make your mark in the brotherhood. Come on in."

Once in, Debs was immediately chosen secretary. Speaking of the event a few months later in St. Louis, Leach said:

"I put a tow-headed boy in the brotherhood in Terre Haute not long ago, and some day he will be at the head of it."

Debs remained in the employ of the grocery firm five years. For two terms of two years each he then served as city clerk, having been elected on the Democratic ticket. The Democrats even offered him a nomination to Congress which he declined, though they did elect him to the Indiana state legislature, in 1885. In fact, almost everything that occured might easily have served to make him forget the little local branch of the fireman's brotherhood that, in 1875, he had joined with so much enthusiasm. Yet, the fact is that during all of these ten years he never missed a meeting of the union. Not only did he miss no meeting, but he took a tremendous share in the work. Not content with trying to help his old friends, the ralway firemen, he tried to help all other railway men. He organized the Brotherhood of Railway Brakemen, and, with others, brought into existence the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, the Order of Railway Telegraphers, and the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association.

By this time Debs was fairly striking his stride. He had found his work. With a passion for the cause of labor and a genius for organizotion, he could no more be kept in a grocery, or any other merchandising business, than an eagle could be kept in a basement. Even while he was holding public office, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen elected him to almost all the offices it had. He was made the grand secretary and treasurer, and the editor and manager of the Brotherhood's official magazine.

"With all the fire of youth," he said, "I entered upon this work, which seemed fairly to glitter with possibilities. For eighteen hours at a stretch, I was glued to my desk reeling off answers to my many correspondents. Day and night were one. Sleep was time wasted, and often when, all oblivious of her presence, in the still small hours, my mother's hand turned off the light, I went to bed under protest.

"My grip was always packed, and I was darting in all directions. To tramp through a railroad yard in the rain, snow or sleet half the night or till daybreak, to be ordered out of the roundhouse for being an 'agitator' or put off a train sometimes passenger, more often freight, while attempting to deadhead over the division — these were all in the program and served to whet the appetite to conquer. One night, in midwinter, at Elmira, N. Y., a conductor on the Erie kindly dropped me into a snowbank. As I clambered to the top, I ran into the arms of a policeman who heard my story and on the spot became my friend.

"I rode on the engines over mountain and plain, slept in the cabooses and bunks, and was fed from their pails by the swarthy stokers who still nestle close to my heart, and will until it is cold and still.

"Thus did I become saturated with the spirit of the working class. I had fired an engine and been stung by the exposure and hardship of the rail.

"I was with the boys in their weary watches, at the broken engine's side, and often helped to bear their bruised and bleeding bodies back to wife and child again. How could I but feel the burden of their wrongs?"

Whatever Debs felt during those years he did a tremendous work for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. When he entered its service the brotherhood cinsisted of only 60 lodges, wiped out all of the debt and put a balance in the treasury.

But while Debs was doing all of this work, which seemed big, he had been dreaming of work which was bigger. He had been dreaming of a great railway organization, embracing all of the employees in one union — a union too strong and too great to be broken by all of the railroad companies in the country. So, in 1893, after having served the brotherhood of firemen 15 years, he resigned his various offices. His salary from the brotherhood, by the way, was $4.000 a year.

The resignation, when placed before the brotherhood, in convention at Cincinnati, was unanimously refused. Debs insisted; told why he wanted to resign: explained about his plans to form a great union of all railway employees, and at length the convention accepted his resignation. But in doing so, the convention, by unanimous vote, appropriated $2.000 to pay his expenses on a pleasure trip to Europe. Debs thanked the convention very kondly, refused to accept the money, walked out of the hall, leaving the $4,000 a year job that he had voluntarily surrendered and in a few weeks was in Chicago, working for $900 a year, trying to organize the American Railway Union.

"I do this," said he to the firemen as he left them, "because it pleases me. There is nothing I would not do, so far as human effort goes, to advance any movement designed to reach and rescue perishing humanity. I have a heart for others and that is why I am in this work. When I see suffering about me, I myself suffer, and so, when I put forth my efforts to relieve others, I am simply working for myself. I do not consider that I have made any sacrifice whatever; no man does unless he violates his conscience."

THE GREATEST LABOR STRIKE.

Debs organized the American Railway Union so succesfully that when, in the spring of 1894, the Great Northern Railway Company reduced the wages of its men, Debs stopped every train on the road except the mail trains. For eighteen days not a pound of freight was moved. It was Eugene V. Debs against James J. Hill, and Debs was the stronger. Hill finally consented to arbitration, and the arbitrators granted 97½ per cent. of the strikers' demands, which represented a monthly increase in wages of $146.000. At the close of hostilities, which had been conducted without the loss of a drop of blood, Hill said to Debs: "You have fought a good fight and I respect you."

Meanwhile, events were preparing for the greatest strike that ever took place upon the American continent. During the same spring the Pullman Palace Car Company had reduced the wages of its men. Though the Pullman employees were not members of the American Railway Union, they sought the advice of Debs. He went to the town of Pullman and investigated the facts. He found that the company was paying very low wages and charging very high rents for its houses. Still, Debs advised against a strike. He did not regard the time as propitious. He suggested that they delay action a little.

The Pullman employees were in no mood for delay. While the strike against the Great Northern was proceeding, the Pullman employees went out. That was on May 11, 1894. After Debs had trimmed Mr. Hill, the Pullman employees made application to join the American Railway Union and were admitted. From that time onward, their fight became Deb's fight. And all the world knows how he fought.

But, to this day, not much of the world knows how he was whipped, by whom he was whipped, nor why he was imprisoned for six months.

Debs was whipped by Grover Cleveland, who, at the behest of the General Managers' Association, representing the railroads, and against the protest of the Governor of Illinois, sent federal troops into the state. Federal Judges Grosscup and Woods added heavy blows to the beating.

WHY DEBS WENT TO JAIL.

Let me make these facts plain and prove that they are facts. Debs was first arrested upon an indiement charging conspiracy to murder, and, a few days later, for alleged contempt of a court that had issued an injunction against him. After the strike was ended, a federal commission was appointed to investigate the facts pertaining to the strike, and the commission's report makes this statement with regard to Debs's responsibility for violence:

"The mobs that took possession of railroad tracks, yards and crossings after July 3, and that stoned, tipped over, burned and destroyed cars and stole their contents were, by general concurrence in the testimony, composed generally of hoodlums, women, a low class of foreigners and recruits from the criminal classes. Few strikers were recognizing or arrested in these mobs, which were without leadership and seemed simply bent upon plunder and destruction... In the view that this railroad strike was wrong, that such mobs are well-known to be incidental to such strikes, and are thereby given an excuse and incentive to gather and to commit crime, the responsibility rests largely with the American Railway Union; otherwise, that association, its leaders and a very large majority of the railroad men upon strike are not shown to have had any connection therewith."

In other words, Debs's telegrams to his subordinates, all of which were seized and read, showed that, so far from counseling violence, he had steadfastly counseled against it, and that he therefore had no resposibility for violence that accompanies a strike.

Grover Cleveland's own commission testified that Debs had no connection with any of the rioting that took place during the A. R. U. strike. Yet there was violence, and force was required to resist it. The governor of Illinois said he was able to cope with the situation; still the federal troops came against his protest. Nor was that all. Attorney-General Olney, by direction of Grover Cleveland, permitted 3.600 deputy United States marshals to operate trains. He did more. He permitted the railway managers to select the men whom they desired to be marshals, to give them their orders and to pay them. The United States Government thus permitted the railroads to swear in its strike breakers as federal officials. I quote from the report of the commission that investigated the strike:

"United States deputy marshals to the number of 3.600 were selected by and appointed at the request of the General Managers' Association and its railroads. They were armed and paid by the railroads and acted in the double capacity of railway employees and United States officers. While operating the railroads they assumed and exercised unrestricted United States authority when so ordered by their employers, or whenever they regarded it as necessary. They were not under the direct control of any government official while exercising authority."

What do you think of that? What President of the United States would now dare do what Grover Cleveland did in 1894? Mr. Cleveland's act was so outrageous that his own commission, immediately following the paragraph just quoted, said:

"This is placing officers of the government under control of a combination of railroads. It is a bad precedent that might well lead to serious consequences."

Let some President follow that precedent to-day, if he dare. Such an outrage could be committed with comparative safety in the days of Cleveland. It could not be safely committed now. Many things have the people learned since 1894. Presidents, too, have learned some things.

Debs, nevertheless, was indicted upon a charge of conspiracy to murder. Eugene Field, the poet, who was then upon the editorial staff of the Chicago "Daily News," heard of the indictment, and hastened to Debs's office. Debs was not in. Field wrote the following note, placed a paper-weight upon it and left it upon Debs's desk:

"Dear Gene: I hear that you are to be arrested. When that time comes, you will need a friend. I want to be that friend.

"Eugene Field."

At the same time came this telegram from his aged parents:

"Stand by your principles, regardless of consequences.
"Your Father and Mother."

The conspiracy charge was quickly followed by an order for the arrest of Debs and the other leaders of the strike for contempt of court because of an alleged violation of an injunction, thus leaving the strike without leaders. The swift succession of events can perhaps best be described in Debs's own words:

"The strike had proceeded to the point where the combined corporations were paralyzed and helpless. At this juncture there were delivered, from wholly unexpected quarters, a swift succession of blows that blinded me for an instant and then opened wide my eyes — and in the gleam of every bayonet and the flash of every rifle the class struggle was revealed. This was my first lesson in Socialism, though wholly unaware, at that time, that it was called by that name.

"An army of thugs, detectives and murderers were equipped with badge and beer and bludgeon and turned loose. Old hulks of cars were fired. The alarm bells were tolled. The people were terrified. The most startling rumors were set afloat. The press volleyed and thundered, and over all the wires sped the news that Chicago's white troat was in the clutch of a red mob. Injunctions flew thick and fast, arrests followed, and our offices and headquarters the heart of the strike, were sacked, torn out, and nailed up by the "lawful" autorities of the federal government. And when, in company with my loyal comrades, I found myself in Cook County jail in Chicago, with the whole of the press screaming conspiracy, treason and murder, and by some fateful coincidence, I was given the cell occupied just previous to his execution by the assassin of Mayor Carter Harrison, Sr., overlooking the spot, a few feet distant, where the anarchists were hanged a few years before, I had another exceedingly practical and impressive lesson in Socialism. The next morning the jailer showed us the blood-stained rope used at the last execution, and explained, in minutest detail, just how the monstrous crime of lawful murder is committed."

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE CHARGES.

Let us now see what became of these various charges against Debs. He was placed upon trial for conspiracy to murder and a jury was impaneled. An effort was made to place George M. Pullman upon the witness stand, but he fled from town. Then efforts were made to get various of his secretaries and understudies, but, as rapidly as one was wanted to testify, the news was mysteriously conveyed to him and he disappeared. In a little while, it became known that Debs's attorneys were in possession of some documents that would tend to incriminate the railroad men who constituted the General Managers' Association. Immediately it was announced that, owing to the illness of a juror, the trial would be postponed six months. Debs's attorneys protested, offering to proceed if a new juror were selected and the testimony read to him, but the government refused to proceed.

And here is an interesting fact. To this day, the government has not proceeded with the trial of Debs on the conspiracy charge. The indictment was never quashed. Except for the fact that it has been outlawed, it would still stand against him. The records simply show that the trial of this "horrible monster" for his life was interrupted by the "sickness" of a juror — and never resumed. Anyone who wants to believe that this reason was the true reason is entitled to do so.

Early in July, 1894, and while the strike was still in progress, Federal Judge Woods issued a sweeping injunction against Debs and his associates. Debs realized that the railroads were using the United States courts to break the strike, and determined to give them not even a pretense for arresting him. He therefore went to his attorney, Judge Lyman Trumbull, to seek counsel. Trumbull had drafted the thirteenth amendment to the federal constitution, abolishing slavery, served upon the supreme bench of the state of Illinois, and had, also, for sixteen years, been a member of the United States senate and chairman of its judiciary committee.

"When that injunction was served upon me," said Debs, "I went to Judge Trumbull and another of the best constitutional lawyers in Chicago and said: 'What rights, if any, have I under this injunction? I am a law-abiding citizen. I want to do what is right. I want you to examine this injunction and then advise me what to do.'

"They examined the injunction. They said: 'Proceed just as you have been proceeding. You are not committing any violence You are not advising violence. Instead, you are doing everything in your power to restrain men from the commission of crime or violating the law.' I followed their advice and got six months for it."

Debs spent the six months in Woodstock jail. Judge Woods sentenced him. Woods issued the injunction. Woods said Debs had violated the injunction. Woods could not say that Debs had violated any law. He could only say that he had violated a law made by Woods. And, for that, Debs was deprived of his liberty for six months. Judge Trumbull, speaking of the case, said:

"The decision, carried to its logical conclusion, means that any federal judge can imprison any citizen at will. If this be true, it is judicial despotism, pure and simple, whatever you may choose to call it."

As a matter of fact, the Debs case was the first conspicuous use of the monstrous evil of "government by injunction." The people, then, did not know much about government by injunction. They only knew that a federal judge had sent a man to jail, and, therefore, naturally supposed that the man must be very bad. Since then, the people have learned something amout the misuse of the power of judicial injunction. But, all of these years, Debs has had to bear the burden of what the people did not then know. He has had to fight down the reputation that the capitalist newspapers gave him of being a criminal. And it has been a fight.

W. H. Detwyler, a high school teacher in Yonkers, relates an incident that illutrates both the extent of the prejudice against Debs among many who do not know him, and the rapidity with which it is removed when they do know him. Mr. Detwyler, a few years ago, heard Debs speak in Faneuil Hall, Boston. He did not notice, at first, an old man who stood beside him. Soon he became conscious of the fact that the old man was nudging him in the ribs, by way of approval of points made by the speaker. Debs, in one of his fine flights of impassioned, humanitarian oratory, seemed to wring the soul of the old man, down whose wrinkled face the tears began to flow.

"I must go up and speak to him," he said to Detwyler, at the conclusion of the speech. "Will you go with me?"

In a few moments they had edged their way to the speaker.

"Mr. Debs", said the old man, "I am a Congregational minister in Lynn, Mass. For years I have wronged you outrageously. I believed you were a bad man, and I have lost no opportunity to say so. But now I know better and I want you to forgive me."

HIS SOCIALIST BEGINNING

The man's voice broke as he spoke. The spell of Debs's eloquence was still over him and the tears burst forth afresh. And, as he stood there, looking up at Debs's blue eyes. Debs simply put his arm around him and told him to think no more about it; that he had followed his conscience as much in denouncing him as he had in coming to the platform to ask forgiveness.

So great a man is Debs; so big; so fine.

Debs, in Woodstock jail, began to see the light that eventually made him a Socialist.

"Up to this time," he said, "I had heard but little of Socialism, knew practically nothing about the movement, and what litle I did know was not calculated to impress me in its favor. But it was in Woodstock jail that Socialism gradually laid hold of me in its own irresistible fashion.

"Books and pamphlets from Socialists came to me by every mail and I began to dissect the anatomy of the capitalist system under which workingmen, however organized, could be shattered and battered and splintered at a single stroke."

Debs's conversion to Socialism was not complete. however, when he left prison. In the campaign of 1896 he spoke and voted for Bryan.

But two years later, he helped to organize the present Socialist party, and led the remnant of the old American Railway Union into it.

In 1900, 1904, 1908, 1912, he was the Socialist candidate for President.

For twelve years Debs has spent all of his time either writing or speaking

"Well---Probably I'll Never See You Again"

Rumor had it that Debs had been placed at congenial employment at the Atlanta penitentiary.

When the three representatives of the Army of Liberators arrived at the prison gates, Debs was still employed in the clothing department.

HE WAS STILL CONFINED TO HIS CELL 14 HOURS A DAY!

He was still made to endure all the restrictions which prison rules impose.

DEBS—63 YEARS OLD—

To a free spirit prison is a hell.

To a man who feels for his fellow man, prison is the hell of hells.

Prison life is eating into Debs.

He is gaunt and emaciated. He has lost 14 ponds in weight since his incarceration in the Atlanta penitentiary.

The prison atmosphere is killing him.

Debs will leave Atlanta a corpse—UNLESS—YOU ENLIST YOUR SERVICES AT ONCE!

The three representatives of the Army of Liberators, Jos. W. Sharts, Marguerite Prevey, and Samuel Castleton desire to report to you that HASTE IS NECESSARY.

Debs' spirit is unbroken—BUT HIS HEALTH IS SHATTERED!

The insults to him and prisoners about him, the cruelty of the prison guards, the inconsiderate manner in which he is pushed and shoved about are like dagger thrusts to a BIG MAN.

AND DEBS IS A BIG MAN—a man with a heart a thousand times larger that the hearts of those who persecute him.

Let Marguerite Prevey tell the story.

"Yes, we saw Debs, but it was not the Debs we saw at Moundsville. It was the same Debs in spirit, for the spirit of Debs will live forever—more.

"But when I saw him come down the prison corridor, stooped and unsteady of foot, I realized that unless he was liberated at once he would never need to be.

"His eyes were sunk back into his head, his hands, which I clasped in comradely greeting, were bones. His entire form had been eaten away and I saw nothing but the skeleton of his former self—AND A HEART.

"His heart beats for all of us the same as it always did. But he is dying inside physically.

"We talked about many matters. We talked of his speaking tours which he made in Ohio just before leaving for Moundsville, and of the many courageous comrades he had met. And we talked earnestly of instituting proceedings to liberate him from the Atlanta penitentiary.

"His answer was a truly Debs answer—ALL OR NONE. And yet he made a reservation. He asked us to return in 30 days, on September 20th.

"And then our time was up and we said goodbye. And while he held my hand in his—the hand which has offered the biggest heart in America upon the altar of working class emancipation, he said—

"COMRADE PREVEY, PROBABLY I'LL NEVER SEE YOU AGAIN."

Debs' life is in your hands comrades.

HIS LIFE OR DEATH DEPENDS UPON YOU.

We shall return to the Atlanta penitentiary September 20th.

We shall get his final answer as to whether habeas corpus proceedings shall be instituted for his liberation.

IN THE MEANTIME—WHAT DO YOU INTEND DOING TO HELP?

And we answer the question by earnestly asking you to JOIN THE LIBERATORS AT ONCE, AND—

HELP GATHER LIBERATION FUNDS. Money is needed. GET IT FOR US!—RIGHT NOW!

Ohio Coal Miners Come to Debs' Defense

DILLES BOTTOM COAL DIGGERS JOIN LIBERATOR ARMY IN BATTLE FOR RELEASE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

THE MINERS HAVE SPOKEN FOR DEBS.

For Debs and all political prisoners. Up from the gloom of the pits their voice has risen bull-throated, demanding justice for those who lie in American bastiles for opinion's sake. Demanding that the intolerable justice shall cease. Demanding that in their comrades and fellow-workers shall walk forth free men and women into the world of sunlight.

The torch of Debs is flaming in the sky over the dome of the Atlanta prison.

The rays from that torch reach into the gloom of the subterranean depths where the miners, with pick and shovel garner the coal that means life and industry to this nation and to all the world.

The miners know Debs. Know him as a comrade and a fellow-worker. Know him for the times he has risked assassination at the hands of the coal barons for his fidelity to the miner's cause. Know him for his unswerving loyalty to the cause of justice for labor and the miner.

Indeed the miners know Debs. And they are joining in the nation-wide demand for his release. They know that Debs has stood by the miners in every contest they have waged with their exploiters, the coal barons. They know that Debs has given every thing, risked every thing, even death for the cause of the miners

And now the miners want to pay back to Debs a part of the debt they owe. They know that they can do nothing less than join the fight for his release from unjust imprisonment. They demand his immediate release.

The miners know Debs. They know that the minute Debs is out of prison he will e-enter the fight for justice for the miners. And the coal barons know this too. That is why they want Debs kept where he is—behind prison bars, where they think he is helpless to wage war with the miners against their schemes of exploitation. The coal barons feel safer with Debs hidden away out of sight behind stone walls in sunless iron bound cells, Debs is dangerous to those who rob labor. The coal barons know this. The miners know it too. That is why they demand the release of Debs. They know that Debs out of prison will wage their fight for better conditions, higher wages, shorter hours of labor. They know that Debs is stanch and true to them. These are the thoughts they are thinking now down in the black pits illumined by their torches—and the bright rays from the torch that Debs holds aloft above the stone and iron-bound cells of Atlanta prison.

The first miner's union to respond to our call to join the fight for the release of all political prisoners is Local Union No. 2262 U. M. W. A. of District No. 6 of Dilles Bottom, O.

This miner's union thru comrade R. M. Wallace remits the sum of $187.00 for the fight for freedom for Debs and all political prisons. This is the first financial response to reach us from any labor organization. That it has come in the first days of our campaign augurs well for the carrying on of the greatest effort ever waged for the release of our comrades. There will be more responses as the campaign progresses, for we mean to carry this fight into the mines, the mills and the factories. We mean to enlist the help of all American workers in the cause of freedom, no matter to what labor organization they may belong. It is the worker's cause and to the workers we will go for all assistance in this fight.

Debs has said, "return in thirty days". On Sept. 20th, we shall go to Atlanta to interview Debs as to whether he is willing to start habeas corpus proceedings while a test is made as to the legality of his transferal to Atlanta from Moundsville. We don't know what Debs' answer will be. But in the meantime, we mean to leave no stone unturned to increase the agitation and demands for the release of every political prisoner in America.

And in that cause we ask the assistance of every worker in America. Of every worker who loves freedom, we ask. Of every worker who hates injustice, we demand that they take a stand with us, with the miners who are joining the Army of Liberators, with the thousands who are contributing to the Liberation Fund.

There is much that YOU can do right now to aid thru agitation in your Local and Union meetings. Leave no opportunity pass which may be used for the furtherance of the cause of our comrades in prison.

Join the army of Liberators.

Order a bundle of "Letters to President Wilson" for distribution.

Help get the Liberation Fund of thousands of dollars that will be needed to print leaflets and posters to arouse public attention to the injustice of keeping our comrades imprisoned.

Circulate Liberation Fund lists among the workers you know.

COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY FORMED.

(Latest News from National Convention.)

The Communist Labor Party has been formed. The delegates of the Left Wing section of the Socialist Party who were thrown out of the National Emergency Convention by the police at the instigation of National Secretary Germer and the illegal National Executive Committee, met and constituted themselves into the Communist Labor Party. Max Bedact, Alexander Bilan, Jack Carney, Edward Lingren and L. E. Katterfeld elected as National Executive Committee, and Alfred Wagenknecht as National Secretary. Headquarters will be the Ohio State Office.

Repeated attempts to unite with the Communist Convention called by the Russian Federation have so far failed. The Communist Labor Party on the last day instructed its national officers to issue a standing invitation to the party to be organized by the Communist convention to unite on basis of equality.

The Right Wing, reactionaries by vote of 61 to 33 refuse to endorse the Third International of Moscow. Its new National Executive Committee is composed of [illegible], [illegible], Brandt, Hagel, O'Neal all reactionaries and [illegible] of Indiana, whom they hope to [illegible].

The Communist Labor Party adjourned [illegible] amidst great enthusiasm. All delegates pledged themselves to begin the work of organization at once. The [illegible] Branch of Chicago made first application for affiliation. A call is hereby issued to all locals and branches to decide question of affiliation with the new revolutionary party at next meeting.

Police Under Direction of Adolph Germer Open National Convention of the Socialist Party

The Chicago police, commanded by Adolph Germer, erstwhile national recretary of the Socialist aPrty, opened the Emergency national convention by forcibly ejecting the Left Wing delegate from the floor.

Admission to the convention floor was by white card, issued by Adolph Germer. As only right wing delegates were given cards and admitted, the slogan of "white cards for the white guards" was soon on every red delegates lips.

Left Wing delegates excluded numbered about 50 and at the hearing of the reactionary contest committee, presided over by Judge Panken of New York and which was composed mostly of lawyers, it was learned that the contests which were entered against the Left Wing delegations came in good part from the outlawed national executive committee, which constitutionally ceased to function July 1.

The convention was an eye-opener to all delegates, even those delegates who were not avowedly Left Wing realized that there was no chance for a sincere expression of opinion by vote upon the floor. The convention was controlled by a machine of 52 hand picked delegates who came from New York, Michigan and Massachusetts. Altho more than half of the locals and branches of New York state have been expelled by a reactionary officialdom, that state was represented at the convention by 32 delegates. In justice this state was entitled to only about 15 delegates. Michigan was seated with six delegates. This state was expelled from the national organization recently and was reorganized with about 150 members. Representation should have been based upon the membership in the new organization. Accordingly, it would have been entitled to only one delegate. The same was true of Massachusetts. This state was also expelled and reorganized, still its representation was based upon the membership it had before being expelled and had 14 delegates upon the floor instead of its rightful four.

Facing a machine such as this, the centrists, who came to the convention hoping for a square deal, were sorely disappointed. The Left Wing delegates found out early in the first day of the convention that conferences would be necessary between all revolutionary delegates if the battle for revolutionary Socialism in the party was to be carried to its logical conclusion in the convention. These conferences were attended by delegations from Virginia, Delaware, West Wirginia, Kentucky, Minnesota, New Jersey, Michigan, Ohio, New York, Illinois Washington Missouri Rhode Island, California, Colorado, Oregon, Kansas, Florida, Nebraska, Utah and Indiana. The delegates attending the conferences decided to act as a unit in presenting their demands to the convention and agreed that only then would any of them take their seats when all Left Wing delegates were seated.

It was also decided that should the convention attempt to transact any business before the 50 contested delegates were seated, that then all Left Wing delegates upon the floor of the convention would retire and go to the caucus room for consultation. The crucial moment came when the convention was called to order upon the second day. Seymour Stedman, who was chairman, entertained a motion that the report of the referendum investigating committee be heard. This motion was about to be put when Delegate Caldwell of Rhode Island arose, protested against this unjust procedure, stated that before business could be transacted all delegates ought be seated, and announced that he and those who believe with him would withdraw from the convention.

A conference of Left Wing delegates was immediately called. At the meeting it was found that the strength represented in the caucus consisted of far more than half of the party membership still in the fold, and a motion was passed to meet at six o'clock, August 31, to call to order the regular convention of the Socialist Party, under the direction of the newly elected national executive committee and the executive secretary pro tem.

This was done and with the singing of the Internationale and three cheers for Debs, the regularly constituted convention of the Socialist Party consisting of the Russian Socialists and other revolutionary organizations, came to order.

Edgar Owens of Illinois was elected temporary chairman, Marguerite Prevey, Vice-Chairman, Lawrence Zitt of Ohio, Secretary and E. B. Austin of Kentucky, assistant secretary.

Delegates from 21 states, 82 in all, composed the roster of the convention as follows:

After the rules of order and an order of business was adopted the question of unity with the called convention of the Communist Party was taken up. A motion was passed "to hereby declare the Socialist Party to be the party of Communist Socialism in the United States, and that we extend an invitation to all revolutionary working class groups to join in the development of this party of proletarian communism, and that we elect a committee of five to confer with a similar committee from the organization committee of the Communist Party and the national left wing council of the Communist Party convention, regarding the immediate amalgamation of these bodies with our party to form the Communist Party of the United States." The five delegates elected upon this committee were L. E. Katterfeld, A. Wagenknecht, Ludwig Lore, Kate Grenhalgh, Kasper Bauer.

This committee met with the organization committee of the Communist Party Monday morning at 10. These representing the Communist Party to be, stated that they could not speak definitely for the convention and when the committtee of the Socialist Party left wing convention reported back it was tacitly decided to await developments in the organization of the convention called by the Russian Federations and others for a Communist Party. A motion was carried that "every delegate participating in the left wing convention by that act confirms his decision to retain his seat in this convention until a definite decision is reached on the final report of the conferring committee."

The convention of the Left Wing Socialist Party was held directly underneath that of the reactionary group, upon the floor of the latter of which a tempest was in progress all of Sunday and Monday. At this writing the moderate Socialists have not yet progressed any further than to continually wrangle about the contested delegations, a minority on the floor giving no rest to the official machine in its arbitrary exclusion of 50 regularly elected representatives. The battle grew so hot and uncomfortable for the moderates that by Monday afternoon they began retreating from their former position, and gave a number of contested delegations their seats. Among these was the California delegation. This delegation made answer to the invitation of the reactionaries upon the floor of their convention that they would not accept seats until all contested delegations were seated and until all packed delegations were unseated, nor would they attend a convention under police protection by its consent.

Adolph Germer, when accused of requesting police protection for the convention admitted it, and Victor Berger, when denials were made by Gerber of New York that they had not called the police state "it's no use denying. We called the police to keep the anarchists out." Victor Berger then proceeded to shake hands with all the police about him, assuring them that they were his best friends.

The police incident reached its climax when the Machinists' Union which owns the hall, sent the following letter to the convention of the moderate Socialists.

To the Delegates of the National Socialist Convention

Dear Comrades and Friends:

On behalf of the Die and Tool Makers' Lodge No. 113, International Association of Chicago, we protest against the harboring and use of police in this hall. This hall is the property, as well as the sanctuary, of a progressive and militant labor organization, based upon the class struggle. We do not permit our members to work under police protection; we can not conceive how we can let any meeting in this hall be carried on under police protection, when we as an organization condemn it and oppose it. While we are not represented in your convention as individual members or representative of an organization, we nevertheless are with you in spirit. For all these reasons we can not let the police remain as your protectors, or perhaps as your invited guests, without submitting our deepest protest. We call upon you to take steps to remove the police or make such arrangements as will satisfy us that you are not responsible for the presence of the police.

We are not asking this to put hardship on you, but for the best interest of the socialist party and the labor movement in general.

Yours for International Solidarity,

Executive Board,

Die & Tool Makers Lodge No. 113.

L. P. VANCE, CARL HARIG,
G. T. FRANCKEL, PAUL POKARA

The delegates attending the Left Wing convention have decided to remain as uncompromising against the moderate Socialists as they are against the capitalist class. The convention of the Left Wing has already proceeded, far beyond the reactionary convention in its deliberations. Greetings have been sent to the class war prisoners, the various committees have been elected and are busy at work preparing their reports. The general concensus of opinion among these delegates is that they will leave Chicago with only one revolutionary party as opposed to both capitalism and the American Sheidemanns.

A member of the Italian Socialist Federation declared before the Left Wing convention that his organization would surely affiliate with it and the Scandinavian Socialist Federation is already represented upon the floor. The strength of the Left Wing convention is steadily increasing and more and more delegates, disgusted with the moderate convention and its battles and realizing that a left wing program can not be secured by that avenue, are joining it.

Comrades in all parts of the country are called upon to rally around the left wing for the organization of a party which our European comrades will gladly acknowledge as an able representative of the working class.

TO THE DELEGATES!

We, duly elected delegates of the membership of the Socialist Party, have participated in this Convention in order to be able to appeal directly to the delegates on the floor of the Convention.

We call the attention of the delegates to the following facts:

In order solely to retain office, without adequate reason, the National Executive Committee did suspend [illegible] with a membership of [illegible], and [illegible]

DeQuer Arrested

Cleveland Socialists held another successful picnic on Labor Day at Chestnut Grove, two miles outside of the city limits. About a thousand people were present and the day was spent in picnicking, contests of various sorts and speech making.

Dr. John DeQuer of Kansas City was present and delivered the principal address which was well liked. Comrade DeQuer's ability as an instructive lecturer upon many sciences has been recognized for many years in the Socialist Movement.

After this speech was concluded he was placed under arrest by members of the Loyal American League who were present in large numbers. (They never travel about singly, being much afraid of their shadows.)

On Wednesday following comrade DeQuer was bound over to the Grand Jury under bail of $5,000 after a hearing before Justice Henry M. Calvert of Lakewood. He is charged with "criminal syndicalism" the new law of the master class to throttle free speech and a free press.

"Evidence" was submitted by the members of the L. A. L. to show that in his speech comrade DeQuer had urged "radical" methods in the solution of economic problems.

The picnic was a success in every way. A large sum in net receipts was realized and much literature sold.

Steel Workers Aid Liberation Fight

The employes of the Sheffield Machine and Tool Co, of Dayton, O., have just sent us $22 to help in the fight for the freedom of Debs and all political prisoners. Comrade Solderatis, who remits the amount sends us lists totaling $31.55. He states that the workers of the Sheffield Co. are all class-conscious workers, glad to do their bit for the freedom of their persecuted fellow-workers who have become the victims of the capitalist system.

Comrade Solderatis and other comrades are instituting a city wide programe to enlist the help of every worker in Dayton in the freeing of the political prisoners. He states that the workers in other factories will give generously when they are told of our campaign to open the prison doors.

We express our thanks to the workers of Dayton who are in this fight with us for their generous help.

Debs Goes to Prison

By DAVID KARSNER

It is said, but I have no proof of it, that the car in which Debs was [illegible] to "a Cleveland newspaper." A reporter for that paper sat with the chauffeur. In a few seconds Baur, Wagenknecht, Mrs. Deibel, Engdahl, and myself threw our baggage into an auto owned by Morris Fried, a Cleveland Socialist. It was a huge touring car capable of great speed. The Debs' car was a smaller affair. Yet the Debs' car tore through the streets, rounding corners sharply, and ignoring all traffic regulations. Up one street and down another it raced, tore and careened.

Our car kept up all the way, sometimes scratching the paint off moving trolley cars and brushing other speeding automobiles. For an hour this race continued.

Traffic policemen waved their arms after both cars in frantic yet futile attempt to stop the mad race. Along Euclid Avenue, where John D. Rockefeller has his palatial Cleveland residence, the Debs car slowed up. The marshal was showing Debs the house in which Tom Johnson had lived when he was Mayor and getting in bad with the big business interests because of his 3-cent street car fight.

We ran up to a little railroad station on the Erie near the outskirts of Cleveland, and all bought tickets for Youngstown, Ohio. The marshall was surprised and angry when Baur, Engdahl, Wagenknecht and myself bought tickets for the same place.

He than knew that we are going to stick to end. He denied he had tried to lose us, but that was one of his aims. They wanted to take Debs away alone. They did'nt want anybody to see.

On the Erie train we were placed in a private compartment. The marshal then spoke as if he was sorry that we had to take three-quarters of the trip on trolley cars. That was purely for effect. It had all been planned. They knew well enough that if they took Debs to Moundsville by a regular route, on either the Pennsylvania or the Baltimore & Ohio, we would telegraph ahead and organize speedy demonstrations at every city and town on the road. We had our time tables marked ready to carry this plan into effect. We meant to give Debs a rousing farewell along the line.

It was not to be.

The trip was uneventful. Debs told stories of his life, the A. R. U. strike, the time when he told the then Governor Knute Nelson to take a trip on the "B" line and go to hell, and the case of John R. Walsh, the Chicago banker who died in the prison at Joliet. Every now and then Debs would turn round to Marshal Lap, slap him on the knee and ask him how he felt.

At the station in Cleveland I happened to mention to Marshal Lapp that his name would go down in history for the part he was playing in this great drama. The marshal blushed. It was apparent from his manner that he did not relish that sort of fame.

Just before we reached Youngstown Debs remarked that it might take us some time to get to Moundsville.

"Well, we can make an all day job of it," smiled Lapp. "We have lots of time."

"Oh, yes," rejoined Debs, "we have 10 years to get there."

At the little station of the interurban Debs strolled about and conversed with the first one of his party and then another. He seemed to be in the best of spirits.

"I never felt better in my life. This is the beginning of a great event for us all."

We reached Youngstown at 12.30, and not a soul, save one little boy, knew that Debs was in the city.

In half an hour we were again on a trolley bound for Letonia. From there to East Liverpool, from there to Steubenville, from there to Wellsburg, from there to Wheeling, from there to Moundsville, We hopped off and on interurban cars all day long Sunday, sometimes in the sunshine sometimes through mists and threatening clouds.

No one in the party had eaten a mouthful since early morning. At Youngstown the marshals alternated their watch over Debs, so they could get a sandwich. No thought was taken of Debs. He could wait until the end of the journey. He was just a convict; to jail with him.

In East Liverpool I asked Marshal Lapp if we could stop long enough to give Debs some dinner. The veteran chieftain of the militant movement of the working class showed exhaustion. His face was drawn and his shoulders a little more bent. There was not a word of complaint from him. When we bellowed about the kidnaping, Debs would only smile and say: "It's all right; let them have their inning now; we'll have ours soon." Like Christ toting his cross to Calvary, saying: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do," 'Gene Debs was toting his cross to Mounsville, and forgave them who knew not what they were doing.

We slid across trestles, jolted and jostled along the foothills of the Alleghenies, with every now and then happy couples getting on and off the various cars on which we traveled. They were making merry on a Sunday frolic. Debs, on the same car, was going to prison.

Just before we got to Liverpool, about 4 o'clock, Debs was so weary he could hold his head up no longer. He was sitting with his brother-in-law. Presently, 'Gene's head slowly bent toward his breast, and in this posture he slept as the car rocked his head from side to side.

Life's greatest [illegible] picture than this. In all the days of our lives, we who went with Debs to prison, shall never forget the sad sleeping figure of him with head bent on his bosom, his great frame cramped in a straw trolley seat, moving along the Ohio Valley, with the river flowing at our right, with great [illegible] swells rising and falling on either side like huge brown waves.

"It is just another stop," said Marshal Lapp, when we reached Steubenville.

Debs was now awake and alert. He remarked about the dull and drab life of the workers in the small Ohio mining villages. Once, pointing to a low squatty cabin on a hillside—the habitat of a miner—'Gene remarked. "That place is a palace to what they have down in the Paint Creek region of West Virginia."

When the marshal said, "It is just one more stop," he knew he was lying. It was three more stops. We had made five so far. We got into Wheeling about 7 o'clock. It was twilight.

The marshal steered us into a cheap dairy lunchroom, seven hungry men. Debs ordered pork chops, brown potatoes, coffee and bread. It was to be his last meal in the world he knew and loved, for all of its sorrow and sordidness. I sat next to him and bolted my own liver and onions so I might rush a wire dispatch to The New York Call. Debs finished half of my meal. When I came back, he said: "Now you are liverless. What are you going to do?"

The Marshall took Debs' check and paid it. 'Gene hastily gathered up one or two checks of his friends and paid them himself.

As he ate in peace and quiet, the two marshals walked restlessly to and fro. They wanted to hurry along to the prison with their charge. They confessed they were tired and weary. How much more so must have been Debs, 64 years old, just out of a sick bed, and with a million years of service to the world and its workers crowled into his span of life. Shortly before 10 o'clock we alighted at Moundsville. The great turrets of the prison arose before us like ancient towers. As we passed we could hear voices. They were those of the prisoners. Lights shot through the steel bars like a sieve held over a candle.

Debs was still toting his heavy grip. He would let none carry it for him. And 30 seconds from the time that Eugene Victor Debs crossed the threshold of the prison, he had been shot through the automatic turntable enclosed in a double set of circular bars. He had begun to serve his terms of 10 years.

Debs was merely toly by Warden Terrell that he would be expected to obey all prison rules, which do not permit Socialist speeches or writing. Debs promised to try to obey every rule, saying, "If I transgress, it will not be intentional, and I want you to call my attention to my error so I will not repeat it."

We were riding between East Liverpool and Steubenville in mid afternoon. Now and then the creaking trolley car would come to a full stop to let on or off passengers. Debs looked weary. He gazed out of the window at the rolling hills. He was sitting in the little smoking compartment with Baur. The United States marshall and his deputy were seated in the compartment with Debs and Baur. Both Lapp and Walsh were nodding their heads. Bauer left his seat beside Debs and came back to where Engdahl, Wagenknecht and myself were sitting. I left the group and went into the seat along side of Debs. We remarked about the scenery and then discussed the outrageous methods of the officials in spiriting Debs away to prison. 'Gene pressed my hand very tenderly, saying: "It is all right, Davy, they knew they had to do it this way."

He than asked me if I had some paper.

"I want you to take a statement for me. It will be my last."

These are the words of the great humanist that I wrote on the back of an envelope at his slow and deliberate dictation:

"I enter the prison doors a flaming revolutionist—my head erect, my spirit untamed and my soul unconquerable."

"Debs Goes to Prison" can be had for 25c. in pamphlet form.—Order of Socialist aPrty of Ohio, 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O.

Debs' Photos

Are still selling. That's because they are such good ones. And large too, 12¼ by 18 inches. A picture you will be proud of for a long time to come. Order one for your home. Address Socialist Party of Ohio, 3267 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O.

That steady booster, comrade D. B. Dale of Wise, Va. is at it again. This time it is four half yearlies he sends us.

"Pushing toward the goal" states comrade F. A. Bucey of Rayland, O. He sends in three yearlies, and we know he will not stop at that.

Five subs from Muskegon, Mich. come from comrade W. E. Reynolds.

Don't destroy this paper. Give it to a worker.

[illegible] THE [illegible] PARTY OF [illegible]

THE HOUR FOR ACTION.

Mr. Worker, what use are you going to make of your vote in the coming election? Are you going to remain divided as you have in the past, dissipating your power and nullifying your force?

Are you to again allow yourselves to be fooled by the sham fight between the capitalistic candidates who are seeking your votes?

Individuals or Principle.

Are you going to vote for individuals or a principal and a policy?

What difference can it make to you whether the mayor of this city be the present encumbent or some other individual of his kind?

YOU KNOW that it has made no difference to you whether the majority of the council have been democrats or republicans; whether they have been merchants, manufacturers or lawyers. At all times this city has been run in the interests of that element which constitutes the master class, simply because those who have been elected by your votes, have either been of the master class, or have been dominated by it.

Time to Turn the Tables.

The candidates who are seeking your votes this election for mayor or for the council, as democrats, republicans or independents, stand upon no platform, nor represent any fundimental policy of interest or benefit to you as working men. Is it not time to turn the tables and place men of your class and your class interests in power?

Why not ride instead of being ridden? Why not dictate instead of beg?

Why stand outside cursing those who are in, for their weakness, incompetency or trickery? Why blame them for not representing you, when you refrain from representing yourselves?

Government What You Make It.

Government, municipal, state or national, is whatever you allow it to be made; it can be made whatever you wish to make it.

THE HISTORY OF GOVERNMENT IS A HISTORY OF CLASS GOVERNMENT.

Place a gang of horse thiefs in control of the legislature of any state and they will legalize horse stealing; place a gang of bank wreckers in there and they will make it legal to wreck banks; place a gang of politicians there and they will legalize almost every conceivable form of robbery, so long as it is done under the name of business.

Free Speech Strangled.

Our jails and federal prisons are filled with men and women who have dared to exercise their constitutional rights to free speech and free assemblage. Thousands of men and women, loyal and true to the working class, are today languishing behind prison bars in this country because they have had the courage to criticize the capitalist class policy of the present administration. FREE SPEECH, FREE PRESS AND FREE ASSEHBLAGE HAVE BEEN STRANGLED, while the world was being "made safe for democracy".

Exploiters in Control.

Never in the history of America, have the class lines been drawn so close as they are drawn now. Never in the history of this country was it so apparant that an all-powerful, exploiting class, is in control of industry, of government and of the press, and using this control for the plunder of the producers.

Much noise is being made over the high cost of living, but all the remedy the workers will get will be more noise.

The capitalist system of production cannot be regulated or controled in any manner whatever, to change the conditions of living for the better for the exploited masses. THE SYSTEM MUST BE ABOLISHED.

So long as there is private ownership of any one necessity of life, or the means of producing it, just so long will the standard of living of the toilers be regulated by those who own that nesecoity.

Salt and Servitude.

If the people collectively owned every industry, excepting one, and allow that one to be the salt industry, for instance, the owners of that industry would be the complete masters of the people. The people could not exist without salt and to obtain salt, they would of necessity be compelled to part with as much of other commodities as the owners of salt might demand.

Products of Labor.

Under capitalism the products of labor are owned, not by the producers, but by the class that owns the productive machinery. Labor receives wages for producing the necessities and luxeries of life.

These wages, whether they be low, or relatively high, only enable the toilers, as a class, to purchase just enough to exist upon.

Wages and Cost of Living.

Wages are now relatively high but the cost of living is much more than relatively higher. With a lowering of the standard of wages, there would be a slight reduction of the cost of living; with a reduction of the cost of living there would be an inevitable drop in the standard of wages — and there you are. You would, under either condition, be able only to buy enough to exist upon. Prices are soaring sky-high all over the world and as they continue to soar, the less will the workers be able to obtain.

World Seething With Unrest.

What are you going to do about it, Mr. Worker? Are you going to quietly and meekly submit? Are you going on forever, contented to take less and less and still less? NO. THE WORLD IS SEETHING WITH UNREST.

This country is not an exception, this state is not an exception, this city is not an exception. YOU are dissatisfied, YOU are discontented.

Are you going to give expression to that dissatisfaction and discontent in a peaceable manner at the polls at the coming election, or will you remain apathetic and indifferent until you are no longer able to free yourselves by peacable methods?

Importance of This Election.

But you will perhaps say, what has this election to do with this great problem. IT HAS VERY MUCH TO DO WITH IT, MR. WORKER.

Why is the victory on one battlefield hailed with joy by the victors?

Because it is the many small victories which make up the greater and final victory possible. Why do the capitalist politicians work so hard and spend so much money and resort to all sorts of trickery to carry a municipal election? Because the control of the many municipalities, mean the control of the whole machinery of government.

Who Sends Workers to Jail?

Who, or what, throttles free speech, who, or what, denies free press, who, or what, denies us free assemblage? Government, or those in control of government. Who sends working men and working women to jails and federal prisons for voicing thier protest against the enslavement of the working class? Government, or those who control government.

Did you ever hear of a city, state, or national government, protecting workers while on strike? NOT UNLESS IT WAS A SOCIALIST GOVERNMENT.

And this brings us to the main point of this appeal. We are calling upon you as workers to put the power of your votes behind the Socialist candidates in the coming election. We do not ask you to vote for these candidates because of their individuality, but because of the principals and policies they stand for.

Abdication of Profiteering Class.

These candidates stand upon a platform that is national and international. This platform demands the abolition of the profit system and the abdication of the profiteering class. This platform demands the control of government, in all its branches, by the useful workers. It demands that wealth shall be produced for use instead of profit. It demands that every atom of power behind the machinery of government shall be used for the emancipation of the toillers from wage servitude.

Power of Control.

Every Socialist candidate stands squarly upon this platform and upon these demands, and the party organization has the machinery and the power to compel them to remain true. These candidates are the only ones who represent the hopes and the aspirations of the workers. A vote for them is a vote for yourself and a vote for your family.

In voting for them, you are not placing your trust in individuals, but you are placing your faith and trust in fundamental principles you desire to see inaugurated. Remember that the names of these candidates appear upon the ballots without any party designation. Remember that this election is under the new charter which gives the control of this city to the mayor and eight councilmen. Remember that the council elects a City Manager for life. Remember that this city manager will be the SUPREME DICTATOR in the affairs of this city.

Do you want a dictator chosen by your exploitors, or a dictator of your own? THE HOUR HAS COME FOR ACTION. To delay peacable action is to invite violence and disaster.

WORKINGMEN. UNITE!

Any of our ten cent pamphlets are good company, buy one for your sake.

From Lodi, Cal. come two subs sent in by comrade Thos. C. Hawley. Another new town on the O. S. map.

Promising to try for a list of readers for us comrade Dr. M. F. Hamilton of Emporium, Pa. subscribes.

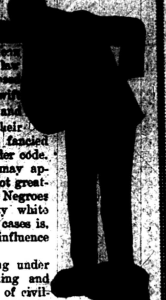
That was a dandy contribution which Local Midvale, O. sent in for the press fund ($25). Surely if Local Midvale can do so well many, many other Locals in Ohio can do as well or even better.

Will not forget to do what I can— says comrade [illegible] of Cincinnati, O. he remits a dollar. That's the spirit that will make the press fund grow and grow.

Do your duty daily, talk, think, act for your comrades in prison.

We must have that press fund. Help us get it.

Debs says to You



"It is the boast of [illegible] people that they believe in [illegible] and order, that they are [illegible] to violence, and they are [illegible] to condemn as [illegible] criminals all who fall under their displeasure for the real or fancied violation of their law and order code.

"And yet, strange as it may appear, these same people are not greatly disturbed when innocent Negroes are lynched by blood-thirsty white mobs. Their serenity in such cases is, no doubt, due to the moral influence of 'white supremacy.'

"The fact is that lynching under any circumstances is shocking and disgraceful, an impeachment of civilized government and the utter repudiation of law and order; and when the victims are innocent, lynching becomes an atrocious and revolting crime, and as long as the American people suffer this crime to be perpetrated, they have no moral right to raise their voice in protest against crimes committed against the Belgians, Armenians and other victims by other nations."

Eugene V. Debs

Police Under Direction of A. Germer Open Nat'l. Convention

pelled the states of Michigan, Massachusetts and Ohio.

For the same reason, the National Executive Committee did refuse to recognize the will of the Party membership, as expressed in the referendum votes upon the election of National Executive Committee, International Delegates, International Secretary, and the referendum upon the question of affiliation with the Third International the referendum upon the calling of the National Emergency Convention, and the referendum to reverse their actions above alluded to—this last referendum being seconded by more than fifteen thousand members in good standing

The National Executive Committee did repudiate the overwhelming vote of the aPrty membership to the effect that they vacate their offices in favor of the new National Executive Committee duly elected to take office July 1, 1919, and that they refused to turn over the property of the Party to the new N. E. C.

The organizing committee of this body, without any reason, did yesterday morning refuse to grant admission to delegates from California, Illionis, Kansas, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Washington, Florida, Utah, West Virginia these delegates being regularly elected edelegates for whom no contesting delegates have appeared at this convention and most of them representing states which have been neither expelled nor suspended.

Other delegates, representing altogether the vast majority of the Party membership, are contested by delegations illegally elected, representing Locals and Branches whose membership exists largely on paper.

We call the attention of the delegates to the fact that when duly elected delegates to this body attempted to enter the Convention Hall yesterday morning, they were forcibly ejected by the police, acting under the orders of Adolph Germer, former National Secretary of the aPrty.

The action of the Committee on Contested Seats, in refusing to consider the case of the delegates from Ohio, and the contesting delegates from New York, on the plea that they had been expelled from the Party, shows clearly that the ex-officials in charge of this convention intend to permit only their own hand-picked delegates to vote upon such questions as may be submitted to them. Considering that through the exclusion of delegates representing the great majority of the Party membership it is impossible to bring to bear the will of the Party emmbership in this Convention we hereby declare:

That if so far we have taken part in this Convention it is not because we recognized either the Old National Executive Committee, or Adolph Germer as National Secretary, or this Convention as legal. We have done it merely in order to give one last opportunity to the illegal officialdom in charge to submit to the expressed will of the Party membership; which is to transform the Socialist Party into a Party of Revolutionary Socialism, and to affiliate it with the Communist International of Moscow.

What has transpired up to now makes it clear that the Party officials illegally in control of the National Office and the Convention machinery, are determined at all costs, and by all means, no matter how foul, to prevent the revolutionary will of the rank and file from finding expression in this Convention.

The action of this officialdom machine in proceeding to conduct further business before the question of seating contested delegates has been decided, in violation of its own previously adopted rule, makes impossible our further participation in this gathering. It is our duty to the Party membership which has sent us here to withdraw to another hall, where we will be permitted to carry out the will of the memebrship and our duty as revolutionary Socialists, free from the intereference of the police and the dictation of a corrupt and usurping officialdom.

We appeal to all those who have at heart the true interest of the Socialist movement in this country, and the Social Revolution throughout the world, to join with us in holding a real Emergency Convention, which will rise to the international emergency confronting the world today, and place the Socialist movement of this country in the front rank of the revolutionary march of the fighting proletarist of the world.

CONVENTION CALL

The Emergency Convention of the Socialist aPrty will be called to order at six o'clock this afternoon August 31st, in the hall on the first floor of this building.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 10, 1919.

The Three Fears.

There are three great fears that dog the worker thru life. From the moment he enters the labor market in his youth to his final taking off, decrepit, disabled and broken, they slink behind him close at his heels.

They are:

the fear of the loss of the job
the fear of the loss of health the fear of a dependent old age.

The fear of the loss of the job is more real than the others in youth but as the years pass the worker becomes more cognizant of the presence of the last two. From the early beginning of middle age on to the end the trio haunt his every day of meagre existance. They haunt his sleepless nights and his sodden slumbers. They are present at his meagre table and at the fireside their fearsome presence is felt in the shadows made by the fitful flame.

They cast their baneful shadow upon his simple pleasures and snatch the joy of life and love from his thirsting lips. Their presence stills the song that surges upward to his lips and casts across his weary path a shadow of ill omen.

Such is the life of the worker from the time he takes his first job in a competitive labor market until he becomes "dead timber" which no capitalist will employ.

Why, in a world running over with abundance, with the seas teeming with food, with the rich earth saturated with the power of production a thousand fold; with marvelous productive machinery needful to supply every want and need; why with such a multitude of powers of wealth creating ready to obey mans' will should the greater portion of the peoples of the earth dwell under the black shadow of want, of misery and unfulfilled desire?

Can a stranger contradiction exist than this? That millions should be hungry with warehouses bursting, with fields ripening for the harvest, with the Cornucopia of plenty overflowing with abundance, surely there is no need that the fear of want should haunt mens' days.

Yet it is true. The worker, no matter whether in "free" America, or in what "civilized" country he may be, lives his whole existence amidst the gloom cast by these three fears.

And the remedy? The spokesmen for the capitalist will say the remedy is to be found in greater production. But the problem is not one of production. We know the human race is self supporting. We know that the working portion of it not only support themselves, but carry upon their backs, surfeited with unearned wealth vast hordes of human parasites.

The problem is not one of production but of distribution. Mans' powers of production are practically unlimited. The problem is essentially a problem of distribution. The worker produces but he does not receive. Only a pittance is his portion. He works 8, 10, 12 hours and for his outlay of labor, time and human effort, he receives the equivalent of two hours labor as his recompense. The lords of mine and rail and land and other industries get the rest, the larger share.

Socialism offers the remedy and it can be found thru no other method. Socialism says: the industries and all natural sources and land must be placed under the control of society, the society of useful workers. This is the message of socialism to the workers. Until they learn it their path thru life and that of their children after them will be strewn with the corpses of dead hopes, will be a tragedy from the cradle to the grave. The outworn capitalistic system must be supplanted with one wherein all share accordingly as they sow. The world for the workers must be henceforward, the battle cry of labor.

The three fears must be relegated to the oblivion of forgotten things nevermore to haunt mens' minds and fill them with quaking thots of portending calamity.

The Conquest of Mexico

The call for aggression upon Mexico grows in volume daily. The predatory press, representative of certain American interests in oil, mines and lands in Mexico are frothing with impatience at the delayed American conquest of Mexico.

A few Americans have been murdered in Mexico. Undoubtedly. There is nothing new in such a situation. Foreigners have met death at the hands of bandits in all lands. There is nothing in such an unhappy situation to demand the release of the demons of war upon a helpless and unoffending people.

Do not be deceived. There is a more sinister motive in all these ravings for another war—a war not between equals, but a war upon a well nigh defenseless, peace loving people. A people who have but lately freed themselves from the most ignoble and outrageous exploitation of any people upon the face of the earth. A people whose country has been swept by revolution and counter-revolution for eight long years.

Do not be deceived. Do not allow yourself to be whipped into a frenzy of hate toward a people with whom YOU have no quarrel. The capitalist press calls for "order" in Mexico. It means the order of capitalism, the order of robbery, of exploitation, of profiteering; the order of an enslaved working class bound body and soul to their economic masters. This is the "order" that is demanded, and for which the workers of America are called upon to be ready to erect in Mexico when American holders of the titles to Mexico's land, oil wells and mines give the word.

Instead of demanding order in Mexico, it would be more in keeping with the dictates of humanity if a cry were sent abroad to clean our own house. For months this nation in one part and another has been in a state of civil war that has endangered the lives of more of our people that has the inability of the government of Mexico to restrain the banditry hidden away in the recesses of her mountain fastnesses. We have not the excuse of a nation distracted with revolution for these bloody combats between the races of blacks and whites. Yet, the government seems unable to prevent them. Lately the Capitol City of the nation was a scene of riot, murder and many lives were lost on both sides. The tragedy then moved westward to Chicago where it was repeated upon a greater scale. Now the latest outbreak occurs in Knoxville. Dozens of men and women have met death in this civil war, for civil war it is and nothing less.

Altho no outside nation has proposed coming into America to "establish a staple government"; yet such a course unquestionably would be more just than our proposed invasion of Mexico.

It is well to understand why so little is said regarding this civil strife that promises to grow instead of abating. No capitalistic interests are threatened by white workers murdering blacks or vice versa. A few slaves more or less are of no particular matter to our exploiters. In fact it is stated upon good authority that coporations have investigated the antagonisms of the races in the recent riots in order to divide them into opposing factions. A divided workin-class is pure velvet for the capitalists. A united workin-class means his extinction. Hence civil war at home while we "restore order" in Mexico. The Mexican people have by the nationalization laws cut off the source of huge profits to American capitalist and banking interests, therefore—war upon Mexico.

The interests of the American working-class demand that Mexico be left alone to work out her salvation as the needs of her people dictate. They demand that we attempt to reconcile the workers of America to establish a condition whereby they of all colors and races and creeds may work out their common interests in toleration and fraternity.

PARTY NEWS AND VIEWS

ORDER MUNICIPAL PLATFORMS NOW.

Has your Local ordered a supply of the Municipal Platforms from the State Office yet. Local Belmont [illegible] has just placed an order for 2,500. They are $2.00 per thousand with the names of your candidates printed in.

Comrade Frank Haza writes for Chas. Baker for a meeting as soon as available. He plans to stir up the comrades at Niles.

A nice order for dues stamps and other supplies comes from comrade Oliver S. Spencer of Local Power Point, one of our newest locals. Local Power Point is on the grow!

Comrade J. L. Arnold praises the Debs' pictures he received. Every comrade should have one. 25c. each. Order of State Office.

Local Deming, Mex. orders a thousand organization letters which secretary, Mrs. W. P. Calkins will use in building up the local membership.

Comrade F. J. Catlin reports that Local Youngstown is now getting into a stride that will carry it straight toward greater activities and stronger growth.

Evenings are growing longer. Why not use them for your better education. Order a few of the pamphlets advertised in this issue. Make your evenings interesting. Learn a little every day.

Comrade Atrhur Dondero of Cincinnati writes that altho he is new in the socialist movement, he is getting in his best licks among his fellow musicians. He states that he would prefer to become a real bolshevik rather than a parlor socialist.

When we print one of those "quit sending your papers to me" letters, comrade M. A. Rundle of Craig, Mo. sits right down and writes the writer a letter showing them how foolish they are to quit reading a real up to date socialist paper.

A live literature distributor is comrade H. Markoff, of Gary, Ind. He is working hard for the liberation of all political prisoners.

Comrade J. W. Sprigg of Weston, W. Va. is still selling literature. His latest order is for 20 copies of "Crimes" and five copies of the "Trial of Debs".

PATTERNMAKERS [illegible] RELEASE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

At the last meeting of the Bryan Branch of the Toledo Association, Patternmakers' League of North America, the resolution, demanding the liberation of Debs adopted by the Indiana Mine Workers, was read and unanimously adopted. This organization comprises fifty Patternmakers.

Sincerely and Fraternally Yours,
R. HANDTKE, Sec'y.

A SOCIALIST NOW.

To be a Democrat all ones life, to stand by that party thru thick and thin until one reaches the age of 73 and then to turn socialist and to be proud of it is an experience that comes to but a few. One who enjoys this distinction is comrade J. P. Lewis of Means, Ky.

Comrade Lewis states that he will never vote any ticket but the socialist from now. He contributes a dollar to the Liberation fund. We welcome comrade Lewis to our ranks.

Local Akron is distributing a thousand copies of the Ohio Socialist each week. Akron comrades are determined to show the workers that socialism is a live issue and one in which they are vital.

Local Cambridge remits $25.75 for literature and $25.00 for the press fund. This amount is from the County organization. Comrades of Guernsey Co. held a mass meeting Aug. 24th, at which new planes were laid for the future growth of the party.

It was decided to consolidate all locals under one head to be known as Local Guernsey Co. It is further planned to have an organizer for each municipality and voting precinct. Also a literature agent and dues collector. The new organization machinery will be put in operation in the very near future and as soon as possible an organizer will be employed who will give his entire time to the work.

Mayor Hamilton of Piqua reports that they filed their full city ticket, having had no difficulty in getting many more signatues than required.

Comrade Dr. J. W. Grabble orders 200 copies of the O. S. weekly.

The picnic held by Guernsey Co. comrades Aug. 10th, was a complete success in every way. About 2,500 people were present.

[illegible]

Columbiana County Executive Committee met August [illegible] at the home of Comrade Bonsall at Salem, O. There also gathered about [illegible] other Comrades. We all spent the day in a most enjoyable way. Some very lively discussions took place that were worth while attending.

About 1:30 the ladies spread the tables and they were soon loaded down with good things to eat. It was a regular [illegible] feast.

Then our C. E. C. took place. A new delegate ([illegible]) from Power Point was seated as a delegate. Our delegate to the National Emergency Convention was given instructions. A collection was taken amounting to $15.00 to be known as the BONSALL FUND to be given to the O. S. printing fund.

We adjourned to meet in four weeks at Com. Stewarts.

W. A. JENKINS, Sec'y.

Comrade N. H. Lampher was present at the meeting at Power Point when the comrades organized there in the middle of August. He states that Power Point Local will be one of the good ones on the Ohio socialist map.

Local Toledo orders 300 copies of "Crimes of the Bolsheviks". Literature is one of the things that moves fast among the Toledo comrades.

Comrade Clyde Meck, M. A. L. of Bryan, believes in keeping ahead. He pays for the balance of the year.

Comrade J. Pishka reports that the comrades of Steubenville were well pleased with comrade Tom Cliffords address tere lately.

Local Tiffin applies for a speaking dates from State Organizer Baker.

Comrade J. Leonard Arnold of Canton is a booster for the O. S. a few days ago he ordered 10 half year sub cards and five yearlies. They came right back too. He says they are all new readers but one and that means that many more socialists. He states as his belief that the O. S. is the "best paper in the country". Well, we confess to agreeing with him.

An order for 100 copies "Crimes of the Bolsheviks" was lately filled for comrade Gaspar Stanich of E. St. Louis, Ill.

Order Them To-day

We mean the first Debs Leaflet, "An Open Letter to President Wilson", by Joseph W. Sharts.

They are $2.00 per thousand and are being ordered by many comrades and locals for free distribution. At this Price how many thousand will you take? Order now. Do something for the release of our imprisoned comrades.

Address Socialist Party of Ohio, 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O.

Comrade J. Cassell of Roanoke, Va., remits $4.50 for May Day sub cards and for two subscriptions of Va. comrades.

Making socialists of Rock Islanders is a speciality of comrade Perry Shipman. He finds no end of fun in adding names to our list of readers. This week it is two yearlies.

Join the Army of Liberators.

THE SOCIALIST PARTY OF OHIO, 3207 CLARK AVE., CLEVELAND, O.

On the Firing Line

Local Secretary, Clifford King of Hamilton, O., Keeps after O. S. subs among the membership. Getting subs from non members is also one of his big side lines. A recent list of eleven from him indicates activity.

Comrade Frank Besjok of Springfield, Ill., subscribes and sends more from another comrade.

Comrade W. M. Higley of Albany, O., is a Red who works at the trade. He sends us a splendid letter of encouragement and a list of names to which to send sample copies. Comrade Higley is working hard for the upbuilding of the Party owned press. He's the kind we need in the great Cause.

Two yearlies have arrived from comrade W. J. Scott of Barberton, O., Thanks, comrade Scott.

Comrade Geo F. Parsons is with us—again bringing two half yearlies with him. Glad to make their acquaintance, comrade Parsons.

Comrade J. E. English of Tucson, Ariz., is helping put Ariz. on the Socialist map. He sends in a yearlie.

Helping to spread the agitation for Debs' release is what comrade Nina Budyk of Youngstown, O., is doing. A yearly from this comrade hepls in the good work.

Comrade H. T. Owens of Dayton, keeps after them, a list of five recently keeps more workers reading and thinking of the worker's problems.

Our staunch supporter, P. J. Donnely of Springfield is here again. He sends in four.

Sign up in the Army of Liberators.

Comrade C. L. Stembrook of Columbus, O., doesn't let the grass grow under his feet when he goes after O. S. subs. Fifteen on a list is going some and they are not the 25c kind either. Guess we will have to print some oversized lists for some of our boosters.

"Enclosed find a few subscriptions for the grandest paper in Ohio". These words of flattery come from comrade Harvey Gardenhour of Lima, O. As a means of provink he means it he sends a list of three subs besides his own. That proes it isn't flattery.

Making socialists grow where none grew before is the work of comrade J. L. Creviston of Mulberry, Kans. He sends a list of three yearlies and an order for a weekly bundle.

Our Kentucky boosters are still in the ring. Comrade J. M. Dickerson of Louisville sends us four more.

Comrade H. M. Kohr of Urichsville, O., is right on the Job. Four half yearlies shows he's been working at it again.

That ever active comrade, Nick Weltlich of Massillon, O., is on the hunt as usual. He finds good game too. Two yearlies this week.

Comrade W. H. Burton of Bouse, Ariz., subscribes for a year as he says he likes the way we are going about our Party "house cleaning".

Sesser, Ill., is another new town on our list of readers. Thanks to comrade Dan Ivosovich, we now have a list of seven there.

Order a thousands of "An Open Letter to President Wilson" for free distribution.

The State Constitution provides that all candidates must receive a majority vote. According to this vote the following Executive Committeemen are elected: Tom Clifford; Marguerite Prevey; Lotta Burke. There four next highest: Frank B. Hamilton, Geo. Bundy, Jos. Sharts and M. A. Toohey did not receive a majority vote so they, with the four next highest condiadtes must be balloted upon on a second ballot.

A. WAGENKNECHT, State Secretary.

Now what is the Soviet as it exists in Russia today? We have seen that, in the first days of the Revolution, it was formed out of the thousands of informal gatherings of workers and peasants throughout the land which came together to decide what next to do. The original Soviets were economic bodies, for it was natural to expect that people connected with one another by common work and common material interests should meet in times of cataclysmic social gatherings. A factory workman's immediate interests are more closely bound up with the interests of his comrades in the same factory than they are with workers in another industry. For instance, the metal workers depend for their daily bread upon the welfare of the metal industry, the railwaymen on the railways, the peasants on the agricultural industry. Ever since man first began to divide the work of civilization among his fellowmen, he has shown a tendency to congregate on the basis of guilds or special trades. All the more natural is it now, in a highly developed society, in a state of temporary flux, that metal workers, railwaymen and peasants should get together in a different district and discuss the subjects that most affect their lives. The informal economic unions, which sprang up in the first days of the Russian Revolution, became, as we have seen, the basis of the Soviet system. The most important point to observe about them is that they were industrial and had no relation to territorial divisions of society, except in so far as geographical and climatic conditions imposed a certain limit to the industrial organization. The Revolution therefore brought the Soviets into life on an economic basis and for an economic purpose, and in their first inception they were anarchic and without any common plan of action. During the first few weeks of the Russian Revolution, one Soviet knew nothing of what the other was doing. Only after the first month was it possible to talk of an organization which was gradually uniting and co-ordinating the actions of all the Soviets scattered about the country. This co-ordination became most imperative for the safety of the Revolution, because the forces of the old social order, which had been overthrown, soon began to gather strength again. Only organized Soviets could raise the necessary barrier to reaction. Only if they expanded their activities to broad political action could they possibly safeguard those local economic interests to protect which they originally were created. Only by becoming political bodies could they guarantee the new special order. Thus, in every town in Russia, the factory committees and informal workers' unions united into a Central Soviet, which at once took upon itself the task of fighting the counterrevolution and controlling whatever authority the middle classes had set up. Soon the question was raised, whether this Central Soviet, which was already exercising a sort of control over the bourgeois government, should not take all political authority into its hands. The controversy that raged about this question marked the second stage of the Revolution, which ended in October, 1917, in the victory of the proletariat and the expansion of the power of the Soviets from that of indirect political control into that of direct political responsibility. Thus in every town in Russia after October the central committee of all the Soviets of that district became responsible for public order, for the militia, for public works and conveniences, and for the local finances. The same thing took place in the villages, where the union of peasant communes or later the committees of the poorer peasantry, which came from the former, replaced the local democratically-elected body. The latter for the most part were controlled by people who had got into power in the first days of the Revolution and had stuck to that power ever since. Finally these central urban soviets and the unions of provincial Soviets sent their representatives to a great State Congress of the whole country. This Congress now meets every six months and elects a Central Soviet Executive, which is empowered to act with authority in the period between the Congresses. This body has now become the supreme political authority in the Soviet Republic. It controls the Red Army and Navy, the foreign policy and the economic exchange with other states. Thus, beginning with informal gatherings of workers, bound by economic interest, the Russian Soviet has developed into a great political power, which is to be reckoned with in international politics.

But that is only half the story. We have seen that the original anarchically-formed committees were the seed from which the green shoot of the centralized political Soviet grew. But it soon began to put forth another shoot—the organized economic syndicate. And it came about in this way. The workers' factory committees, that elect the local political Soviet for managing the militia, etc., soon began to send their delegates to a conference representing all the workers divided according to rpofession in that particular district. This movement was in complete antagonism to the old trade union movement, which sought under Czarism to devide the workers into a number of craft unions within the industries. The essential feature of this new economic Soviet or syndicate is that it is organized on the basis of industry and not on the basis of guild. Only in this way is it possible to prevent the economic power of the workers, the unity of which is so essential in the struggle against capitalism, from being broken into jarring craft unions, all working at cross purposes. Under the new system the wood-workers and book-keepers in the metal industry must choose their representatives to look after their economic interests along with the actual metal-workers themselves.

The same process of organizing the proletariat industrially has taken place among the rural peasantry. After the October Revolution, the latter sent their delegates to a political Soviet, whose duty it was to organize the rural Red Guard and keep revolutionary order in the villages. Somewhat later they began to form purely economic unions, as the villages began to split up into rich and poor peasants and the conflict between these two classes began to develop. Western Europeans imagine that the Russian peasant is a peculir creation, with habits and customs of his own, living apart from the rest of the world in dirt and ignorance. My experiences in the Russian villages has taught me that just the same social divisions are to be fuond there, in perhaps slightly different form, as exist in the more industrialized rural districts of Western Europe. The idea that it is possible to separate the peasants from the urban population of Russia and thereby mobilize an anti-Bolshevik force within the country is a fantasy. The same proletariat and laborer, middle class corn speculator is found there as in other lands. And the urban worker in Russia who supports the Bolshevik has an ally in the village in the shape of the landless peasant, just as the urban middle class has his counterpart in the village corn speculator. It was natural, therefore, that this [illegible] of the Russian village into two social camps should be accompanied by the growth of professional unions on the basis of the new social division. Side by side with the rural political Soviet there grew up the Union of Laboring Peasants, which took upon itself the duty of working the landlords' land on a communal basis.

Thus we see how the proletariat in town and country built up its professional alliances on an industrial basis. Once formed, they began immediately to graviate towards a center. For just as the political Soviets formed State Congress for the control of foreign policy, so these economic Soviets of syndicates of metal workers, cotton operatives, accountants and laboring peasants sent delegates to State Congress of their particular branches of industry to protect the interests of each. At the present moment there is the All-Russian Union of Professional Alliances, which is the top of the pyramid towards which all the workers' syndicates converge. This is the real labor parliament, where the internal affairs of the different industries are attended to and reconciled with the public interest. Here in numerous committees and sub-commitees are worked out the wage tariffs, the hours of labor and the capacity of output of each of the amalgamated syndicates.

Thus two great social institutions have sprung up in revolutionary Russia—the political Soviet and the economic Soviet. The duty of the former is to protect the Republic from internal and external counter-revolution. The duty of the latter is to build up, under the protection of the former, the new social order. Once the danger of foreign intervention is removed, it is possible that in Russia the political Soviet will reduce its function and that the power in the land will pass to huge economic syndicates, working under the control of the Central Council of Public Economy. The latter body is something like the Central All-Russian Professional Alliance, except that it concerns itself only with production, distribution and exchange on a public basis, and has nothing to do with the internal affairs of the different industries, which belong to the syndicates. When the new social order is really guaranteed from foreign counter-revolution, the political conflicts which have been raging in Russia since the Revolution will gradually die down. The struggles between the Bolshevik theory of "Immediate World Revolution" and the Menshevik theory of "Labor Coalition with the Bourgeoisie" will give way to others. Then will arise the delicate problem of how to adjust the interests of the whole community to the claim of the different workers' industrial syndicates, so that private capitalism, conquerred in the October Revolution shall not appear again in a more insidious form. All this, however, belongs to the future.

Rusia has advanced by giant steps along the new road in spite of all the wounds inflicted on her by the war and the foreign intervention. Young and energetic, untrammeled with the century-old conventions and traditions of an older, more archaic civilization, she has a clear field in which to begin the work of reconstruction. The private exploiter no longer exists in Russia today. He, if he was unwise, fled to Paris and London to plot counter-revolution. If he was wise, he entered the service of Soviet Russia and is now receiving an ample salary according to his knowledge and skill in industry. Througout the length and breath of the Russian plain the struggle is still going on between those peasants whose ideals do not go beyond the [illegible] of corn and holding it up for famine prices while the towns are starving, and the proletarianized laboring peasants who have learnt in the school of adversity that only by collective labor, by communistic production and distribution, can a new and juster society be created.

THE SOVIET SYSTEM AND SO-CALLED DEMOCRACY

Everywhere in Russia now the organs of the new form of society are found in the two types of Soviet. Upon these political and industrial unions only those who labor by muscle and brain can elect and be elected. In order to obtain a vote, therefore, a man or a woman must be organized in some sort of economic Soviet or industrial syndicate, and in order to be thus organized he must do some form of productive work. This is the first essential of the Soviet system. The second essential is that the Soviet should be elected not territorially, but industrially. This is the real difference between a Soviet State and a Democratic State. A democratic state recognizes no economic divisions in the electorate. Everyone is regarded as a part of what is vaguely called "the people." How impracticable a democratic parliament is for the modern industrially-specialized form of society, the following example may show. A metal worker, let us say, lives next to a railwayman on one side and an accountant on the other. All three have special economic interests which require exact professional knowledge to understand. Each of them, if he were to draw up a programme of his demands at a given moment, would have different claim to make for the protection of his particular economic interest. In a Soviet State, each would have these interests put forward through the economic syndicate, of which he would have to be a member, and the central union of the syndicates would then consider them in relation to the whole economic production of the country. In times like the present, when the fight with the counter-revolution is still going on, the syndicates would have to consult with the political Soviet and obtain its sanction also. But the point is that the whole Soviet organization is so arranged that the economic apparatus which is able to represent the workers special interests and can reconcile them with the interest of the whole community is at hand. In a Democratic state exactly the reverse is the case, for here the worker's industrial organizations have no political power and can only advise a body which is brought into being by a scattered electorate. Thus the three types of workers that I take above are in a democratic state only able to elect representatives for one district in which their economic interest is swamped in thousands of others. Candidates are put up by party caucuses, which work on a territorial basis and these candidates cannot possibly represent all these interests at the same time. The democratic election to a parliament in fact is nothing more than a device to deceive the workers by dividing them into artificial constituencies on the basis of which they cannot possibly unite to draw up a common social and economic policy. This can only be done through the development of the industrial unions, as described above.

Perhaps the greatest advantage of the Soviet, however, is that it is capable of being continually re-elected. The workers can withdraw their delegates and elect again at will. Thus the Soviets are always a reflection of the opinion of the masses at the given moment. This was most clearly seen in the case of the All-Russia Congress of Soviets in January, 1918, and of the Russian Constituent Assembly which met in that same month. The former elected only a short time after the election for the Constituent Assembly, gave a large Bolshevik and Left Socialist-Revolutionary majority. The Constituent Assembly, however, was elected on a candidates' list made up in the autumn of that year, when quite different parties were in the political arena and when the important split between the left and the right wing of the socialist-revolutionary party had not yet taken place. The result of the Constituent Assembly election was a majority for the right socialist-revolutionaries, in which the left wing was hardly represented at all. For in the few weeks that elapsed between the drawing up of the candidates' list for the Constituent Assembly, and the elections for it, an entirely new political situation had arisen. The Soviet Congress reflected this change and the Constituent Assembly did not.

When the Allied governments therefore say that there must be in Russia a body which represents all the Russian people in a Constituent Assembly, before they can recognize the Russian Government, they are really saying that they want a government which will be put in power by scattering all the economic forces of the Russian workers and which will become an empty shell within a short time of its election.

I would add one final word of appeal to the working class of England and France. Do not listen to the tales of horros which the bourgeois press of Western Europe tells about the Russian revolution I say because I know that the starvation and misery from which the Russian people are suffering is due not to those who are building up the new socialist form of society but to those who for three years drove Russia into an exhausting war and then sent armed forces to invade her territory and cut off her food supplies and the raw materials of her industries. The Russian people appeal to all the world for peace. They long to establish the normal economic exchange between East and West Europe which alone can make good the destruction of the four years of war. Raise the blockade they say; send us the technical advisors without which we cannot restore our industries, shattered by the war. Soviet Russia is ready to pay handsomely for the services rendered. If the workers of England and France are still content to leave private financiers to control the relations between their countries and Russia, Soviet Russia will raise no objection but will treat with their financiers and satisfy their wants in so far as they do not involve the reduction of the Russian workers and peasants to the slavery that they lived in under Czarism. If, on the other hand, the English and French workers take these matters into their own hands they will find in Bolshevik Russia a friend and an ally. They will at all times be welcome in the territories of the Republic, which are as safe for those engaged in honest labor as in any state of Western Europe or America. An immense field will be open to them to assist their Russian comrades with the technical advice which only they can give. On the other hand they can learn many things which will be new to them in that wonderland that lies between Europa and Asia. Let us tear out the pages of the past. Let us write a new page in the history of the future.

Here's how the Press Fund grows-- it could'nt help it with all these comrades "Going to it"!

Of course it is growing. It has to grow. The comrades who stand by The Ohio Socialist and the IDEA of PARTY controlled press are not the kind of socialists who have learned to quit. Not by a long shot. They are the never-quitting variety—the only kind who will ever make this world a fit place for workers to live in and a mighty poor place for exploiters.

Well, here's a list for you. Talk about the possibility of getting that $10,000 for the press fund, we should say so. Here is a comrade down at Massillon, O., who does'nt even send us his name, he's so modest, who goes among his shopmates and collects $52.00 from 52 workers. Just think of it! This certainly shows there is no cause for failure in this respect. When one comrade can do so well for the press fund as this there must be many, many others who could equal it if they would only try.

Comrade Chas. Baker, State Organizer stopped in the State Office the other day enroute to the National Convention. He left $59.00 in the press fund which he collected among the South Slavic comrades of Youngstown. These comrades are ready always to the right thing by all progressive Party Work.

Perhaps some day we will know who the members of the Repeaters Club of Akron, O. are. Two weeks ago we recorded a donation of $8.00 from this mysterious organization, and now we must credit it with a still larger one. Look in the $35.00 column, you will find them there. Comrade Albert Schmidt, who remits for the Club, states that their numbers are growing fast and he wishes other comrades would organize such clubs over the country. Sounds like good advice to us. What do you think about it? The Repeaters surely set an example worth following. All health to them, may their shadows never grow less numerous!

Another branch of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund contributes to our press fund. This time it is No. 133 of Dayton, O. Comrade J. Ehrhardt remits a ten spot from this organization. Thanks comrades.

"Would like to see a hundred thousand comrades respond to this call" states comrade L. W. Pearson of Roanoke, Va. He boosts the press fund, joins the Liberators and orders a hundred copies of the O. S. for distribution.

Comrade C. R. Swope of Warren is still at it. The list received this week contains $5.50.

"One dollar as often as possible" is what comrade Jno R. Veney of E. Liverpool, states he will donate to the press fund.

We call your attention to the fifty dollar column again. You will see the name, Lasalle Club there. Thru comrade Julius Zorn the members of this S. P. Branch sent us $50.00. Comrade Julius Zorn states that the Branch is very active and flourishing, a fact we may readily believe from this generous donation.

Comrade Mike Zolman steps into the ten dollar column this week. — Thanks comrade Zolman.

Another dandy list was received this week from comrade H. Weicher of Columbus, O. It contained $9.00 and is a healthy indication of comrade Weicher's activity.

Another three dollar contributor comes from one of our best boosters, comrade T. Auckerman of Kalamazoo, Mich. On another list he sends in $6.00. Yes, some, booster.

FIRST VICTORY OF THE FIGHTING ARMY OF LIBERATORS

DEBS FINDS COMFORT IN THE HOSPITAL WARD OF THE ATLANTA PRISON

The Army of Liberators has scored its first victory.

The visit of Liberator attorneys Sharts and Castleton, and Marguerite Prevey to the Atlanta penitentiary has resulted in the transfer of Debs from labor in the clothing department and 14 hours a day in a steel cage to comfortable quarters in the hospital ward.

Debs should have been placed in the hospital ward the first day he arrived at Atlanta prison. Debs is not a well man, and his age should bespeak for him conveniences and comforts not necessary to the younger prisoners.

But no, the aim of those who are Debs' jailers seemed to be to break Debs' spirit.

They wanted him to break down.

They wanted him to beg for mercy.

They wanted him to desert his Socialist principles.

And now they found out that Debs is not that kind of a man. They have found out that he would sooner die than give in an inch.

In the last weeks Debs has lost 14 pounds. Always slight of build, he was merely a shadow of himself when visited by the three representatives of the Army of Liberators. His eyes were deeply sunken into his head and it could be plainly seen that he was suffering, not only physically, but also and mostly, spiritually.

He was suffering because those about him were suffering. It cut him to the heart to see fellow prisoners punished. It wounded him deeply to see those about him denied sufficient food. And so, sensitive as he is, he suffered with them and suffered the more.

"You'll have a dead man on your hands soon, and the workers will say he was killed in prison"—these were the parting words of one of the Liberator representatives to the warden of the Atlanta penitentiary.

These words were ominous. They undoubtedly made the warden think harder than he has for some years. And the result was that Debs is now enjoying a real bed, a window that looks out upon the world, books and an environment more conducive to mental calm.

Again we say — maybe you've never been in jail. Maybe the weight of steel bars and stone walls have never depressed your spirit and deadened your every impulse. Maybe you don't understand.

But those of us who have been in jail know what it means to get away from the cage. We know what it means to get a glimpse of the outside world. We know what it means to see a new face, to get away from the depressing prison routine, to even bathe a hand in a ray of sunshine.

As prison life goes, Debs is now in heaven.

The Army of Liberators has made this possible.

The Army of Liberators will make more than this possible.

FREE DEBS AND ALL CLASS WAR PRISONERS—that's our minimum demand and our slogan is—NO REST UNTIL WE WIN!

Ever onward then. Have every move you make and every word you utter count for LIBERATION.

Unless we have sufficient funds, nothing can be done.

AND REMEMBER—MONEY IS NEEDED.

ONCE MORE WE SAY—SECURE CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE LIBERATION FUND FROM YOUR FELLOW WORKERS AND FRIENDS.

NOT TOMORROW OR NEXT WEEK—BUT NOW!

For the sooner we hear from you the sooner Debs will be freed.

Join Us in this Battle Today

Join your helping hands with ours—with the hundreds who have joined the Army of Liberators. All Liberators are now laboring determinedly for the freedom of Debs and all the rest They will welcome you into the army. Send today for an application blank and a Liberation Fund Contribution List. Your assistance is needed. Give it.

Address—THE LIBERATORS, 3207 Clark Ave.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

ATTENTION!!

Locals - Branches - Members

The police control of the Germer Convention at hicago made it necessary for the new National Executive Committee, elected by you, to call the Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party to order in another hall in the same building. The convention was regularly organized and then adopted the new name "Comunist Labor Party" for our organization. All Locals, Branches and members desire to affiliate with the Left Wing faction of the former Socialist Party. Now the Communist Labor Party, under the principle laid down at this convention should communicate at one with national Headquarters, 3207 Clark Ave, Cleveland, Ohio.

OHIO LOCALS ATTENTION

Ohio Locals should continue their municipal campaigns under the name of "Socialist Party". The adoption of the new name can date from time immediately following the November elections.

Proclamation to the Membership

Comrades:—

The great war has shaken the world's foundations. Many idols have crashed to the ground, showing their hollowness. The war has torn the mask of patriotism, democracy, and idealism from Capitalism and laid bare the brutal features of man-devouring imperialism. It has shown the workers of the world that their true interests lie in International class solidarity, exercised upon the field of revolutionary class and mass action.

In this Crucial moment the Socialist Party of the United States has betrayed the working class. It sold out the birthright of the workers for a mess of pottage consisting of political respectability and alignment with the interests of the petit bourgeoisie.

The Socialist Party employed the Chicago police department to throw out of the national convention the duly elected delegates of the membership while it packed the convention with "Socialist" aldermen from New York, the very ones that voted for the erection of an arch of triumph in glorification of the victory of American soldiers over the Red Guards of proletarian Russia at Murmansk.

The Socialist Party at the Chicago convention repudiated the real proletarian International — that organized at Moscow. It even found words of excuse for the murderers of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. It disgraced the word Socialism.

In this emergency your delegates, on August 31, met in convention called by the revolutionary national executive committee, elected by you last spring upon the basis of the Left Wing program, and formed the Communist Labor Party of the United States. We have chosen the name Communist Labor Party because the word "Socialist" has been internationally discredited by the Scheidemanns everywhere.

Realising the need of unity between all revolutionary forces, the convention of the Communist Labor Party, left nothing undone to bring about unity with the Communist Party convention, which convened at Chicago on Sept. 1st. Conference committees were elected; the appeal for unity was carried to the floor of the Communist convention; and the declaration adopted instructing our national officers to exert every effort for a unification of the two parties. So far our efforts for unity have not met with success. The entire matter will be submitted to you in detail and we are confident that you will defer judgement until then.

The National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party appeals to you to repudiate the traitors of International Socialism in the reactionary Socialist Party and to pledge yourseles, your energy and all, to the great struggle of working class emancipation.

We are confident that your judgment will finally be in our favor and that you will help to unite the forces of the American working class under the banner of the Communist Labor Party, an integral part of the Third—The Communist International.

LONG LIVE THE THIRD INTERNATIONAL!
FREEDOM FOR ALL CLASS WAR PRISONERS!

The Question of Unity Between The Communist Labor Party and Communist Party

ALL OF THE OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS WHICH PASSED BACK AND FORTH BETWEEN THE TWO CONVENTIONS AT CHICAGO.

We here publish, for the information of all Left Wing adherants, all the documnts which pasad between the conventions of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party, upon the question of unity.

These documents prove conclusively that no more sincere nor earnest efforts for unity could have been made than were made by the Communist Labor Party We permit these documents to speak for themselves and we request a thoro reading of them by all comrades.

Chicago, August 30th, 1919

The National Left Wing Council extends its greetings to all the Left Wing delegates to the Emergency Socialist Party Convention. Though we have no official part in the Emergency Convention, nor any part in its causus, we still recognize that our responsibility, as well as yours, extends to all the Left Wing membership of the Socialist Party; and it is in recognition of this responsibility, and in the realization that the Left Wing movement now demands expression in a Communist Party, that we urge all Left Wing delegates to join with us in the organization of the Communist Party of America. The Joint Call for our September first Convention, which is made part of this message, makes ample and fair provision for the seating of all Left Wing delegates at the Communist Party Convention.

Louis C. Fraina
Maximilian Cohn
John Ballam
C. E. Ruthenberg
I. E. Ferguson, Sec.

Headquarters: 1221 Blue Island Ave., Chicago.

(Immediately the Left Wing delegates decided to quit the police controlled Germer onvention, these Left Wing delegates constituted themselves the regular Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party, officially called by the new National Executive Committee. It heard the report of this committee and the new National Secretary and at once elected a committee of five to confer with the organization committee of the Communist Convention in order to secure unity. The two committees met and the latter gave the committee from the Left Wing delegates th following document.)

Statement To the Left Wing Delegates By The Joint Organization Committee of The Communist Convention

The Joint Organization Committee of the Communist Party Convention composed of the National Organization Committe and the National Left Wing Council can make no decisions for the convention. The question of voting in the convention is a question for the Credential Committee. Every person who comes into the convention holds his seat and has his vote subject to the final actions of the Contest and Credential Committee. Our committee could not go beyond the matter of preliminary arrangements.

We have, however, acted on the question of making up the roster of delegates who shall participate in the preliminary organization of the convention. We have acted on the basis of the Joint Call; the Convention will be organized by delegates who present credentials according to the Joint Call. This Joint Committee has already decided that delegates who have credentials to this convention regardless of the participation in the Emergency Convention shall have votes in the preliminary organization. We therefore present to your committee the Joint Call as an integral part of this answer.

This technical situation does not effect the essential question of unity. This is a convention question, and it will come up in due course through the work of the Credential Committee. We ask your committee, therefore, to make up for our Credential Committee a complete list of your delegates, the organiration and number of members they represent in each instance, and such instructions, if any, as each delegates or individuals may have This will give us the basis we need for acting on the proposal of unity.

Our spirit in the matter is epitomized in a resolution which this committee adopted unanimously in its first meeting to have all bolting delegates from the S. P. Convention to sit with us, in a reserved section, as special guests of the Convention, until the disposition of credentials give us the basis for exact answer. The convention may also decide to take up this question aside from the work of the Credential Committee. In either case we will make as prompt answer as possible.

(The conference committee from the Left Wing delegates decided, upon receipt of the above document, to await the election of a similar committee by the Communist Convention, a committee which could truly speak for the convention. The Russian Federation, which controlled the Communist Convention, were not in favor of negotiation for unity and voted the question of electing a conference committee down. This resulted in the withdrawal from the Communist Convention of about forty delegates, mostly from English organizations. Eventually the Russian Federation delegates agreed to the election of a conference committee. This committee sent the following document to the Left Wing delegates who were excluded from the Germer police controlled convention, which had in the mean time, because of the long wait to hear from the Communist Party Convention, organzed permanently inta the Communist Labor Party.)

Statement to The Communist Labor Party Convention By The Communist Convention.

Before the beginning of the war in August 1914, sharp differences in principles and tactics had made themselves apparent in the parties within the Second International. In each country there was the faction which placed its reliance upon the parliaments of the bourgeois state for the transformation of capitalism into Socialism. This faction, the dominant element in the Socialist Party in practically every country, directed its tactics and agitation to the end of attaining a majority in the parliaments. They argued that this majority, through legislative action, would end the power of the capitalists in industry and build up the structure of the new society.

In harmony with this conception it considered the activities of its parliamentary representatives for reform measures intended to improve the position of the workers under the capitalist system as the method by which Socialism would be established.

In sharp conflict with these Moderate Socialists stood the Revolutionary minorities, which rejected the idea that the struggle could be won in the in the bourgeois parliaments. The Revolutionary Socialist contended that the emancipation of the working class could not be achieved through the capitalist state but only through the overthrow of the capitalist state by the mass Power of the workers and the establishment of a new organ of state Power by the working class, in the form of the dictatorship of the Proletariat, for the transformation of Capitalism into Communism.

Between these groups stood the wavering centre. Revolutionary in phrases, it was never revolutionary in action Rejecting the idea of legislating capitalism out of existance a step at a time, and therefore not agitating primarily for social reform measures under the capitalist system, this faction nevertheless considered the bourgeois state as the medium through which Capitalism would be abolished.

It required the test of action under revolutionary crisis to bring out the irreconcilable differences between these factions. Under the test of action it was found that Moderate Socialism betrayed the class struggle in favor of "reconciliation of the classes." Moderate Socialism is today directly and openly counter-revolutionary. The Centre, because of its vacillation, is even more dangerous because its revolutionary phrases conceal its betrayal of the revolutionary class struggle

Although the movement in this country has not undergone the test of revolutionary experience in an advanced stage, the influence of the social revolution in Russia and struggle in Germany have deepened the differences between the three factions. After months of agitation and discussion we find, at this moment the old party splitting into three organizations corresponding to the three fundamental differences of viewpoint which have heretofore existed in the one party.

We expressly declare that we do not advocate or justify crime, sabotage, violence, or terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political transformation.

DEBS' PERSONALITY THE SAME IN PRISON AS IN FREEDOM.

By Samuel Castelton.

The United States Government has a penitentiary on the out-skirts of Atlanta, Georgia, where it houses a motley crew of yeggmen, counterfeiters, white slavers, fraudulent bankrupts, murderers, and other criminals who have violated the penal statutes. It is a low, spacious building of marble that squats on a slightly elevated hill, and can be seen through and over the spiked railings and virgin woods. A beautiful spacious lawn and richly colored flowers act as a mockery, and poetical perversion — as though placed there for the purpose of punishing the prisoners with its view.

Within the past year or more the Government has been sending a steadily increasing group to this institution — a gallant band of idealists and political radicals who have fearlessly expressed their opinion regarding the late war. Here they are garbed in prison overalls, their scalps shaved, their photographs made, numbers given them, where they are incarcerated fourteen hours daily in iron cells. It has fallen to the lot of these political radicals to be thrown in dungeons and dark cells known as "blind-doors" where they dine on bread and water twice, and sometimes three times, daily.

The latest radical to join this group is that famous champion of the cause of the proletariat, that defender of the under-dog, the oppressed, the enslaved victims of this capitalistic world — Eugene V. Debs. He is sixty-three years of age, tall and lanky, in fact emaciated. A few stragling hairs embellish an otherwise bald head, and through a pair of cheap spectacles is seen a pair of honest, straight-forward, keen and searching eyes. His face is thin, and rather tan, and his jaw is firm and strong. There is something remarkable about the expression of his face. It expresses the soul of honor, an idealist in search of truth, the spokesman whose only guide is his conscience, his motives altruistic, and a deep profound love for his fellow men. One glance at him and you can see the uncompromising revolutionist, the fighter for progress. When he clasped my outstretched hand, and replied to any query, "How are you, comrade?"

"I am well, comrade, thank you", and in the word "comrade" a magically beautiful smile iluminated his face. I know that he was thinking of his millions of comrades all over the world and their struggle for the great economic change that will ultimately overthrow the capitalistic system. 'Gene is reticent concerning himself. He has no personal grievance, or ill feeling, towards anyone. "Tell the boys I am all right. I am being well treated — as well as can be under the circumstances." Debs hates the system of penal institutions, and he does feel sympathy for his fellow prisoners. He knows that the capitalistic system is wrong in its definition of crime and in its punishment of criminals. Because of his deep sincerity he commands the respect of the warden and of the subordinate men in charge of this prison. There is a marked affability on the part of the warden. There seems to be a studied courtesy on the part of all the officials in their attentions to Debs, and Debs knows this. But he will not stand for any favoritism even though he be the beneficiary. It is foreign to his nature to want to receive treatment denied any other prisoner. He refuses to see the hundreds of visitors for he knows this privilege would be denied others. "I will not have a bite of food that any other prisoner cannot have. I won't read a newspaper, magazine, or periodical, that any other prisoner cannot read. I don't want anything that every other prisoner cannot get." His smile of love and comradeship, his fine radiant personality is a great Socialist propaganda within this institution. Thirty years ago, the warden confided to me, he heard Debs deliver a speech in Milwaukee, and his manner of telling it seemed to be reminiscent of pleasure. "I remember it very well, It was very cold and snowy at the time." And with a smile, said, "But I have not told Debs about it."

Strict rules prevail around prison interviews. Between prisoner and visitor, sits a guard armed with club in hand who listens to every word that passes between them. Strict scrutiny is exercised lest some secret pass between them. In the case of Debs a certain feeling of respect and awe exists. I was struck with the fact that the guard remained at the door, and that there was no tendency to intrude upon our privacy. It is as though some high official of Washington had sent instructions that special care and special treatment be given him. There seems to be a realisation that millions of people are interested in the fate of Debs. His incarceration has placed him in the position of a martyr—though he himself finds it repugnant to be considered such. Debs has the spirit of youth. His expression radiates optimism. "Comrade, the world is moving faster, our vision is becoming clearer, our world will soon be here," I have seen Debs time and

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY CONVENTION

Introductory

The battle within the Socialist Party has been made and won. As was predicted at the National Left Wing Conference and againt at the State Convention of the Socialist Party of Ohio, the reactionary Socialists did seek and get the aid of the police in preventing the partys membership, thru regalarly elected delegates, from control of the convention.

Yet, the battle within the Socialist Party for Left Wing principles has been won, the Left Wing element in the party is now the Communist Labor Party, and all that remains of the old reactionary coterie is but a skeleton, amply signifying its demise.

Adolph Germer reported to his packed convention that the membership of 109,000 of January first had dwindled to 39,000. This 39,900 has now been about completely whiped out by the formation of the Communist Labor Party by 82 delegates from 22 states. The minutes, the official acts of the Communist Labor Party convention appear below.

The existance of two Communist Parties after the Chicago conventions was an event which very few Left Wing Socialists expected. The difference between the Communist Labor Party and the Communist Party is not one of principle, but rather one of organization control. The Communist Party was called into existance by the Russian Socialist Federations, whereas the Communist Labor Party was the logical outgrowth of the fight within the Socialist Party for Left Wing control. The Communist Labor Party made many sincere efforts to unite with the Communist Party, while both were in convention, upon a bisis of equality. These offers for unity were denied by the Communist Party for reasons not yet altogether clear. The convention of the Communist Labor Party, just before closing its deliberations, passed a motion extending a standing invitation for Unity to the Communist Party, and instructing the national officials of the Communist Labor to accept every invitation for unity upon a bosis of equality from the Communist Party or any other revolutionary working class organization.

We look forward to many bitter words from spokesmen of the Communist Party in criticism of the stand taken by the Communist Labor Party. We shall not answer in kind. The official documents for themselves and inform the membership that we of the Communist Labor Party made consciencious endeavors for unity. The demand of the Communist Party that we enter its convention as individual delegates so that what were termed objectionable elements could be weeded out of our ranks, could not be complid with by the Communist Labor Party. Objectionable elements were just as prevelant in the Communist Convention. Our invitation to the Communist Party that the two conference committees be named the joitn credentials committee to pas upon credenitals of both conventions was not accepted and our request for a joint session of the two conventions met a similar fate. More than we did to bring about unity could not be done.

We request an earnest study of the proceedings of the Communist Labor Party convention. We call upon all Left Wing elements to affiliate immediately with the Communist Labor Party.

Minutes

Minutes of the Left Wing Caucus, held Aug. 29, at 8 P. M., the evening before the convening of the Emergency National Convention. The purpose of the caucus was to decide upon plans of action upon the floor of the Emergency Convention.

A. Wagenknecht called meeting to order and stated purpose.

A. Wagenknecht elected Chairman.

E. B. Austin elected Secretary.

52 Delegates present.

Reports from various states were had.

Motion carried: that all persons who are not delegates be excluded from the meeting.

Statement of National Left Wing Council concerning their attitude towards the new Communist Party, read by C. E. Ruthenberg.

Motion carried; that those present hereby agree to abide by the decisionsof the caucus or notify the chairman if they intend to act otherwise.

John Reed made statement regarding the National Left Wing Council.

Motion carried that we proceed to outline a program of action for participation in the National Emmergency Convention and that no other business be considered.

Motion that Ruthenberg's statement be accepted as basis for such a program, lost.

Motion carried that a committee be appointed to prepare a program of action.

Committee elected; Prevey, Ruthenberg, Katterfeld, and Reed.

Report of Committee.

If the Ohio Delegates are admitted to the Hall Wagenknecht endeavors to cal lthe convention to order.

If for ANY reason this cannot be done, we do act withdraw on that account.

Chairman: Coldwell of R. I. Vice-chairman: Kate Greenbelgh; Sec'y. Wolff of N. J.—Ass't. Witt of Ohio.

When roster of delegates is read we make effort to include ALL regularly elected delegates, but failing we do not withdraw.

Credentials Committee: Reed of R. I. Zimmermann of N. J. Owens of Ill.—Sandberg of Ill.

When Credentials Committee reports we make this our minimum demand: "Ohio and all Left Wing delegates against whom no contesting delegates appear must be seated without further contest.

If they are not seated we withdraw and meet in our own hall for conference.

We fight for the immediate seating of all contesting Left Wing delegates. If all those whom our conference considers entitled to seats are nat seated, we withdraw and meet in our own hall for conference.

Upon completion of the permanent organization our fundamental resolution will be offered, and we exert every ounce of our strength for its adoption. If we fail, we withdraw to our own hall for conference.

No one shall withdraw on its own initiative. We stand or fall together.

If we participate under Germer's roster, we do not thereby recognize the old N. E. C. nor Germer as Secretary. We do it merely in order to give one last opportunity to the other side to aid in the effort to enforce the expressed will of the Party's membership to transform the Socialist Party into a Party of Revolutionary Socialism and to affiliate it with the Communist Internatonale of Moscow.

Resolutions to Be Introduced Immediately Contested Delegates were seated.

Whereas, the party membership by overwhelming majority elected as the National Executive Committee a committee representing the revolutionary elements in the Socialist Party and also elected International Delegates commited to Revolutionary Socialism and the Communist International, and further declared itself in favor of affiliation with the Communist International, and

Whereas, the National Executive Committee in expelling the Russian, Lithuanian, South Slavic, Ukrainian, Hungarian, Polish and Lettish Federations and the States of Michigan, Massachusetts, and Ohio, and in refusing to tabulate the vote on various referendums and in keeping the duly elected National Executive Committee from assuming office, did so to eliminate the elements which stood for uncompromising, revolutionary Socialism, as expressed in the program of the Left Wing, from assuming control of the party and to hold the party machinery for the representatives of moderate Socialism

Therefore, be it

RESOLVED, that this convention, declared its adherence to the revolutionary principles of the Communist International and to carry out the wishes expressed by the membership by referendum vote, declares the suspension of the Russian, Lithuanian, South Slavic, Ukrainian, Hungarian, Polish and Lettish Federations and the States of Michigan, Massachusetts and Ohio null and void and recognize the new Executive Committee of the party and its national secretary as the officials of the party, and instruct Germer and the old National Executive Committee to immediately turn over all properties and appurtenances of the National Headquarters to the new officials.

Motion carried that report of committee be adopted in entirety.

Motion carried that Coldwell be elected as candidate for temperory Chairman.

Wolf elected as candidate for temperory Secretary.

Zitt elected as candidate for assistant Secretary.

Harwood elected as floor leader.

Floor committee elected: Richardson, Ruthenberg, Gitlow, Katterfeld and Reed.

Motion carried; that all matters decided upon by the floor committee be acted upon as a unit by all present.

The following were elected as candidates for the credentials committee, Reid of Rhode Island; Zimmermann of India; Petzold of New Jersey, Oven of Illinois and Sandberg of Illinois.

Greenhagh elected as candidate for vice chairman.

Motion carried that credentials be handedto the floor committee by contested delegates.

Motion carried that candidates for temporary offices be made the nominees for permanent offices.

Motion carried that all present meet at 9.30 in the convention Hall.

Meeting declared adjourned.

Respectfully submitted;

E. B. Austin Jr.

Secretary of Caucus.

Minutes of the Left Wing Caucus of August 30, 1919.

This caucus was held immediately after the police, directed by Adolph Germer, had thrown all Left Wing delegates out of the convention hall, and it was learned that admission to the Convention hall was by "white card" issued personally by Adolph Germer.

It was decided by regular action that those Left Wing delegates possessing the (Germer) white cards of admission to the Emergency Convention be instructed to attend the convention sessions and that Comrade Zimmerman, of Indiana act as floor-leader to carry out the program adopted last night.

A motion was offered to request the new N. E. C. to draft a statement to be issued to delegates. Amended to elect three additional comrades to act in conjunction with the N. E. C. Both motion and amendment carried and Comrades Boudin, Reed, Baker and Bedacht were elected by unanimous vote.

Session adjourned at 10.30 P. M.

Lawrence A. Zitt.

Secretary.

This meeting was one of contested delegates, other Left Wing delegates having secured "white cards" and seats upon convention floor.

Session convened at 3.30 p. m. as a meeting of contested delegates only. Comrades holding the white cards of admission were instructed to attend the convention session upstairs.

Comrade Katterfeld reported on the operations of the right-wing steam roller delaying action in the contested delegates.

It was decide to elect an Advisory Committee of three to consider the best method of presentation of the the individual claims for seats in the convention. Comrades Talbert, Taylor, Wagenknecht, were chosen.

All contested delegates were instructed to appear before this committee immediately after this session.

It was moved to send the credentials of all Left Wing delegates to the Convention thru a Special Committee and amended that one representative of each delegation contested should accompany the Special Committee.

A motion was passed to the affect that no speeches other than the mere presentation of facts be offered before the Contest Committee of the Germer convention.

It was agreed to hold a short caucus session immediately after the afternoon session of the convention.

Decided to elect a committee of five to draft a tentative order of bussiness for the first meeting of the new grouping. Comrades Lloyd, Reed, Gitlow, Bedacht, Katterfeld and Boudin were nominated. All were elected.

Session adjourned.

Lawrence A. Zitt.

Secretary.

Convened at 6.40 p. m.

Comrade Wolf reported in detail on the promised progress of the Contest committee, and the order in which the contest would be considered. It was shown that all the delegates of California were contested, one from Illinois, and Iowa, two from Kansas, all from Minn., Nebraska, Oregon, one from W. Va. all from Washington, N. Y. one, [illegible] one, Utah all and Wyoming one.

It was [illegible] to instruct Comrade Harwood to present all credentials of contested delegates to the Contest Committee, or to Secretary Germer.

Motion carried.

It was decided to instruct our delegates to leave the Convention Hall immediately if Convention attempts to transact other business or to adjourn before the final report of the Contest Committee, and to gather in the caucus room below.

Session adjourned.

Lawrence A. Zitt.

Secretary.

This meeting was held immediately after the packed convention called to order by Adolph Germer, decided to transact Convention bussiness without first rendering decision as to contested delegates.

Minutes of the caucus of delegates unseated and those leaving the emergency Convention, held Aug. 31.

Called to order by Wagenknecht at 2.20 P. M.

Crimmons of New York chosen chairman.

Motion offered to elect a committee of three to draft a statement to the delegates seated in the Germer convention (action interupted to allow a reading of the prepared statement.) Amended to refer statement back to the N. E. C. and the additional members.

Amendment carried.

It was decided to allow three delegates from Cook County Left. Wing Convention to sit in this caucus with the privelege of a voice, carried.

Motion to request the new N. E. C. to open the Emergency Convention this afternoon at 5 P. M.

Carney made a report that the Germer convention had discovered that it can seat all contested delegates excluding those from Ohio and some from New York and yet control the convention—and that it had decided to do so.

The committee to redraft a statement offered its report, which was adopted.

TO THE DELEGATES.

We, duly elected delegates of the membership of the Socialist Party, have participated in this Convention in order to be able to appeal directly to the delegates on the floor of the Convention.

We call the attention of the delegates to the following facts:

In order solely to retain office, without adequate reason, the National Executive Committee did suspend seven foreign language federations, with a membership of 35,000, and expelled the states of Michigan, Massachusetts and Ohio.

For the same reason, the National Executive Committee did refuse to recognize the will if the Party membership, as expressed in the referendum votes upon the election of National Executive Committee, International Delegates, International Secretary, and, the referendum upon the question of affiliation with the Third International, the referendum upon the calling of the National Emergency Convention, and the referendum to reverse their actions above alluded to — this last referendum being seconded by more than fifteen thousand members in good standing.

The National Executive Committee did repudiate the overwhelming vote of the Party membership to the effect that they vacate their offices in favor of the new National Executive Committee duly elected to take office July 1. 1919, and that they refused to turn over the property of the Party to the new N. E. C.

The organizing committee of this body, without any reason, did yesterday morning refuse to grant admission to delegates from California, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Washington, Florida, Utah, West Virginia, these delegates being regularly elected delegates against whom no contesting delegates have appeared at this convention, and most of them representing states which have been neither expelled nor suspended.

Other delegates, representing altogether the vast majority of the Party membership, are contested by delegations illegally elected, representing Locals and Branches whose membership exist largely on paper.

We call the attention of the delegates to the fact that when duly elected delegates to this body attempted to enter the Convention Hall yesterday morning, they were forcibly ejected by the police, acting under the orders of Adolph Germer, former National Secretary of the Party.

The action of the Committee on Contested Seats, in refusing to consider the case of the delegates from Ohio, and the contesting delegates from New York, on the plea that they had been expelled from the Party, shows clearly that the ex-officials in charge of this convention intend to permit only their own hand-picked delegates to vote upon such questions as may be submitted to them. Considering that through the exclusion of delegates representing the great majority of the Party membership, it is impossible to bring to bear the will if the Party membership in this Convention, we hereby declare:

That if so far we have taken part in this Convention, it is not because we have recognized either the Old National Executive Committee, or Adolph Germer as National Secretary, or this Convention as legal. We have done it merely in order to give one last opportunity to the illegal officialdom in charge to submit to the expressed will of the Party membership; which is to transform the Socialist Party into a Party of Revolutionary Socialism, and to affiliate it with the Communist International of Moscow.

What has transpired up to now makes it clear that the Party officials illegally in control of the National Office and the Convention machinery, are determined at all costs, and by all means, no matter how foul, to prevent the revolutionary will of the rank and file from finding expression in this Convention.

The action of this official machine in proceeding to conduct further business before the question of seating contested delegates has been decided, in violation if its own previously adopted rule, makes impossible our further participation in this gathering. It is our duty to the Party membership which has sent us here to withdraw to another hall, where we will be permitted to carry out the will of the membership and our duty as revolutionary Socialists, free from the interference of the police and the dictation of a corrupt and usurping officialdom.

We appeal to all those who have at heart the true interest of the Socialist movement in this country, and the Social Revolution throughout the world, to join with us in holding a real Emergency Convention, which will rise to the international emergency confronting the world today, and place the Socialist movement of this country in the front rank of the revolutionary march of the fighting proletariat of the world.

CONVENTION CALL

The Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party will be called to order at six clock this afternoon August 31st, in the hall on the first floor of this building

EVERY delegate, is requested to be present.

Comrade Prevey reported in detail on the Debs case and the fight for his release, together with other class war prisoners. It was decided to go on record as assuming responsibility for further action along this line, and that telegrams be sent to Debs and others offering assurances of the continuation of our support.

Letter from Indiana locals urging delegates to support Left Wing program and Elkhart endorsing the soviet form of goverament. Ordered in to the record.

A member of the Executive Committee of the Italian Federation announced that his organization was wholeheartedly with us and would affiliate with the new organization at the first opportunity.

The Credentials Committee reported (report attached hereto) in detail, showing that 87 delegates were in attendance and entitled to seats in the convention. It was moved and carried that additional delegates to the regular quoto announced by the old organization should be seated as fraternal delegates without vote, Comrade Greenwood of Illinois was seated as regular delegate.

The body decided to make the temporary organization permanent for the session. Comrade Prevey was granted by general consent the priveleg to offer resolutions on Debs and all class war prisoners and to Mrs. Debs assuring her of our sympathy, support and hopeful activities. Resolutions were adopted and ordered wired.

The report of the N. E. C. was received and approved.

The report of the N. E. Sec'y. protem was received and approved.

Under consideration of the Party Situation Comrade Ruthenberg offered the following resolution.

"Resolved. That we hereby declare the Socialist Party to be the Party of Communist Socialism in the United States, and that we extend an invitation to all revolutionary working class groups to join in the development of this party of proletarian communism, and "That we elect a special committee of five to confer with a similar committee from the Organization Committee of the Communist Party, the National Left Wing Council, or the Communist Party Convention, regarding the immediate amalgamation of these bodies, with our party to form the Communist Party of the United States."

An Amendment to the amendment was offered by Comrade Katterfeld reading as follows:

"The membership of the Socialist Party in a recent referendum voted overwhelmingly in favor of affiliation with the Communist International, thereby indicating its approval of the principles of Communist Socialism. This Convention believes, therefore, that it has a clear man date from the membership to transform the Socialist Party into a party of Communist Socialism, therefore be it.

Resolved: — That this convention elect a committee of five to confer with the Organizing Committee of the Communist convention and the National Left Wing Council for the purpose of determining a basis for amalgamation of the two bodies. "An amendment was offered to declare our selves the Communist Convention of America, and send invitations to al others revolutionary groups and to the socalled Communist Party, to form a party of revolutionary socialism. Motion for previous question was lost.

Motion for previous question was lost. Later a motion for the previous question was carried. A motion to vote by roll call was carried.

The Vote on the Katterfeld amendment was 54 yea and 22 nay. A motion to proceed with the election of the committee of five was carried. Comrades Katterfeld, Wagenknecht, Lore, Greenhalgh, and Bauer were elected by ballot.

A motion to elect a committee to arrange the financing of delegate and the convention was carried. The following comrades were electet: Taylor, Richardson, Prevey, Lloyd and Wagenknecht. A motion carried instructing this committee to confer with the N. E. C. with reference to finances.

A motion carried that the resolution offered by the Machinists union owning this building in re. to presence of police during sessions of the Gemer Emergency Convention be recorded in our minutes.

To the Delegates of the National Socialist Convention

Dear Comrades and Friends:

On behalf of the Die and Tool Makers' Lodge No. 113, International Association of Chicago, we protest against the harboring and use of police in this hall. This hall is the property, as well as the sanctuary, of a progressive and militant labor organization, based upon the class struggle. We do not permit our members to work under police protection; we can not conceive how we can let any meeting in this hall be carried on under police protection, when we as an organization condemn it and oppose it. While we are not represented in your convention as individual members or representative of an organization, we nevertheless are with you in spirit. For all these reasons we can not let the police remain as your protectors, or perhaps as your invited guests, without submitting our deepest protest.

We call upon you to take steps to remove the police or make such arrangements as will satisfy us that you are not responsible for the presence of the police.

We are not asking this to put hardship on you, but for the best interest of the socialist party and the labor movement in general.

Yours for International Solidarity,

Executive Board,

Die & Tool Makers Lodge No. 113.

E. B. AUSTIN Jr., Ass't.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

This committee considers it to be their duty to raise funds to defray the immediate expenses of this convention, but does not think it has the power to make expenditures of funds.

The Left Wing of Cook County has arranged two mass meetings, which will be held tonight Tuesday, Sept. 2nd, at West End Auditorium, and Old Style Inn, with speakers of prominence in the Left Wing movement. At these meetings your committee expects to raise several hundred dollars which will go into the treasury of this convention. One Hundred and twenty one dollars have been thus far received from delegates present.

Bills are now in the hands of this committee, which must be met. Many other bills will come in from day to day. Since we here must devise a means of meeting the expenses of delegates, who were denied seats in the Germer Convention, we thereby call upon every state delegation to furnish this Committee as soon as possible, with the following information: 1st. How much money can this convention expect from your state? 2nd. Is your state in a position to defray the expenses of its delegates? 3rd. Did your state send in the money raised thru the sale of Emergency Convention Stamps? 4th. How much money can this convention expect from the sale of convention stamps?

CHARLES BAKER, Chairman.

L. F. WOLF, Secretary.

Platform and Program Communist Labor Party

Platform

1.) The Communist Labor Party of the United States of America declares itself in full harmony with the revolutionary working class parties of all countries and stands by the principles stated by the Third International formed at Moscow.

2.) With them it thoroughly appreciates the complete development of capitalism into its present form of Capitalist Imperialism with its dictatorship of the capitalist class and its absolute suppression of the working class.

3.) With them it also fully realizes the crying need for an immediate change in the social system; it realizes that the time for parleying and compromise has passed; and that now it is only the question whether all power remains in the hands of the capitalist or is taken by the working class.

4.) The Communist Labor Party proposes the organization of the workers as a class, the overthrow of capitalist rule and the conquest of political power by the workers. The workers organized as the ruling class, shall, through their government make and enforce the laws; they shall own and control land, factories, mills, mines, transportation systems and financial institutions. All power to the workers!

5.) The Communist Labor Party has as its ultimate aim: The abolition of the present system of production, in which the working class is mercilessly exploited, and the creation of an industrial republic wherein the machinery of production shall be socialized so as to guarantee to the workers the full social value of the product of their toil.

6.) To this end we ask the workers to unite with the Communist Labor Party for the conquest of political power to establish a government adapted to the communist transformation.

Party and Labor Program

Part I.

The Communist Labor Party of America declares itself in complete according with the principles of Communism, as laid down in the Menfesto of the Third International formed at Moscow.

In essence, these principles are as follows:

1. The present is the period of the dissolution and collapse of the whole system of world capitalism. Unless capitalism is replaced by the rule of the working class, world civilization will collapse.

2. The working class must organize and train itself for the capture of state power. This capture means the establishment of the new working class government machinery, in place of the state machinery of the capitalists.

3. This new working class government — the Dictatorship of the Proletariat — will reorganize society on the basis of Communism, and accomplish the transition from Capitalism to the Communist Commonwealth.

Communist society is not like the present fraudulent capitalist democracy — which, with all its pretensions to equality, is merely a disguise for the rule of the financial oligarchy — but it is a proletarian democracy, based on the control of industry and the state by the workers, who are thereby free to work out their own destiny. It does not mean capitalist institutions of government, which are controlled by the great financial and industrial interests, but organs of administration created and controlled by the masses themselves; such as, for example, the Soviets of Russia.

4. The Dictatorship of the Proletariat shall transfer private property in the means of production and distribution to the working class government, to be administered by the workers themselves. It shall nationalize the great trusts and financial institutions. It shall abolish capitalist agricultural production.

5. The present world situation demands that the revolutionary working class movements of all countries shall closely unite.

6. The most important means of capturing state power for the workers is the action of the masses, proceeding from the place where the workers are gathered together — in the shops and factories. The use of the political machinery of the capitalist state for this purpose is only secondary.

7. In those countries in which there is a possibility for the workers to use this machinery in the class struggle, they have, in the past, made effective use of it as a means of propaganda, and of defense. In all countries where the conditions for a working-class revolution are not ripe, the same process must go on.

8. We must rally all groups and proletarian organizations which have manifested and developed tendencies leading in the direction above indicated, and support and encourage the working class in every phase of its struggle against capitalism.

Part II.

1. The economic conditions in every country determine the form of organization and method of propaganda to be adopted. In order efficiently to organize our movement here, we must clearly understand the political and economic structure of the United States.

2. Although the United States is called a political democracy there is no opportunity whatever for the working class through the regular political machinery to effectively oppose the will of the capitalist class.

3. The years of Socialist activity on the political field have brought no increase of power to the workers. Even the million votes piled up by the Socialist Party in 1912, left the Party without any proportionate representation. The Supreme Court, which is the only body in any Government in the world with the power to review legislation passed by the popular representative assembly, would be able to obstruct the will of the working class even if Congress registered it, which it does not. The Constitution, framed by the capitalist class for the benefit of the capitalist class, cannot be amended in the workers' interest, no matter how large a majority may desire it.

4. Although all the laws and institutions of Government are framed and administered by the capitalists in their own interests, the capitalists themselves refuse to be bound by these laws or submit to these institutions whenever they conflict with these interests. The invasion of Russia, the raids into Mexico, the suppression of governments in Central America, and the Carribean the innumerable wars against working class revolutions now being carried on — all these actions have been undertaken by the Administration with asking the consent even of Congress. The appointment by the President of a Council of National Defense, the War Labor Board, and other extra-constitutional governing bodies without the consent of Congress, is a direct violation of the fundamental law of republican government. The licensing by the Department of Justice of anti-Labor strike-breaking groups of employers — such as the National Security League, the American Defense Society, the Knights of Liberty, the American Protective League — whose express purpose was the crushing of labor organization and all class activities of the workers, and who inaugurated in this country a reign of terror similar to that of the Black Hundreds in Russia — was entirely opposed to the principles of the American Government.

Moreover, the War and its aftermath have demonstrated that governing power does not reside in the regularly-elected, or even the appointed officials and legislative bodies. In every State, county and city in the Union, the so-called "police power" is shown to be superior to every law. In Minessota, Wisconsin and many other states, so-called Public Safety Commissions and similar organizations were constituted by authority of the Governors, made up of representatives of Chambers of Commerce and Employers' Associations, which usurped the powers of Legislatures and municipal administrations.

6. Not one of the great teachers of scientific Socialism has ever said that it is possible to achieve the Social Revolution by the ballot.

7. However we do not ignore the value of voting, or of electing candidates to public office — so long as these are of assistance to the workers in their economic struggle. Political campaigns, and the election of public officials, provide opportunities for showing up capitalist democracy, educating the workers to a realization of their class position, and of demonstrating the necessity for the overthrow of the capitalist system. But it must be clearly emphasized that the chance of winning even advanced reforms of the present capitalist system at the polls is extremely remote; and even if it were possible, these reform would not weaken the capitalist system.

Part III.

1. In America, the capitalist class has never had a feudal aristocracy to combat, but has always been free to concentrate its power against the working class. This has resulted in the development of the American capitalist class wholly out of proportion to the corresponding development in other countries. By their absolute control of the agencies of publicity and education, the capitalists have gained a control over the political machinery which is impossible to break by resorting to this machinery.

2. Moreover in America there is a highly-developed Labor movement. This makes it impossible to accomplish the overthrow of capitalism except through the agency of the organized workers.

Furthermore, there is in America a centralized economic organization of the capitalist class which is a unit in its battle with the working class, and which can be opposed only by a centralized economic organization of the workers.

3. The economic conditions of society, as Marx foretold, are pushing the workers toward forms of organization which are, by the very nature of things, forced into activity on the industrial field with a political aim — the overthrow of capitalism.

5. It is our duty as Communists to help this process, to hasten it, by supporting all efforts of the workers to create a centralized revolutionary industrial organization. It is our duty as Communists, who understand the class struggle, to point out to the workers that upon the workers alone depends their own emancipation and that it is impossible to accomplish this through capitalist political machinery, but only by the exercise of their united economic power.

PROGRAM

1. We favor international alliance of the The Communist Labor Party only with the Communist groups of other countries those which have affiliated with the Communist International.

2. We are opposed to association with other groups not commited to the revolutionary class struggle.

3. We maintain that the class struggle is essentially a political struggle, that is, a struggle by the proletariat to conquer the capitalist state, whether its form be monarchical or democratic-republican, and to replace it by a governmental structure adapted to the Communist transformation.

4. Communist platforms, being based on the class struggle, and recognizing that this is the historical period of the Social Revolution, can contain only one demand: The establishment of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

5. We favor organized party activity and cooperation with class conscious industrial unions, in order to unify industrial and political class conscious propaganda and action. Locals and Branches shall organize shop branches, to conduct the Communist propaganda and organization in the shops and to encourage the workers to organize in One Big Union.

6. The Party shall propagandize industrial unionism and industrial union organization, pointing out their revolutionary nature and possibilities.

7. The Party shall make the great industrial battles its major campaigns, to show the value of the strike as a political weapon.

8. The Party shall maintain strict control over all members elected to public office — not only the local organizations, but the National Executive Committee. All public officials who refuse to accept the decisions of the Party shall be immediately expelled.

9. In order that the Party shall be a centralized organization, capable of united action, no autonomous groups or federations independent of the will of the entire Party shall be permitted.

10. All Party papers and publications endorsed by the Party; and all educational and propaganda institutions endorsed by the Party, shall be owned and controlled by the regular Party organization.

11. Party platforms, propaganda, dues and methods of organization shall be standarlized.

SPECIAL REPORT ON LABOR ORGANIZATION

The purpose of the Party is to create a unified revolutionary working class movement in America.

The European War has speeded up social and industrial evolution to such a degree that capitalism thru out the world can on longer contain within itself the vast forces it has created. The end of the capitalist sistem iz in sight. In Europe it is all ready tottering and crashing down, and the proletarian revolutions there show that the workers are at the same time becoming conscious of their power. The capitalist themselves admit that the collapse of European capitalism and the rise of the revolutionary working class abroad cannot help but drag American capitalism into the all-embracing ruin.

In this crises the American working class is faced an alternative. Either the workers will be unprepared, in which case they will be reduced to abject slavery, or they will be sufficiently conscious and sufficiently organized to save society by reconstructing it in accordance with the principles of Communism.

II.

1. By the term "revolutionary industrial unionism" is meant the organization of the workers into unions by industries with a revolutionary aim and purpose; that is to say, a purpose not merely to defend or strengthen the status of the workers as wage earners, but to gain control of industry.

2. In any mention of revolutionary industrial unionism in this country, there must be recognized of the immense effect upon the American labor movement of the propaganda and example of the Industrial Workers of the World, whose long and valiant struggles and heroic sacrifices in the class-war have earned the respect and affection of all workers everywhere. We greet the revolutionary industrial proletariat of America, and pledge them our wholehearted support and co-operation in their struggles against the capitalist class. Elsewhere in the organized Labor movement a new tendency has recently manifested itself, as illustrated by the Seattle and Winnipeg strikes, the One Big Union and Shop Committee movements in Canada and the West, and the numerous strikes all over the country of the rank and file, which are proceeding without the authority of the old reactionary Trade Union officials, and even against their orders. This tendency, an impulse of the workers toward unity for common action across the lines of craft-divisions, if carried to its logical conclusion would inevitably lead to workers control of industry.

3. This revolt of the rank and file must not be alowed to end in the disorganization of the ranks of organized labor. We must help to keep the workers together, and through rank and file control of the Unions, assist the process of uniting all workers in One Big Union.

4. With this purpose in view, the Communist Labor Party welcomes and supports, in whatever labor organization found, any tendency toward revolutionary industrial unionism. We urge all our members to join industrial unions. Where the job-control of the reactionary craft-unions compels them to become members of these craft-unions, they shall also join an industrial organization, if one exists. In districts where there are no industrial unions, our members shall take steps to organize one.

III.

To Labor and Labor alone is industry responsible. Without the power of Labor, industry could not function. The need of the hour is that Labor recognize the necessity of organization and education. This cannot be achieved by attempting to influence the leaders of the Labor movement, as has been clearly shown by the actions of the recent Convention of the American Federation of Labor. It can only be done by getting the workers on the job to come together and discuss the vital problems of industry.

3. Because of the industrial crisis created by the World War, together with the break-down of industry following the cessation of hostilities, and the interruption of the processes of exchange and distribution, there is great dissatisfaction among the workers. But they can find no means of dealing with the situation. Their Unions have refused to take any steps to meet the grave problems of today; and moreover they obstruct all efforts of the rank and file to find some way by which the becomes immediately necessary to find some way by which the workers can act.

4. We suggest that some plan of labor organization be inaugurated along the lines of the Shop Steward and Shop Committee movements. These Committees can serve as a spur or check upon the officials of the Unions; they will necessarily reflect the spirit and wishes of the rank and file, and will educate the workers an the job in preparation for the taking over of industry.

RECOMMENDATIONS

We recommend the following measures:

1. That all Locals shall elect Committees on Labor Organization, composed so far as is possible of members of Labor Unions, whose functions shall be:

a.) To initiate, or support, the creation of Shop Committees in every industry in their district, the uniting of these Committees in Industrial Councils, District Councils, and the Central Council of all Industries.

b.) To propagandize and assist in the combining of craft Unions, by industries, in One Big Union.

c.) To bring together in the centers of Party activity — Locals and Branches — delegates from factories and shops to discuss tactics and policies of conducting the class struggle.

d.) To propagandize directly among the workers on the job the principles of Communism, and educate them to a realization of their class position.

e.) To find a common basis for the uniting of all existing economic and political organizations based on the class struggle.

f.) To mobilize all members who can serve as organizers to fill the demand for men and women who can organize bodies of workers along the lines indicated above.

g.) To direct the activities of local Party organizations in assisting the workers whole-heartedly in their industrial battles, and making use of these battles as opportunities for educating the workers.

2. That a National Committee on Labor Organization be elected by this Convention, which shall cooperate with the local committees above mentioned. In addition, the National Committee shall be charged with the task of mobilizing national support for strikes of national importance, and shall endeavor to give these a political character.

a.) It shall collect information concerning the revolutionary Labor movement from the different sections of the country, and from other countries, and through a Press Service to Labor and Socialist papers, shall spread this information to all parts of the country.

b.) It shall mobilize on a national scale all members who can serve as propagandists and organizers, who can not only teach, but actually help to put into practise, the principles of revolutionary industrial unionism and Communism.

Question of Unity

All actions of this convention must be in harmony with this membership decision. The 92 delegates which compose this convention represent an overwhelming majority of the Socialist Party's membership. The delegates who compose your convention, in the main are seperated from us merely because of the fact that a few reactionary officials kicked them out of the Party.

We have kept our joint agreements. You have violated yours. You deserted us, you deserted the membership of the party when it needed you most. It is therefore assuming much on your part to attempt to lay down terms to us. Despite your inconsistencies, we now offer to meet you to unite the two conventions upon a basis of equality.

We see many inconsistent elements in your convention. We are, however, desirous of uniting all forces of communism into one solid phalanx to oppose both capitalism and the elements of reactionary bourgeoise Socialism. We are sure that in the course of time, all inconsistent elements will drop out. Considering these inconsistent elements in your convention, you can not justly criticize any seeming inconsistent elements in ours.

We must refuse your demand to come into your convention as individual delegates. We are Left Wing delegates regularly assembled in an emergency convention and have permanently constituted ourselves the Communist Labor Party. We represent a permanent and stable organization. We have obeyed all agreements of the Left Wing conferences which were legitimate. We have also obeyed the mandates of the revolutionary faction of the party membership as expressed by referendum. We can claim at least as much credit for the crystalization of the revolutionary elements among the Socialist Party's membership as your volatile and bolting groups.

We claim ours is the advantageous position, yet we are willing to meet with you as equals. Unity can be effected and should be effected, so that out of the existing crisis, instead of two parties, each claming the right to affiliate with the Moscow International, and each deserving that right, only one party of Communist Socialism shall emerge.

Toward this end we propose: That the two conference committees shall constitute a joint credentials committee to go over the roster of both conventions to see whether they really contain any irreconcilable elements, and if possible, to agree upon a joint recommendation to both conventions.

Final Statement to The Communist Labor Party Convention By The Communist Convention

The Communist Party Convention, in replying to the Committee of the Communist Labor Party Convention, can take no account of the various decisions of the groups which met at Chicago immediately following the expulsion and suspensions made by the old National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party; nor of the agreements credited to the Left Wing National Conference, the National Left Wing Council, the Minority group of the Left Wing Conference, or the new Socialist Party National Executive Committee. Each of these must and will answer for itself.

This convention has no question about the rank and file of the Socialist Party. The ten to one vote to join the Communist International is one of the items which account for our presence in Chicago to organize the Communist Party of America. Examination of the ballots in this referendum and of our roster of delegates will show that it is our Communist Party membership which cast the overwhelming bulk of these votes.

As to the charges of inconsistent elements in our convention, that will be tested by the program and constitution which we adopt. We have absolute confidence that our convention will act in clarity of principle without compromise. There can be no charge of inconsistent elements in our party if the work of our convention shows agreement on Communist fundamentals in principles, program of party work, and form of party organization.

We can only refer your delegates again to our answer of September 3rd. We appeal to your delegates to act on their individual judgment, not in a false sense of loyalty to an accidental grouping in a body which represents no membership organization. Some of your delegates belong with us by mandate of their membership, and they must realize their responsibility in assuming at this crucial time to function directly against the Communist Party.

(A day after the above answer was received, the delegates at the Communist Labor Party Convention, thinking that a self seeking leadership was keeping the two conventions from uniting, decided to elect a new committee from the rank and file of the convention to visit the Communist Convention with the following proposal.)

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 4, 1919.

To the Delegates of the Communist Convention,
Blue Island Ave.
City

Comrades:—

The Communist Labor Party of the United States in convention assembled in the I. W. W. hall, this evening at 10 P. M., elected the undersigned committee to proceed immediately to your convention and extend to the delegates thereof a cordial invitation to meet with us in informal session at 1 P. M. Friday, September 5th, for the purpose of discussing the basis of unity between the two conventions.

Committee:
JAMES P. REID
L. K. ENGLAND

(The answer given this special Communist Labor Party committee is significant in that it proves the attitude of the Communist Party Convention toward the Communist Labor Party Convention. The only value the delegates of the Communist Labor Party seemed good for in the eyes of the Communist Convention was to serve as "special guests" or "fraternal delegates" at the Communist Convention.)

As to the proposal of the committee from the Communist Labor Party to hold a joint informal session of both bodies, the Communist Party passed the following motion: That we reply to this invitation that we have already extended invitation to the delegates of the Communist Labor Party to sit with us as special guests, while many of those delegates may qualify as delegates or fraternal delegates.

"By mass action is not meant or implied crime sabotage, violence, or terrorism. Mass action by the workers would never take these forms were it not for the prior action of the capitalist class and its mercenaries in the use of crime, sabotage, violence, and unlawful methods of terrorism against the workingclass. The strike, which is the usual form of mass action by the workingclass in industrial warfare, is the mere stoppage of work by mutual agreement or simultaneous impulse among the workers, a collective refusal to labor as a protest against exploitation, it would in all instances be free from crime, sabotage, violence, or terrorism, were not the political powers, now in the control of the capitalists, ruthlessly and savagely employed against the strikers."

(Upon the last day of the Communist Labor Party convention, the resolution embodied in the following document, was passed. The following day the National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party met and sent the following letter to the Communist Convention. Still in session. To date no answer has been received from Communist Party officials to this plea for unity.)

FINAL COMMUNICATION TO THE COMMUNIST PARTY CONVENTION ISSUED BY THE N. E. C. OF THE COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 6, 1919.

To the Delegates and members of the Communist Party,

Comrades:—

The Communist Labor Party Convention by unanimous vote adopted the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, That the Communist Labor Party extends a standing invitation to the Communist Party to meet, on a bisis of equality, in a Unity Conference, and

That we hereby instruct our national officials and committees to accept every such invitation from the Communist Party or any other revolutionary working class organization."

The Convention has now completed its work and has adjourned. Obedient to these instructions from the Convention the National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party addresses this letter to you.

Comrades, the organization of two Communist Parties is a crime. We have made every effort possible, short of turning traitor to the membership that sent us here, to avoid this deplorable situation. But our repeated attempts to unite all the revolutionary Communist hosts seem to have been thwarted for the time being by certain elements in your convention.

As far as we can discover, there is no fundamental difference of principle between us. The platform, program and resolutions that our convention has adopted are uncompromisingly revolutionary. They conform to the Left Wing program and are in strict accord with the principles laid down by the Communist International of Moscow. We are affiliating with the Third International.

We are confident that the great majority of your delegates and your membership agree with us in this. Why then should we remain apart?

We hereby announce that we are ready at any time to meet your representatives to consider the question of unity on a basis of equality.

If certain elements in your Party make this impossible, we invite all individuals or groups, who may agree with us in our desire to unite all the Communist elements of the United States into ONE PARTY of Communist Socialism, to join forces with us.

All who agree on the fundamentals of Communism, all who desire to affiliate with the Third International of Moscow, are welcome in the Communist Labor Party.

Comrades, let us UNITE against our common foe.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY
JACK CARNEY
EDWARD LINDGREN
MAX BEDACHT
ALEXANDER BILAN
L. E. KATTERFELD
A. WAGENKNECHT, Executive Sec'y.

WE REPEAT—OUR INVITATION FOR UNITY WITH THE COMMUNIST PARTY IS A SINCERE AND STANDING INVITATION—SHALL WE HEAR FROM THE NATIONAL OFFICIALS OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY?—ARE THEY DESIROUS OF UNITY?—AND IF NOT, WILL THE MEMBERSHIP NOW IN THE COMMUNIST PARTY, ACT IN THE MATTER AND VOICE THEIR DEMAND FOR UNITY DESPITE THE STAND TAKEN BY THEIR NATIONAL OFFICIALS?—LET THE MEMBERSHIP SPEAK—RIGHT NOW!

RESOLUTION DEFINING POLITICAL ACTION AND DIRECT ACTION.

The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles.

The conflict for possession of the means of life has divided Society into two classes: the class who produce but do not own and the class who own but do not produce.

The Working class in order to gain control of the means of life, have, by force of economic necessity been, compelled to organize into their industrial and political organizations, and wage battle against the Capitalist Class, directly on the Industrial Field thru their Industrial Organizations. (Direct Action) and indirectly on the Political Field thru their Political Organizations (Political Action.)

The development of the capitalist state has made it impossible to gain control of the means of life by a direct struggle with the capitalist class on the Industrial Field without interference by the capitalist state. Therefore the struggle by the working class, to achieve its revolutionary purpose — the ownership and control of the means of life — cannot be obtained without a struggle against the state, and all struggles for the conquest of the capitalist State are Political Struggles.

In order to differentiate between direct action and political action and to clarify the confusion resulting from the improper use of those terms the Communist Labor Party proclaims that the term "Direct Action" is not to be confused with terrorism or violence, or any other perverted meaning which capitalist law makers have given this phraze, but by it is meant such united action by the Workers on the job which they may use in forcing concessions from the employing class directly without the use of the capitalist state.

That by the term "political action" is meant any action by the industrial and political organizations of the workingclass which the organized proletariat is compelled to adopt in its struggle with the capitalist class for the conquest of the capitalist state and thru the proletarian dictatorship, establish the Communist society.

Out of the Socialist Party Convention, easily controlled by the Right Wing by ruthless manipulation, there have gathered in your Convention delegates who for a large variety of reasons are opposed to association with the Right Wingers. Many of your delegates left the Socialist Party Convention merely because they object to the methods of those in control of the old organization. The leaders of your group have carried on their campaign against the old party upon legalistic grounds. They have emphasized the questions of party regularity; they have asked for support upon this basis, not upon understanding and acceptance of Communist principles and tactics.

There are delegates in your group who have made use of revolutionary phrases without conception of the differences in principles and tactics which separate the Right Wing from the Left. There are delegates who are with you because of personal grievances against the old party officialdom or against the Left Wing officialdom.

One of your delegates, for instance, in his statement before the Socialist Party contest committee, specifically repudiated ever having endorsed the Left Wing or being in sympathy with it. There are delegates with you on the basis of objection to "foreign" control, thus showing inablity to grasp the first principle of Communism. Think of such an objection against an organization which is to be the American Branch of the Communist International!

In the Communist Convention are to be found the representatives of the conscious Communist elements in this country. In contrast to your heterogeneous bolting delegates, most of them without a mandate from any membership for the organization of a new party, the delegates in our convention came clearly instructed to form a Communist Party based upon the principles and tactics of the Communist International.

It must be remembered that a Communist Party gains nothing by additional membership unless that membership is consciously communist. Ours must be a party closely united on fundamentals.

In conidering our proposal for a unity of all the delegates now in Chicago who represent Communist groups, it must be kept clearly in mind that our convention is absolutely bound by the Joint Call which accounts for the presence of 128 delegates and 9 fraternal delegates in this city. These delegates represent 58,000 members. Their mandate from this membership is stated in the Joint Call. Obviously our Convention is bound by the call which brought it into existance.

By this we do not mean to lay down any rule of formalism. To say that we are bound by the Joint Call is only another way of saying that the fact of our convention means a fundamental basis of agreement arrived at by discussion among these members Every delegate in our convention owes his seat to the fact that our Committee on Credentials has had placed before it the documentary evidence of a membership mandate to organize a Communist Party.

Our convention would lose its real meaning if every additional delegate did not meet the same test. There is nothing in the nature of an adventure in our work. It has been deliberately planned: it is the calculated response to the development of the Left Wing movement within the Socialist Party; it is not an accidental gathering of Socialist Party members who happen to agree at the moment that a new party might be the right way to give expression and force to the revolutionary Socialist movement in this counry, speculating as to what response such an experiment might meet.

This is our instruction from our Convention: that every additional delegate must present his credentials to our Credential Committee in the same manner as delegates already seated. This instruction carries with it the clear implication that every additional delegate who votes in our conventon must meet the test which puts him on the same membership basis as the rest of us. His vote in addition to the votes already assigned within our Convention, must be in correspondence with the membership of the state or organization he represents.

There are some delegates with credentials covering both the Socialist and Communist conventions, who have already been received for full participation in our Convention. Others who have such credentials will be similarly received through the Credential Committee. There may be other cases which would meet the same general test in a different way, according to the principle already stated.

Delegates from the Left Wing State or other organizations, that is organizations which have adopted the Left Wing program, but have no credentials or instructions from their rank and file to the Communist Convention and who were not elected in opposition to the Communist Convention, therefore fail to participate as voting members of our body, will be seated as fraternal delegates This Committee will favor the exclusion, however, of delegates who opposed the Joint Call for the Communist Convention in favor of the Emergency Convention or who were elected on such opposition.

The total delegates for any state or other organization will be reduced by the number of delegates for such organization already seated in our convention.

(To this document the conference Committee of the Communist Labor Party made the following answer.)

Reply of The Communist Labor Party To The Communist Party

We waive anwer to the introduction in your statement because it contains no point of controversy, neither do we care to propagandize the Communist Convention for we are sure that the introduction to your statement is common knowledge among revolutionary socialists.

The Left Wing movement is not a child of a day. Left Wing movements have existed in the Socialist Parties of the world ever since we have had Socialist Parties. The only difference between the Left Wing factions of today and those of before the war, is that the Left Wing factions of today have added to their fund of knowledge the experiences of the war and revolutions.

Immediately after the Russian Revolution, Left Wing manifestations in the Socialist Party of this country became more pronounced and gradually crystalized until a very large element in the Socialist Party accepted the Left Wing position. This eventually resulted in the suspension and expulsion from the party of a portion of the Left Wing element by a reactionary officialdom. When this definate break occured a conference was held in Chicago, at which Fraina, Keracher, Ferguson, Ruthenberg, Stoklitzky and Stilson were present. It ws there agreed to carry on the fight for the Left Wing and its principles within the Socialist Party in order to rally all Left Wing forces for a final battle against Right Wing control.

At this conference it was unanimously decided to divide the necessary work to be done. The duty of making what is now called the "Legalistic" fight was given the Ohio State Office of the Socialist Party and it was agreed that the Revolutionary Age should continue its propaganda for Left Wing dominance of principle. Under these circumstances, any criticism of our group of making a "Legalistic" fight is unworthy of those who make it.

The decision to carry on the fight within the Socialist Party was endorsed by the Left Wing National Conference and again at the meeting of the new national executive committee held in Chicago in July. Members of your group, Fraina, Ruthenberg and others, there again agreed to this course.

Despite these repeated decisions to carry on the fight for Left Wing control within the party, certain elements in your group began to organize a new party. We refer to the Russian Federation — Michigan combination which united not upon principle, but for the political expediency.

The National Left Wing Council, a creature of the National Left Wing conference, violated its instructions, was stampeded into joining this call for the organization of a new party.

The group we repreent remained true to all edicts officially issued by these several Left Wing conferences, carried the battle to the Emergency National Convention of the Socialist Party, and there made a decisive fight. We shall probably never find ourselves in agreement with the tactic of flopping from one position to another at the rate of nearly twice a week, in direct violation of the mandates of higher governing bodies and agreements.

We agree that the sentiment of the membership in a large organization can never be definately gauged. However, the Socialist Party membership, by a vote of about 10 to 1, decided to affiliate with the Moscow International. This would at least mean that by far greater majority of the membership of the Socialist Party subscribes to the Left Wing program. The Left Wing delegates who compose the convention of the Communist Labor Party, are unanimously in favor of carrying out this decision of the party membership.

DEBS' PERSONALITY

time again. "Tell the boys that my spirit has never been better than now". And with a smile, "My morale is unbroken, my spirit and my labors are the only things that count with me."

Debs is uncompromising. Yet, I cannot imagine a men more amenable to suggestions, more tolerant of others' views, more eager to exchange opinions. There is no trace of obstinacy in his make-up When Debs feels that he is right he stands by his convictions. With him principles and ideals aré treasures far greater than life itself. "I love life, I love my fellow men, I love my wife most dearly. I love my neighbors, and am a domestic man by nature. During the thirty-four years of may marriage I can truthfully say that I have not spent a night away from home except when traveling or on business. Much as I love life and the things that are dear to me, I am satisfied in my conscience that I am in the right. Free expression of opinion is an inalienable right. I exercised that right. I spoke the truth as I saw it, and no power on earth can crush me. The attitude of the United States Government is nothing new. Socrates took the hemlock; Galileo the stake; Christ the crucifixtion." A thought seemed to strike him, and he talked of Lincoln, the great kind-hearted man of the people, and his attitude towards those who differend with him, and those who criticised his administration. And as he spoke one felt the cogency of his argument in showing how liberty has been crushed. He feels that the Supreme Court of the United States has sealed its doom in its interpretation of the laws regarding the right to the freedom of speech, freedim of the press, and freedom of assembly, and he takes the stand that he has not committed any act that needs apology.

Speaking of his fellow political prisoners, he said, "We will go out together, or remain together." It is a question of principle, not of individual favoritism. Debs is one of those straight forward, simple and sincere men who hate quibbling and detest legal technicalities. He would not barter his imprisoment for free dom on a legal technicality and prefers isolation, even death, to receiving his release on any other ground except justice.

He has lost fourteen pounds, at his age, the loss of weight is dangerous. I saw Margaret Prevey take his emaciated arm in her hand, the tears welling in her eyes, and with maternal feeling, say, "Gene, we must get you out. You cannot afford to lose any more weight." He goodnaturedly replied; "That is nothing — fourteeen pounds of gristle, that is all. This," pointing to himself, "is nothing. It is the spirit that counts. It is only my will to live that keeps me alive. It is only for my comrade, and the struggling proletariat, that I live. Without that I could not live."

Debs is old, has a weak heart, and may die at any moment. And he may die in prison for daring to speak fearlessly according to his light With Debs the cause of Socialism comes first. Dramatically he rolled up his overall sleve, and pointing to his out-stretched, sinewous arm, said, "I would tap these veins and give my last blood for my comrades and our cause." The cold clammy walls, the isolation, mean nothing. The will to do right, the will to bring about Socialism mean everything.

One night while reading a legal document in connection with his case, Debs fell asleep on his bed of concrete, and dreamed of his fellow prisoners They were all transported to the village grocery at Terre Haute, Indiana. — to Pete's place. — Pete, his schoolmate when he was a lad. Pete was kind and good, and the gaunt and hungry prisoners were there, and Debs and Pete were talking, and they said, "Boys, let's eat." And the pies came out, and just as they were about to ravenously munch them, Gene woke up — his legal document still in his hand. Gene laughed as he told this, for he knows that in these days of swift moving events, in these days when a great revolution is sweeping over the earth, and the proletariat is becoming master of the world, that the realization of Socialism is at hand, that his dream will socn be realized.

"Tell the comrades not to worry about me. If they will cast their eyes towards Atlanta they will see a torch flaming in the sky, a torch above the dome of the prison heralding that the glad day is at hand."

ADOPTED UNANIMOUSLY.

Moved that the National Executive Committee is hereby instructed to at the earliest convenience possible enter into correspondence with the Communist and revolutionary parties of North and South America for the purpose of formulating a plan for holding a conference to discuss closer relationship and the laying of the foundation for a future Communist Republic of the Western Hamisphere.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

1 We hold that the land question can not be settled under Capitalism.

2. That all land should be the property of the workers.

3. That only use and occupancy should entitle the individual to land.

The committee further wishes to report:

We believe the question of the agricultural worker and his relation to the revolutionary movement in general, and the Communist Labor Party in particular, is a question that cannot be adequately considered and properly set forth in the short time at the disposal of this convention. Therefor we recommend:

That this convention elect a committee to take up the consideration of this subject in detail.

That this committee draw up a program which it shall submit to the National Executive body of the Communist Labor Party at some specified time in the near future, to be submitted to a referendum of the membership of the Communist Labor Party.

A Message for Debs from Leavenworth

Sincere comradeship is not a fair-weather garment, to be cast aside when adverse winds begin to blow.

Revolutionary kinship is strongest when hardest tested.

It takes root and grows in the hearts of the workers, and blooms and fructifies a fraternal spirit the granduer of which has not been equalled in history.

• • • •

Sincere comradeship makes life worth while.

This revolutionary kinship is, in fact, life itself. It is the manna we feed upon under this hideous imperialism and it gives us the strength which enables us to march and ever onward toward the New Day.

It shines forth from the eyes of mine workers, as they visit the Liberators office to inquire about the progress of our fight to free Debs, therewhile giving generously in five and ten dollar bills—hard-earned money secured as wages for service to a master, service more dangerous than most vocations.

These mine workers are meeting in Cleveland in convention.

These mine workers are going to SPEAK UP for Debs and all political prisoners.

And the demand of the 2,000 delegates will be a demand which capitalism will have to heed.

• • • •

True comradeship is exemplified in every letter we get from our great and growing Army of Liberators. Every word, every letter breaths of social bonds which will never be broken.

Not a corner of the United States but what has been heard from and is being heard from, week by week.

Liberators Fund Contribution Lists, loaded with donations totalling in some instances as high as $50.00, $100.00, yes nearly $200.00 in a case or two, and every cent will be most judiciously spent to free all class war prisoners.

And true comradeship abides with our class war prisoners. It is the light which shines in their night. "Look toward Atlanta", says Debs, "and you will see my flamingtorch in the sky."

And Debs' fellow-prisoners incarcerated in Leavenworth did look toward Atlanta and they saw.

The battle the Liberators are making for Debs freedom has penetrated the walls at Leavenworth.

Debs said—"unless all are freed I refuse freedom."

And the group of political prisoners at Leavenworth answer back "accept your freedom Debs, we admire your brave stand, but we are younger and can weather this storm. You have grown old in labors' battles and should end days in comfort."

This is the message they sent.

REPORT DELIVERY 3207 CLARK AVE CLEVELAND O WHEN YOUR COMMITTEE SEES GENE TELL HIM THAT MOST OF THE POLITICALS AT LEAVENWORTH SEND GREETINGS AND URGE HIM TO APPROVE THE HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS

A. L. SUGARMAN.

As this is written the attorneys of the Army of Liberators are going consulting Debs.

They are showing him this telegram from his fellow-prisoners imprisoned at Leavenworth.

And Debs is deliberating—wondering would it be comradely for him to agree that habeas corpus proceedins should be instituted.

We'll know his answer very soon.

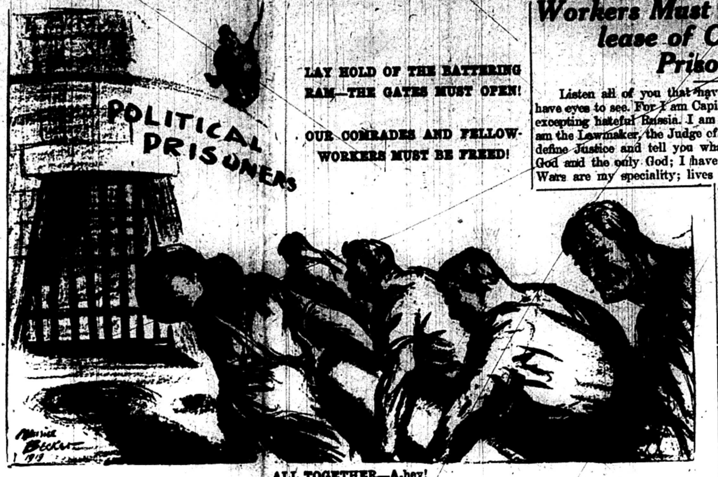
But no matter what his answer—the Army of Liberators will CONTINUE THE FIGHT. Using the legal machinery of the capitalist state is not the only nor yet the best path toward liberation.

THE WORKERS MUST BE AWAKENED—and when once awakened their mass demand will open the prison gates in the twinling of an eye.

Keep up the good work, Comrade Liberators.

Let's hear from you again and again until we have fashioned the sentiment necessary for action.

For after all—THE WORKERS ALONE CAN SET THE WORKERS FREE.



LAY HOLD OF THE BATTERING RAM—THE GATES MUST OPEN!

OUR COMRADES AND FELLOW-WORKERS MUST BE FREED!

ALL TOGETHER—A-hey!

Stand by Cigarmakers

About 30.000 men and women are involted in this historic struggle of the Cigar Makers, for human rights and conditions in New York, and the New York Strike has spread and embraced the States of New Jersey, Pensylvania, Massachusetts, Florida, Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan, Ohio, Indiana is also about to enter the ring.

Altogether, about 120.000 Cigar Makers, 80 per cent of them unorganized, are fighting a life-and-death battle for the right to be organized, for a standardized scale of Wages, for human and sanitary conditions.

The Cigar Makers' International Union did not approve the strikes, and it was, therefore, left to the striking masses themselves to provide themselves with organization and financial means. In other words: The strikers had to become their own leaders and supply their own support.

The strikers rely greatly on Organized Labor everywhere to assist them both morally and financially to carry this battle to a successful end.

"Bob" Minor, -- Famous Cartoonist is Coming

After spending ten months in starving Russia, Bob Minor, Newspaper-man and Reporter, went to Germany for six months. There "Bob" out-bolsheviked the Bolsheviks and was captured for telling the truth. His release from Germany, demanded by writers, artists and congressmen even, enabled him to return to the United States. He has already lectured at San Francisco and is to make a country-wide lecture tour. His story is the most interesting, thrilling and unique recital of actual experiences in the Russian and German Revolution which has yet come to America. Robt. Minor is a powerful speaker, a good thinker, and handles world subjects in a masterful manner. It is said that Minor speaks still better — the more mad he is made. He originally hails from Texas.

Labor To Declare Oct. 8-th Holiday for Protest

Nation-wide agitation that Oct. 8th be declared a day of General Protest, demanding "Freedom for Mooney and All Labor, Political and Military Prisoners; "Hands Off Russia"; and all other Nations; — including Ireland — is being urged by the International Workers' Defense League. The attention of the world is to be focused upon the fact that it is being victimized by a monumental INTERNATIONAL FRAME-UP Against Labor Republics — exactly as the Mooney Case has been framed up within our own nation. Ask an Irishman if Great Britain is honest. Labor Republics are no more welcome in this world than Labor Organizers at a Chamber of Commerce picnic. Clarence Darrow, promined pro-war lawyer, who never laughs, has said as much —, and he ought to know.

A Message from Young Russia

Young Peoples Communist Leage of Russia an active and powerful organization.

By F. J—n.

In the deluges of lies and more or less garbled reports on conditions in Russia there is occasionally a sprinkling of truth, a ray of sunlight that reveals the true character of the awakening of the Russian proletariat. Among the thousand and one "eye witnesses" of the "horrors of Bolshevism," there is—once in a great while—one who pays more attention to the constructive work that is being accomplished than to deliberate lies, circulated with an aim to separate the working class.

In spite of the enormous difficulties our Russian comrades have had to contend with, their progress has been so phenomenal, so many-sided, that even the most enthusiastic of us in this country are, at times, subjected to doubts. We ask: "Is it really so?" "Are they not exaggerating?"

We have learned of the nationalization of industries, of reconstruction and extension of the railroad system, of the great improvement in educational institutions, the high standard of art, science, and literature under the Soviet regime, the care of the children, and, last, but not least of the admirable Red Army which stands as a Chinese wall, protecting from within and without the dear-bought emancipation of the Russian workers.

What we already know about Russia is in itself far more wonderful than any fairy tale; but scarcely a day passes without something new and unexpected is added to our store of information about the struggle in that country; something that inspire us with hope and confidence in the ultimate success of those forces in Russia—and in the world—that make for the establishment of the Cooperative Commonwealth.

We have been to busy assimilating these various news and rejecting plain-faced lies to find the time to think about the youngest in young Russia; we have not stopped to wonder what they are doing to make the world safe for the working class, and any knowledge in this matter has of course, been out of the question. This gap in our information has been supplied by the weekly organ of the Swedish Young Peoples Socialist League, Stormklockan, of July 26, in which is published an article about the Young Peoples Communist League of Russia. The article is written by Sven Linderoth, the secretary of the Sweedish Y. P. S. L. who traveled in Russia last May. During his stay in Moscow, he was invited to the league's headquarters at Malaya Lublyanka No. 12.

"I certainly was impressed—let me admit this from the start," and mostly at the extreme youthfulness of these leaders of the youth." With this as an introduction he continues with the following interesting account of his visit and the work of the Y. P. S. L.:

"My surprise increased when I was introduced to the one who was to be my guide—a sixteen-year-old boy; but comrade Chatskin proved that he has made the best use of his sixteen summers. He is a full-fledged propagandist, has published pamphlets and is an industrious contributor to the league's publications. He has a thoro grasp on the political and economic conditions in the rest of the world. The president (national secretary) of the league is one of the oldest within the movement; he is—twenty years of age!

"After having been bombarded with questions concerning the latest news of the revolutionary situation in the outer world, and our own league's position, (I remember distinctly one question as to whether our league has compulsory military training for its members!) it was my turn to become the questioner.

"The league held a national convention last October, and has since then progressed very rapidly, especially in the rural districts. In order to attract the uneducated peasant youth to the ideas of Communism, the league has organized educational centers all over the country where lecture courses are given to arouse interest in social problems. The next step is to educate the youth in the principles of Communism and before long this procedure leads to the formation of a Communist league. In this manner is assured a movement of both stability and firmness, because the members are from the very beginning class-concious Communists instead of an ignorant mass.

The league now has organizations in all provinces; the local leagues numbering about 600 with a membership of 70,000. It publishes a number of papers. Its national organ is "The Young Communist," a bi-weekly, published in Moscow in 20,000 copies. The edition is limited on account of paper shortage. The league in Petrograd publishes 'The Young Proletarian', the one in Kursk, 'The Dawn of Communism,' etc.

"In relation to the Communist Party the league is wholly independent, and the league's members are not, as a rule, members of the party: this on account of the age limit—23 years—for active membership in the league. At that age the members are expected to transfer their activity to the party. The league is nevertheless actively co-operating with the party; platform and principles being in strict harmony.

"The league is especially anxious to safe-guard the economic interests of the youth in the field of producton. One result of this work is a six-hour workday for all under 18 and the aim is now to reduce this to 4 hours.

"The Red Army has a faithful friend in the Communist league. All members, boys and girls, are under obligation to acquire military education in order to defend the revolution, and they are always to be found in the first-line trenches. In Petrograd; e. g. the headquarters was closed during the latter part of May because all members had gone to the front.

"The league's program and tactics are outlined in the following manner:

" 'The capitalist system is nearing its own destruction. The awakening world proletariat gives rise to a new form of society; the ideas of Communism are beginning to materialize. Out of political, economic, and mental slavery a new world is being born;

Workers Must Strike for Release of Class-War Prisoners

Listen all of you that have ears to hear. See, you that have eyes to see. For I am Capital, Emperor of all the World, excepting hateful Russia. I am the ethical and moral code. I am the Lawmaker, the Judge of Right and Wrong. It is I who define Justice and tell you what Freedom means. I am The God and the only God; I have Worshippers more than any. Wars are my speciality; lives to me are naught. Statesmen court and fitter me. Editors I buy and sell. Kings are my Pawns, Professions my Handmaids. I am the Mother of the Terms of Peace, the League of Nations. Race Hatred I adore, Child Slavery I practice, Secre Treaties, I engage in; the Solidarity of Labor is my only fear. This day I hold court. Bring in the prisoners.

Your Majesty, the first prisoner is charged 'with having exploited the workingclass of ninety million dollars. What is your verdict?

I give him further rigths to rob and plunder in ratio to the Capital at his command.

Your Majesty, the second prisoner is charged with having stolen bread to feed her young. What is your verdict?

To make more bitter yet, her poverty, I sentence the culprit to three months imprisonment.

Your Majesty, the third prisoner is charged 'with dribbling hypocricy.' What is your verdict?

Make him President.

Your Majesty, the fourth prisoner has 'Conscientious scruples about killing others.' What is your verdict?

Damn his honesty. Ten years.

Your Majesty, the case before you now is that of a Corporation Gunman, he is charged 'with having shot and killed a striking Miner.' What is your verdict?

Increase his pay.

Your Majesty, this case at your disposal is one in which the housewife of a certain deceased wage-earner lays claim for Compensation, stating that her husband the father of four children was killed in the Shipyards due to the Employers Speeding for Profit. What is your verdict?

In the process of My Justice, there are Technicalities, and on one of these, I dismiss the case.

Your Majesty, the next case is one of Profitering. What is your wish?

Why bring this honorable Gentleman before me. Go your way Sir and increase your profits.

Your Majesty, this man shot at Clemenceau, commonly known as the Tiger. What is your sentence?

Death.

Your Majesty, the prisoner before you is the murderer of Jules Jaures the great Socialist of France. What shall be done with him?

Do him honor, give him leisure, and praise him in your Daily Newspapers.

Your Majesty, there are many cases yet to come before you. Murder, embezzlement, highway robbery, swindling and a score of liars. What do you desire?

Treat them all according to their class position, their property holdings, but let the liars loose, we need them in the Press.

Are there any more to come before me this day?

Just one, Your Majesty. A Class War Prisoner charged with having challenged your right, to fool, rule, and rob. What is your verdict?

A Rebel in my dominions? What have you to say, you agitating slave? Speak before I sentence you, for of all the offenders, none madden me more than you who would educate and organize labor. Speak, for I must listen, though every word pierce and cut me through.

The worker rises.

"Yes, Your Satanic Majesty, I will speak and though you sentence me and mine into your graves called jails our message will go forward until you are dragged from your throne and all your benefactors put to work.

"You may send me to join the thousands, of other class war prisoners that are already in your dark tombs, but the truth of our class will and shall be heard. Labor produces all wealth. Capital is non-producing. The working class and the capitalist class have nothing in common. Your morality, religion, politics, your concepts of right and wrong, of justice, freedom and democracy are but the reflections of the manner and the way in which wealth is produced and distributed under your robber regime. Every ounce of Profit you ever pocket, comes from the sweat and blood of the working class. We toil for you in the factories, we bleed for you on the battle fields, we feed, clothe, and house you. Our comrades in Eu

Mexico and J. P. Morgan

By JOHN TYLER

War with Mexico seems a foregone conclusion. The lying campaign conducted in the newspapers of the country by organizations professing to be friends of Mexico is fast bearing fruit. No doubt a campaign of invasion has been mapped out by the military experts of this country and sooner or later we will see American youths marching into the unfriendly land of Mexico.

It is therefore compulsory on the part of the American working class who furnish the cannon fodder in all the Nations' wars to become acquainted with the conditions in Mexico and find out the true reasons for the proposed intervention in Mexico. After all the reasons furnished by those organizations who are very anxious to see American troops in Mexico are trivial in their nature. A few murders of Americans in a country torn asunder by revolutions should be no reason for this country intervening in Mexico and thus sacrifice thousands of American lives. If those benevolent organizations would only take the trouble of ascertaining the number of Mexicans murdered and robbed in this contry where ''law and order'' reigns, they would be compelled to offer some other excuse for American intervention in Mexico. Using the line of argument advanced by those organizations, there is no reason why the Mexican Government should not send an army into this country to protect the lives and properties of her citizens. It is rather strange that foreign governments have not expressed a willingness to restore ''law and order'' in a country whose government is incapable of protecting the lives of its colored subjects—which is incapable of protecting the miners in Arizona and the steel workers in Pennsylvania. No, that isn't the reason why we are going to send troops into Mexico.

The average citizen's conception of Mexico is a country where most of the people are ignorant, worthless, lazy and incapable of ruling themselves. A history of Mexico is therefore desirable if we wish to find out the true character of the Mexican people.

In Jan. 1877 Porfirio Diaz overthrew the Government of Sebastian Lerdo do Tajeda legal president of Mexico. Always repudiated at the polls, he finally with the aid of the criminal elements overthrew Lerdo—and established himself as dictator. In order to rule an unwilling nation, he was compelled to take away the liberties of the nation and establish a military dictatorship. He divided Mexico into sections—giving the right of possession of these sections to reward those chiefs who helped him overthrew Lerdo. Diaz encouraged foreign capital for foreign capital means the support of foreign governments. These foreign partnership were one of the reasons Diaz maintained his dictatorship for over 40 years. He practically delivered the entire country into the hands of the foreign capitalists especially Americans.

The Hearsts-Guggenheims-Morgans and others own millions of acres granted them by Diaz without payment of one cent. The Morgan-Guggenheim merger is in absolute control of the copper output of Mexico-owns all the large smelters as well as vast mining properties. The Standard Oil Co. controls a vastly major portion of the crude oil flow of Mexico. The American Sugar Trust practically controls the Mexican sugar business. The Inter-Continental Rubber Co. or American Rubber Trust is in possession of millions of acres of rubber lands—the best in Mexico. The So. Pac. Ry. owns and controls by virtue of near ownership three fourths of the main line railways of Mexico.

The common impression is that Diaz's reign was a reign of peace and prosperity. Nothing was of the kind. It was under Diaz that slavery and peonage were re-established in Mexico and on a more merciless basis than they had existed under the Spanish Dons. The average American citizen would be rather surprised to learn that actual slavery existed in Mexico under the rule of Diaz. According to the best authorities, slavery means the ownership of the body of a man—ownership so absolute that the can be transferred to another. According to that definition the working class of Yucatan and most of the provinces of Mexico were actual slaves. The owners of the huge Yucatan ranches did not call it slavery but enforced debt for service. When one fell in debt in Mexico, his debtor would usually transfer that debt to a planter. Under the system Police authorities everywhere recognized the right of an employer to take the body of a laborer who was in debt to him, and to compel the laborer to work out the debt. Of course once the planter could compel the laborer to work for him, he could compel him to work at his own terms, and on such terms that the laborer was unable to extricate himself from his debt. Working conditions were so hellish in most of the provinces especially in Yucatan and Valle Nacional that the span of a worker's life was only 8 months.

The authorities worked hand in hand with the plantation owners in supplying them with slaves. Those without political influence were arrested on trumped up charges and transported to the great ranches of Yucatan or Valle Nacional or certain death. Under the rule of Diaz ''liberty'' could only be found in the dictionary. The entre nation lived in actual terror for no man was safe

American capitalists have been a contributory factor in reducing the people of Mexico to a state of peonage and slavery. In order for the Hearts and other plutocrats to gain possession of the fertile lands of Southern Sonora inhabited by Yaqui Indians, the Indians were driven from their lands and sold to the Yucatan slave owners to produce sisal hemp for the American Cordage Trust a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. Probably that is the reason for the Anti-American feeling in Mexico. Again the U. S. authorities were instrumental in crushing the revolutionary movement in Mexico by hounding to death those who managed to escape the bloody clutches of Diaz.

Living conditions become so intolerable that the Mexican people in order to survive were compelled to burst asunder the shackless of slavery imposed on them by the privileged few. One thing that we must not lose sight of is that the revolution that deposed Diaz was a SOCIAL REVOLUTION. The people wanted more than a change of rulers. They wanted the land, mills, mines and factories of Mexico to revert back to the hands of the working class the rightful owners. With this in mind, in 1917, they adopted a new constitution. Article 27 of that constitution gives the Government authority to confiscate the natural resources of Mexico from the greedy clutches of the privileged few. Article 27 is the real cause of our differences with Mexico. Witness Ambassador Fletcher's message to the Mexican Congress in which he requests their patriotic co-operation toward securing more sufficient and adequant protection for the lives of Americans in Mexico SO THAT ''UNHAMPERED ENJOYMENT BY AMERICANS OF PROPERTY RIGHTS LAWFULLY ACQUIRED IN MEXICO, which is accorded them in other friendly countries might be obtained.''

The ill gotten wealth of the Hearts-Guggenheims, J. P. Morgans and other American plutocrats is in danger of being confiscated. In order for them to maintain their strangle hold on the Mexican people, they have formed organizations whose sole aims is to precipitate a war between this country and Mexico in order to secure military protection for their stolen property. The English interests have transferred the ownership of their concessions to the English Government so that if the Mexican people confiscate the property of English capitalists they will have to contend with the military might of England.

The issue is clear. Shall the working class allow the American Government to go down to Mexico to protect the wealth of J. P. Morgan or shall they allow the Mexican people to enjoy the frits of their revolution—ownership of the means of life?

Capitalist Class and Democracy

By G. F. PARSONS, Buckley, W. Va.

Capitalist patriotism is very much like its religion, any thing to fool the common people. It gets behind the church to rob the working class; it gets behind patriotism to rob the working class; this was the practice in olden days and is yet. The working class of America was asked to buy liberty bonds, and in many instances men were discharged from their jobs because they refused to buy liberty bonds. In a few cases they were put in jail for being unpatriotic when they refused to buy them; in a few cases were thrown in creeks, one instance, at Eccles, W. Va. a working man was given a good ducking and then brought to Beckley and put in jail when he said he did not want any of the bonds. (DEMOCRACY—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT, FREE TO SPEAK AND ACT). The working class was forced to buy these bonds, now the war is over, work is slack, workers are hard pressed, they want to sell their bonds. What do they find? A discount of from 5 to 10 percent, they must sell. To who? To bankers, or the coal company that they bought from, then the bankers and other labor oppressors pose as patriots. What is patriotism? Is it to legally hold up the American people and rob them? If that is patriotism the capitalist plunderbunds have it in abundance. If that is religion they have it too.

Now Mr. Worker, what have you been, a lot of patriots or a lot of damphools? If a working man could see himself just as he is he would go home, turn the bull dog loose and have his wife to say, sick him Tige! Don't you thing it time that you get guts enough to demand what you were promised? Don't you think that if you were one half as patriotic as they wanted you to be that you would demand that every political prisoner be turned out of prison.

This legal process of robing has Jesse James skinned a block.

but it is done in the name of patriotism, the church and the law.

Is it possible the working class need a revelation from heaven to tell them that they must stop being bossed, owned and controlled by the capitalist plunder-bund?

Crimes of the Bolsheviki are proving their worth at Weston, W. Va. Comrade J. W. Sprigg is selling them and placing the profits in the press fund. He sends a dollar this week.

Another tireless worker is F. A. Habig of Martins Ferry, O. He sends in two dollars which resulted from his agitation for a Party owned press.

ORGANIZE!

By Frank S. Hansen.

Yes, organize! But organize what? If any one was in the Socialist movement fifteen years ago, and saw the strong, active, vigorous organizing that went on for a few years following that time, he knows, or ought to know what it means to organize without having something more to the organization than mere parliamentary form. See what happened to the party, and also the movement from 1916. The ''Leaders'' of the ''organization'' paralyzed it to death. And why? They certainly had organization ad infinitum, so far as they had anything. That is just the trouble.

They had organization only. Mere form. Just meetings. Of course, according to, parliamentary rules. Then more meetings!

They had nothing to give their form substance, life, power. They had neither political power, nor industrial power, nor intellectual power, nor even power to mold public opinion. Why bless your soul, the party didn't have an opinion. Only the omniscient, infallible ''leaders'' had anything of that kind. All that the rest of us had was just organization. Just mere, hollow, lifeless organization.

Now, what is it that is manifesting itself in the present unprecedented growth of Socialist ideas among the workers? Organization? No!! It is education, and education that they have received in spite of a lifeless organization ridden to death by a lot of organized pifflers and pilferers at the top.

Education—is the very thing that we did not have when the ''organization'' lovers were supreme. Compare the two. We had organization then without education. Education is the basis of our activity in the present encouraging demand for a change, and we are practically without that formal, fiendish ''organization'' which our brothers at the central offices are clamoring for. Which produces the greater power?

The education could be a great deal more efficient, but that only adds to the force of the argument for education. We are not objecting to organization, (with something more to the organization than an empty shall game with the nickels flowing all in one direction and nothing coming back to the slaves to get them closer to what they must have — Industrial Freedom.

Isn't the present movement organizing itself quite satisfactorily? On one hand we have hundreds of thousands voting together, on a basis of knowing what they want, sufficiently to score the Food Hogs and their political tools into a sanctified fit. On the other hand we have other hundreds of thousands united in One Big Union sufficiently strong to force an eight-hour day where A. F. of L. organization even with it's most strenuous efforts and with all the glossed-over glory of Gompersism failed to squeeze it or coax it from, the masters.

What is it that forms the backbone of this mass movement on both the political and the industrial field? Why, Education, of course,—in the knowledge that, in the language of the Communist Manifesto, ''The governments of today are nothing but committees of the ruling class for attending to its common affairs,'' and in the language of the Preamble to the I. W. W's. Constitution, ''The slaves and their masters have nothing in common.'' In other words, education in the facts of the class struggle coupled with knowledge of the principles involved in the Law of Surplus Value.

The ''organization'' fiend seems to think that the worker han't sense enough to vote and strike and fight for his own interests even if he is educated to know his interests and the interests of his class. These people are mostly ''great'' men. Every real worker who becomes ''educated'' knows that the keynote of organization is education,—that education of the right kind produces organization, and organization of the right kind, too.

What has made Darwin's work supreme over that of Moses? Organization? No, with a capital N. Education did it. Educate the workers, and they won't need paid ''great'' men to stand around on the eminences and shout ''organization'' at them.

Give us more study-classes. More teachers. The only way to get more teachers is to make them out of your own material. The study-class is the way to do it.

Press Fund Notes

Comrade B. Weighaus of Newport, Ky., regrets that he cannot ''talk''. Never mind comrade. The three dollars you sent for the printing press will talk for you on hundreds of thousands of Ohio Socialists in a short while from now.

Comrade J. Abazorious of Youngstown, O. sends ''$2 now and a dollar every month''. We need more like him.

Comrade Chas. Kritzell of Fremont, O. sends us a list containing $12. for the press fund. This amount was collected by Chas. Klinek, who is ever on the job for socialism.

Comrade Genevieve Zrnc is here again. This time with a list totaling $4.00. This is not the first list which comrade Zrnc has callected for the press fund. We don't believe it will be the last.

By the way, comrade, if you hav'nt circulated a press fund list among your shop mates, better do so; if you have done so, do it again.

That ''Donation Box'' of Local Zanesville's is still working we are pleased to testify. Another remittance from comrade Secretary, W. N. Patterson of 4.74 makes the fourth remittance from this source. As a press fund gatherer we recommend the ''Donation Box.''

Another list received from comrade C. E. Murphy of Hamilton, O. The amount is $6.00.

Thru comrade Allen Cook, comrade D. T. Mlinac of Canton sends in a list containing $12.75. The moral is: get a list in circulation!

The Miner's March

The atmosphere is heavy, a dense fog fills the air the Illinois Miners across the ''Official Family'' of misappropriation of funds, that the ''Automatic Penalty Clause'' is now void due to the third party (United States Fuel Administration) having withdrawn. Refuse to pay the ''Mooney Fine'' demand no discrimination, new wage agreement; (no more contract) the ''High Cost of Living'' a convention to adjust these differences immediately. Those are the demands. A convention is held over the head of State President Farrington, Farrington denounced called ''Kaizer'' Autocrat, and misuser of their funds, no relief in sight from Farrington, the fight is on. ''We will organize an army and move them south'' shouts one of the Belleville Miners and carry our message over the state demanding other districts to do like wise, mush unrest in the crowd, where is ''Coffey''? where is Dan Slinger, where is Lami, where is Dave, etc.? Arrangements are made, wires are sent to the outgoing towns, Mascoutah, Ill. first to respond with eighty volunters. We will march tomorrow, August 30th, 2 P. M. Mascoutah arrives, the boys greet them with cheers provisions is the cry; the committee is busy comes the answer; a name for the ''Army.'' ''Messengers of the rank and file'' is agreed upon, and thus goes marching forward the first army of the proletariate organized to bring more democracy in industry in Illinois.

Dan Slinger of Glen Carbon, Ill., Lieutenant Colonel as they named him at the head. They're off to Freeburg, Ill., supplies follow in auto, sausage, bread and coffee for supper, Mass meeting held. Freeburg captured, comes the report of the army moving south to New Athens, Ill., then on to Lenzburg, to Marissa all victorious. What is going on in the rear? A supply house has been established, the Army has now grown to about four hundred, massage carriers are on their way bringing in orderes for supplies, telegrams and telephones bring news, Supplies are made ready forwarded by train and auto, 100 lbs. bacon, 100 lbs. Ham, 165 lbs. Navies, 100 lbs. Coffee, 200 loaft bread, ten pounds pepper 100 unions etc., also twenty gallon coffee pot, two three foot pans, angle irons and tubs, medical supplies and the many other necessory articles. From what source come the funds?

Appeals are made ''Give until it hurts'' Unions send in from 100.00 to two hundred are more each, individuals are donating, the advancing army makes appeal for funds as it goes along at the ''Mass Meeting''. The cry goes out ''Stay loyal until the Boys come home'' the women now are helping in the strike. News comes the army is invading the enemy territory, they are now through Coulterville and heading into Pinckneyville. The opposition is now determined to stop the advancing army ''thugs'', negroes, are hired out of Duquoin. Ill. with gat in each hand to stop ''Message Carries''. The army is met near Pinckneyville and ordered to halt and return, they have wallked considerable and are tierd, they ask to rest and are cursed in return with threat of life.

Their lips are parchod they ask for water, even this is denied, their feet are blistered they must have rest, one old man of sixty-two fatigued, sits down beside the road, he is kicked, cursed and forced to go on. Who headed this mob that disturbed those Message Carriers so peacefully on the way? the State Attorney of Perry County, the Deputy Sheriff, who else? U. M. W. of A. officials in the crowd. Is it possible? Dan Slinger arrested and held at Pinckneyville Ill., Coffey on his way down taken from auto and thrown into jail at Coulterville. Supply wagon seized (temporary confiscation of property) and Striking Miners run over county line. Coffey speaks to U. M. W. of A. at time of arrest. ''What will be your answer when I meet you (a brother?) on the convention floor and I point to you as a $6.30 man, with a bunch of thugs? he backed away (Collins was his name).

The next day arrangements made for Slingers release out on $200.00 bond, wagon and supplies regained, Coffey held without charge, when the chief of police was asked what the charges were about twelve hours after the arrest, he stated ''You will have to wait until I find out''. Coffey released, no charges.

Pinckneyville Miners go Dan Slingers bond. He speaks at Pinckneville tonight then they will be off for Christopher.

But what value has this to the social revolutionist? This is the stage of which Lenin speaks, the ''stage of education'' it is among other things the asquirement of knowledge of supplying an army of about 500; it is Mass Movement.

A Letter From Atlanta

Comrades—

At the request of I am sending you this letter, we all hope it will do some good. The conditions here are awful, especially for political prisoners—rape fiends bank wreckers—moral perverts and Others of that class of course are given every consideration. There are many things done here that our friends on the outside can help us with, it does not do much good to talk it over with ourselves, the revolutionist no doubt know all that is to be know of these hell holes. Can you not write to your friends, get them to all write litters to the Att'y Gen'l—Dep't. of Justice, President Wilson, telling them of the awful conditions that exist here, that may shame them into treating their political prisoners at least as good as they claimed Germany, Russia and anarchist Mexico would treat their prisoners?

The food here is rotten but the officials in charge of the food do not have to eat it, and the convict that cooks it does not eat it either, as he has his own special meals cooked to his satisfaction at the expense of the multitude. Class distinction here just the same as outside, and theng deny it just the same as the parasite does outside. Sixteen hours in a dirty stuffy cell, how's that for De-Mocracy? Medical attention a worse fake then was the Police League in Paris—or its later born infamous brother the Leauge of Nations. I am in the S. B. camp having contracted the consumption after I was arrested in Los Angeles and thrown in their ''Louse Ranch'' (County Jail) where I was denied the service of the government doctor or allowed to have my own visit me although I had the pneumonia and influenza. After arriving at McNeils Island Pen I had 5 hemmorages that made me unconscious for several hours. Had 4 in Los Angeles fail pryor to these in McNeils.

Priyor to may incartination in L. A. Jail I was in the most vigorous health contracted T. B. owing to no medical attention and damp filthy condition of jail. Have been over 1 year without medical attention or proper food (I have offered to buy food, but that is against the ''rules.'') I was sentenced for 10 years..... In Leavenworth Pen. also a U. S. institution one can by fruit , nuts etc.—even in McNeils one can buy fruit twice a month, here you can not buy it at all and they dont furnish any. I am over 40 years old, have never eaten any meat in my life. I have tried to get the doctor here and the warden to let me buy my own fruit nuts etc. if the govn't. won't buy it, but the doctor says I have to eat the food here. T. B. camp is located in tents in prison yard camp about 150 X 250 feet about 15 patients here.

There are a few vegetables here in camp, some of the boys cook for me occassionly which is my sole diet. When I first came here some of the boys used to bring milk down from the dining room, after it would sour, they would make it into buttermilk for me .... now the doctor will not permit the boys to bring it. The fresh vegetables will soon be gone then guess I will have to live on Southern Hospitality (a sample of which I have explained to you). Of course being a Mexican makes it very hard for me to get any assistance from the American comrades outside, it may be however that I have never got in connection with the right ones being a personal stranger to all Socialists practically in America.

I would feel guilty of cowardice to my American comrades if anything would happen like this to an American Comrade in Mexico, without my protest against such an outrage... I don't expect you to do anything rash but I think a few ''shots'' in the way of letters to the officials that you let rule your land is not asking too much. Comrades here insisted I write you. I am glad to make your aquaintance, and hope the Communists will accomplish that which the Socialist party failed to accomplish, through its harboring traitors to the cause after they were found out.

Your Comrade for a world of no exploitation.

—A Comrade.

Looking for new recruits is the job of comrade F. Bradkovich of Benwood, W. Va. has picked out for himself. He orders sub cards and, to make certain the continuation of the Ohio Socialist, he sends a dollar for the plant.

Every good Local secretary will see to it that the members keep their subscriptions paid up. A gentle hunch from our secretaries will help to put many a comrade way ahead in his subscriptioin. Do it next meeting, comrade secretary.

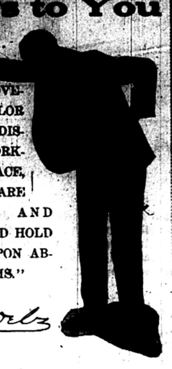
Debs says to You



''THE SOCIALIST MOVEMENT KNOWS NO COLOR LINE AND NO SEX DISCRIMINATION. ALL WORKERS, REGARDLESS OF RACE, NATIONALITY OR SEX, ARE EQUALLY WELCOME, AND ALL ARE RECEIVED AND HOLD THEIR MEMBERSHIP UPON ABSOLUTELY EQUAL TERMS.''

Eugene V. Debs

Debs Goes to Prison

By DAVID KARSNER

CHAPTER FOUR

Eugene Victor Debs awoke shortly before 6 o'clock Monday morning in Cell 51 in the south wing of the penitentiary at Moundville, where he may spend 10 years of his closing life. Debs said he slept well. If he did so, it was because he was physically exhausted after the outrageous trip of the day before from Cleveland to Moundsville, about 150 miles, on trolley cars.

Sunday night, about 11 o'clock, Warden Joseph Z. Terrell permitted J. Louis Engdahl, Alfred Wagenknecht and myself to say good night to Debs in his prison cell. We walked the entire length of the south wing of the prison and up one flight of white-washed iron steps to second tier. The warden and the prison physician were with us. Debs had been preparing for bed. He was partly undressed. With one hand gripping the steel bars of his cage, he extended the other through the grating and bid us each good night.

''It is all right, boys; it is all right. I am going to sleep the sleep of the just to-night. Don't worry for me; don't worry about me. We know what we are about. Good night, Comrades; good night. I shall be comfortable here.''

We slipped away from Cell 51. Throughout the prison arose the customary chorus of coughing. At that hour in prison, coughing is usual. The men are just going to sleep, their lungs are rotting, and they must cough. The tickling sensation in their throats won't let them sleep for several hours after they retire on their steel bunks. That is tuberculosis. Sometimes in the incipient stage, sometimes well advanced. But tuberculosis in a prison is as usual as the steel bars.

Debs really did seem to be in fairly good health and excellent spirits. Not for one moment did he waver, not for one second. It was just 9:45 o'clock Sunday night when he passed through the great iron doors to the prison.

A few moments before he was walking slowly down the sidewalk with United States Marshal Charles W. Lapp, who brought him to prison from Cleveland.

Debs was talking softly, but I heard what he said to the Marshal.

''It is all right, Marshall,'' 'Gene was saying; ''you have treated me like a gentleman all the way through. I am glad to have met you, and I should not wish you to ever feel that you have done me a wrong by bringing me here. I understand just why I am going to prison. My Comrades, they all know and understand; it is all right; everything is all right.''

Debs' long arm slowly stretched across the broad shoulders of the man who was taking him to prison. Those Christians who talk of the second coming of Christ might have been pleased to have witnessed this little scene in Moundsville. They would have seen a real, a living, a breathing, a human Christ, going to his crucifixion between two bodyguards. An hour later they would have seen him in Gethsemane, smiling and serene, awaiting the worst; maybe looking for the best; expecting nothing.

Debs in prison to-day, actually behind bars, despite the hue and cry that went up over America among radicals when he was convicted on September 12 last at Cleveland. They said then; ''They'll never send Debs to prison. They're afraid to lock up Our 'Gene. They won't dare to do it.''

Idle twaddle, mere words, and mostly meaningless, save for the wells of sympathy and compassion and camaradeire they expressed. But words won't unlock prison doors.

There is an automatic turntable that Debs passed through, taking him from the ''outside'' and placing him on the ''inside''. That turntable works by organized power. Mere words won't budge it, and if the Socialists of America want 'Gene Debs to rot and die in prison, if they want his flesh to curl up on his bones, let them go on talking, talking. Let them decide whether it would be best to withhold recognition from the Bavarian Soviet, or let them decide to send greetings to Hungary. In the meanwhile, Debs will be in prison and all the other class war prisoners will still be in prison in America. If they are to get out, there must be behind them organized power.

During the sixth lap of the journey from Cleveland, Debs turned around for a moment. He was smiling sweetly. ''If we were to engage in satire, I would say how strange it is that I have been organizing labor for 40 years and now am being taken to prison by union men.''

It was a crushing blow. It had not occured to any of us in just that way; but it was literally true. The conductors, and brakemen, and firemen, and engineers, and motormen—all union men—helped to take Debs to prison last night.

Immediately after we had entered the prison, the Marshal ''presented the body of Eugene V. Debs to the state prison at Moundsville.''

Marshall Lapp introduced his celebrated prisoner to the Warden.

'Gene extended his hand and, in that half-stooping manner of his that is so characteristic of him, he grasped the Warden's hand. ''I am so glad to meet you, Warden,'' said Debs. The Warden stiffened up a little. Maybe he did not like that manifestation of friendliness. He had been used to meeting skulking men who don't shake hands when they enter prison. Maybe he thought Debs was trying to ''get in right'' from the start.

Debs was not trying to do or to be anything anything but a decent, simple, human being. It seemed unusual only because we are totally unaccustomed to meeting loveliness and beauty of the kind that Debs radiates.

''Well, you are a tall man, Mr. Debs.''

''Yes,'' replied Debs. ''Six feet.''

The Warden's manner toward his prisoner was a stern kindliness. You meet it often in reformist circles, and frequently in churches. It is the sort of kindliness that says to you: ''You are a lovely fellow. You have brought much happiness to this wicked old planet, but for your pains I shall send you to the stake for your own good.'' That is just they way the Warden impressed me.

There were hasty handshakes between the Marshal and Debs. A deputy who accompanied the Marshall was anxious to get the job done and return home. It was all a day's work with him.

''Step this way, Mr. Debs,'' commanded the Warden. The little group that accompanied him to the prison—Arthur Baur, of Terre Haute; Louis Engdahl of Chicago, and Alfred Wagenknecht, and myself, were standing between the Warden's office and the turntable through which Debs must soon pass.

Smiling, ''with head erect, with spirit untamed and with soul unconquerable—a flaming revolutionist,'' Eugene Victor Debs, ''Our 'Gene'', kissed each of us. There was just a moment's turning back of his head, a smile was on his face—his lean, tired face—as he stepped into the turntable, which is inclosed in steel grating. A trusty turned a lever and wheels began to grind. The turntable swung itself around automatically to the entrance to the ''inside world.''

The Warden called some guard or trusty, by name. In a moment the Warden returned.

He was cordial and bade us come into his office and smoke his cigars. Baur was pretty well shaken by the experience. He did not linger, but went back to Terre Haute. As he passed through the iron gates there was an oath on his lips. I knew what it said, and I knew what it meant.

''You gentlemen are all friends of Mr. Debs, I suppose,'' queried the Warden, whose head is bald, like Debs'. He seems to be a young man, maybe 45, clean cut, like a self-respecting politician who wants to do something for the ''worthy poor.'' You know the type. We all admitted our friendship and our interest.

''Mr. Debs will be well taken care of here. Of course, we are not going to have Debs on exhibition. We've got no monkey house here, but Debs and I will get along all right. I know he is a man of great character and force and intelligence, and I mean to respect him as such. You may say to his friends that Debs will be well taken care of.''

We asked the Warden about what he proposed to do with 'Gene, to what kind of work he would assign him. ''Oh, Debs is too old to work here. There isn't anything he could do, and, besides, we have enough men here to do all the work that is required.'' The Warden said before that Debs was the 500th prisoner at the present time. His number would be Convict No. 2253.

ANOTHER CORNER TURNED

The Social Revolution in America has definitely turned a corner in its march toward realization. Theories which have developed from the changeing social relations are being given definite form and programs for their realization are being mapped out and promulgated by millions of workers as solutions for the particular evils which it is believed they will correct.

As proof of this turning of vast numbers toward a definite goal distinct from any previous one set by labor, we may point to first, the Plumb plan for operation of the railways. This plan of ownership, control and management of the transportation system of the country is revolutionary in that it gives the actual workers in the industry a definite and prescribed part in the management. The worker is given his say-so in the conduct of the business. It is a revolutionary change in that the principle of private ownership of a basic social need is displaced by government ownership with a limited democracy in management.

Whatever may be said against the Plumb plan, and there is very much to said on that score, we here view it as a REVOLUTIONARY TENDENCY. This tendency toward revolutionary thot and action is a new thing in America and is a welcome token of the rising revolutionary tide upon the shores of proletarian thot. That large groups of organized workers are giving support to it is sufficient proof of the universality of the change that has taken place in the views of millions of workers upon questions of private versus social control of the necessities by which all men live.

The nationalization of mines which was approved by the miners convention at Cleveland is another indication of this trend of thot and action among the masses. Coming as it does immediately after the miners of Great Britain have delivered an ultimatum for nationalizaton of mines, it is proof positive of the swiftness with which revolutionary movements are progressing. It is no coincidence that American miners follow so soon in the footsteps of those of England. Revolutionary movements in England are certain to have profound impression upon workers here, more so than those taking place in any other country.

These movements of two great bodies of labor away from the beaten paths but express the growing revolutionary element in our social life. The months ahead are pregnant with possibilities. Labor is awakening. It is feeling its way. The rank and file are on the alert. It refuses to be led, but continually challenges its old leaders. It is beginning to rely upon itself, to feel its strength and is cultivating the courage to carry its convention into practice.

The SOCIAL REVOLUTION in America has definitely turned a corner and is marching headlong toward the realization of a better world for the workers.

IF LA FAYETTE CAME BACK

No name rests more honorably or securely in the annals of American history than that of Marquis de LaFayette. His unselfish devotion to the cause of American independence fills a sublime page in our national history and a place of deep respect in the hearts of Americans.

On September 6th, 1757, he was, born, a notable with a princely fortune and at thirteen became an orphan. He married at the age of sixteen. He chose the carreer of his father and entered the Guards.

He was nineteen and a captain of dragoons when the American colonies declared their idependence of England. "At the first news of this quarrell," he wrote in his memoirs, "my heart was enrolled in it." In this short sentence is revealed a key to his character for his whole life from this moment was dedicated to the cause of liberty and the uplifting of the oppressed.

In spite of protests of friends and against the orders of the French king, he surreptiously slipped out of France in disguise, caught a ship in a Spanish port and set sail for the land he was to honor with his ability, his finances and his great example. Tho pursued by two English crusiers his voyage terminated successfully at Georgetown S. C. two months later. He entered the American army upon two stipulations—that he should receive no pay and that he should act as a volunteer. He met Washington and became his friend, and an active participating in the cause of American liberty.

La Fayette visited America twice after the Revolution was won as the guest of the nation.

We wonder if he would receive such honor if he came back today. We don't think he would. More than likely he would be called a "radical" and would be warned against by our itinerant politicians and socalled statesmen.

The anniversary of La Fayette's birthday has lately been justly celebrated in this country. Wreathes were laid upon monuments erected to his memory, laudatory speeches were made and honors were showered upon him.

But we think that could La Fayette have been present in the flesh he would have peered beneath this mockery of his name. For be it known, La Fayette spent five years in Prussian and Austrian prisons as a political prisoner because of his activities in the French Revolution. Because of his loyalty to the cause of humanity and progress he suffered as many are suffering in Amethe cause of humanity and progress he suffered as many are suffering in America today—in American bastiles. If LaFayette came back to America to-day that he trod. We imagine that his impetuous spirit would cry out against this mockery of democracy that uses his name and fame to shield its mailed fist.

The same love of humanity, of hatred of injustice, of unselfish devotion to a great human principle that ruled life also rules that of his kinsman, Eugen V. Debs, now a victim of those who rule America, and jail America's best — in the name of Democracy.

If La Fayette came back to-day he would seek out those who have carried on the fight he fought, who suffer persecution, he would not be found with those who desecrate his name by imprisoning the advocates of real democracy. La Fayette's last speech in 1834 in the Chamber of Deputies was on behalf of Polish political refugees. If he could come back to America to-day his voice would ring out again in denunciation of the injustice that is being done our political prisoners. The hands that served democracy for so many years on this soil and that of his native land would reach thru the prison bars and strike in comradely greeting those of Debs, of Kate O'Hare, of the I. W. W.'s of Leavenworth and the under sea dungeons of Alcatraz.

With our Liberators

The Liberators are growing daily. With every mail come signed application blanks for membership in The Liberators, the most numerous, most aggressive organization in existence that is fighting for the Liberation of ALL political prisoners.

In every mail come donations that have been contributed to help in the agitation for their release. From Mr. and Mrs. Fred Thompson, Barberton, O., comes $2; Comrade J. S. Austrauskas, Wesleyville, Pa., sends a list amounting to $4.40. Horace C. Shank of Hamilton sends in $, contributed by Comrades. R. Trycyk of Leechburg, Pa., has collected $5.00 for the Liberation.

"Enclosed find money order for $14.50 for the Liberation Fund. The slip was handed to me to get what I could on it and this is what I got. C. M. Savage, Crookesville, O." Krautwater, Springfield, O. $6.05; Jno Bamman, Girard, Kans., David Scheintaub, Toledo $6; W. S. Bennett, Sault Ste Marie $4.

REMEMBER!

We speak to you from jail today,
Two hundred union men,
We're here because the bosses' laws
Bring slavery again.
We make a pledge—no tyrant might
Can make us bend a knee,
Come on you workers, organize
And fight for liberty!

Yours for the revolution,
C. W. ANDERSON,

Liberators Army Offers Free Leaflets

The dollars contributed to the Liberation Fund have been put to work. They have printed thousands of leaflets which are now offered FREE to those who desire to assist in the liberation of all political prisoners.

The leaflet offered FREE is the "Open Letter to President Wilson", written by Jos. W. Sharts, one of the Liberator Army attorneys.

How many of these leaflets can you distribute? If you can only distribute ten, write us for that many. If you can distribute 100, send for that number. DO NOT SEND FOR MORE THAN YOU CAN DISTRIBUTE, for we want to make every leaflet count.

This offer of free leaflets to assist in the liberation of Debs and other prisoners is made possible by the ever growing Army of Liberators and their conscientious labors in securing contributions for the Liberation Fund.

Other offers of free literature will be made from time to time and as the fund allows.

Hundreds of thousands of leaflets must be distributed to awaken the working class to their class interests.

Help in this first distribution of this leaflet offered you FREE.

How Were Ohio Delegates Instructed?

The state referendum which instructed Ohio delegates to the Emergency National Convention, carried overwhelmingly.

Ohio delegates were instructed to go to the Emergency National Convention of the Socialist Party and if that convention proved reactionary, if it refused to seat the ousted Left Wing factions, to then go to the September 1st convention?

What September 1st convention was referred to when this resolution instructing the Ohio delegates was placed before the state convention?

The September 1st convention referred to was NOT that called by the seceding Russian Federation group, which bolted the National Left Wing Conference to organize a party of its own.

The September 1st convention referred to was that which was ordered called by the majority of the National Left Wing Conference and which the national council elected at this conference was to make arrangements for.

Ohio delegates obeyed instructions to the letter.

They obeyed the call of the newly elected and revolutionary National Executive Committee in attending the Emergency National Convention called to order by it after the Germer convention had ousted them with the help of the Chicago police. They obeyed the mandate of the National Left Wing Conference and arranged for a September 1st convention as per its instructions.

That there are two Left Wing parties in the field at present is entirely the fault of the seceding and bolting Russian Fderation minority group.

The minority group wanted a convention of its own. It organized the Communist Party.

The majority group which obeyed the mandates of the newly elected National Executive Committee and the majority delegates attending the National Left Wing Conference, organized the Communist Labor Party and immediately entered negotiations for unity.

The Communist Labor Party is the true and logical outgrowth of the Left Wing fight within the Socialist Party.

All Ohio locals are invited to affiliate with this party, which all but one of the Ohio delegates helped to organize.

rope starve but all you offer is your bayonets. You take from the tiny mouths of suckling babes the last drop that would save their lives. Your system is bankrupt, your economic structure wrecked, you have nothing to give, no remedy to offer, but still you cling and hang. Get off our backs, and there will be no poverty, no wars, no high cost of living. Get down and let the workers who mind the machines, who till the soil, who create the wealth; own and enjoy the fruits of their toil. Your hypocricy cries to the very heavens, for whilst you scream freedom you are stabbing our Russian comrades in the back. Get out of Russia, you Incarnation of greed. Get out. Let them tend their own affairs. Haven't they fed, and bled for you long enough. Didn't they pile their dead high, in your war for the Dardanelles? Didn't you satisfy yourself, with the tons of thousands, that you sent over the frozen steppes to Siberia? With the use of your knout? With your Bloody Fridays? Russia will build the first Communist Society if you do not murder her, during the struggle of transition. Your Satanic Majesty, you've played your part, now make your exit. Your tyranny is unequalled. Our class is suffering bitterly under your whip. You have sent Our Gene to jail. You have sent him for life, for ten years to him, means life. O'Hare, Haywood, Wells, thousends more are sinking in your bastiles. You are torturing them, as in days of old. You know Mooney did not throw the bomb, but you hold him still in jail. You are deporting men and women simply because they challenge your pirate rule. But listen, as you told us. The Twighlight of your reign has come. We are educating and organizing. We are getting together. We will forget your national boundaries, we will unite as an International working class. We will be free. Your bolts and bars cannot confine us, nor your whips our spirits tame. History is as much with us as it is against you. As your power decays ours grows stronger. The jail doors will yet be opened, the Commonwealth of the Working class is as sure as the rising sun. Long Live the Solidarity of Labor.

His Majesty trembles, as he yells —
"Twenty Years."

Revolutionary Manners, American and Russian

Sir: In 1776 an active, organized, and disrespectable minority was able in America then, as in Russia today, to overthrow the constituted political authority and to direct a revolution along the Bolsheviki lines. Take the following account of the American Bolsheviki of 1776-87 done in twentieth century style a la Russe:

From lawless persecution of the antis by irresponsible mobs, the Bolsheviki had advanced to a control by revolutionary committees, who drove them from the community, denouncig them as "incorrigibles", and forbidding them food or comfort. Then the provincial conventions took them in hand, and finally the district soviets and the Soviet Congress. The aim of persecution seemed at first to be the conversion of the anti; but as the war advanced a spirit of revenge and hate was manifest. The Bolsheviki forgot that these men had been their respected neighbors, and they seemed to believe them born with a natural frocity, like the savage.

The refugees at least escaped further personal persecution, though they left their property at the mercy of the Bolsheviki; but the suspected antis—those who did not openly take the British side, though they would not declare against them—were constant sufferers. They were early deprived of the right to vote, for they were not citizens of the new state, the Bolsheviki argued, if the refused the oath of allegiance. When they tried to vote they were fined or imprisoned. All offices of trust or profit were forbidden them. In the courts of law not even the rights of a foreigner were left them might serve on a jury, and invalid, and their property was at the mercy of their fellow-men. None of them migth serve on a jury, and lawyers who refused the oath of allegiance to the Bolshevik cause were denied pratice in the courts.... That the rabble should have made all practical justice impossible for the antis was an inevitable result of the war, but the refusal by the soviets of even theoretical justice shows how deep-seated political hate had become,.... The laws did not stop here, but placed an interdict upon all speaking or writing against the Bolshevik cause. (The) Congress (of Soviets) urged this .... and the states acted so readily that it was soon truthfully said that "there is more liberty in Turkey than in the dominions of Congress.".... No word was tolerated against the raising of a Soviet army, and not a whisper derogatory to the Soviet money. Undoubted Bolsheviki might safely refuse the paper money, but a suspected anti became the sink for all this financial refuse.... Let him protest, and a violent attack swept away all his wealth at once. He was treated as a "disaffected and evilminded person" who had entered a "gigantic plot" to depreciate the Soviet money.

In the midst of this democratic revolution the liberty of the individual was hedged on every side. The presence of many spies made the identification of strangers very important, hence every traveler, whether gentleman, express carrier, or common beggar, was forced to keep a certificate of character from Congress or some local committee. Innkeepers, ferryman, and stage-drivers were fined if they failed to ask for it. Reputed antis could not get these certificates and were in consequence tied to their homes.... Whole anti districts were at times "rooted out," that those "abominable pests of society" might be prevented from mischief. "Not to crush these serpents before their rattles are grown," wrote General L———, "would be ruinous."

During their enforced journeys to exile, the antis asserted that they were treated with great cruelty, even driven like herds of cattle to distant driven vinces.... Armed bands of rangers scoured the country in every direction in search of "traitors," bringing their victims to special committees for trial. In general, the provinces which were the seates of active made the most rigorous application of the treason laws.

Not only were the refugees forever exiled if attained with treason, but they had no property with which to resume the old life, even if permitted to return unmolested to their former dwelling-places. Every vestigate of their possesions had been taken from them, at first by a nibbling system of fines and special taxation, and later by the "all-devouring rage for confiscation."

It may be rather startling to turn to such a modernized version of the standard authority on the American Revolution (C. H. Van Tyne, 'The American Revolution, in The American Nation: A History, vol. 9, p. 255 et seq.). It is presented verbatim with all the changes indicated by italicized OHIO SoC 3 3' 3 etoain words. The Whigs were obviously the Bolsheviki of that day; the Tories or Loyalists were the antis; while the Continental Congress, with its entirely extra-legal and revolutionary authority, was the forerunner of the modern Soviet the world of free work and free thought.

"'The youth, being the most active and revolutionary part of the working class, marches in the advance column of the proletarian revolution. The youth from the working class districts knows from experience the bitterness of the struggle for education and individual happiness; he is filled with hatred against capitalism and prepared to fight for the emancipation of the proletariat.

"'The strength of the working class lies in its organizations. The youth of this class, being its most important part, must form its own organization, based on the principle of complete independence. In these leagues the youth must become familiar with the principles of Communism, go thru the school of revolutionary struggle, and build up the new proletarian civilization.

"'The Young Peoples Communist League of Russia is organized to unite the revolutionary youth of this country; it is a part of the Young Peoples International.

"The league, having for its aim to provide for the youth opportunity of independent action in free organizations, is in its revolutionary activities completely in harmony with the Communist Party, (The Bolsheviki). It declares its independent position, but works hand-in-hand with other working class organizations—in common with them striving for the triumph of Communism.'

"The purpose of the league is expressed in the following terms:

"'1. To carry on the extensive propaganda for the principles of Communism among the young workers and peasants.

"'2. To encourage the active participation of the young people in the building up of Russia and the inauguration of a new order of society.

"'3. To give to the youth among workers and peasants a clear conception of the foundations of the proletarian world philosophy and civilization, in order to develop them into powerful, class-concious fighters for the ideals of the proletariat.

"'4. To defend the rights and economic interests of the youth.

"'5. To carry on propaganda among the working-class youth in all countries for the ideas of proletarian dictatorship and the purpose of the Young Peoples Communist League.'

"Briefly and concisely, the movement states its purpose. The work of diseminating these ideas is carried on at a speed that completely overshadows the movement in western Europe (and of course, in America). In the beginning of the present year a public speaking school was organized in Moscow. It continued for 2½ months and was attended by 170 youngsters—all of whom are now doing organization work. A new course began last June with about the same number of students. (By the time this is read, these, too, will be "soap-boxing").

"'Extend our greetings to the young Communists in the rest of Europe,' were the parting words, 'and tell them that on the amount of work the youth is prepared to perform in the revolutionary struggle depends whether Socialism shall emerge victorious in the present contest'."

What an interesting sidelight on the state of affairs in Russia! What a beautiful picture of the Russian youth! Young Russia is true to its traditions! With this information on the caliber of the Russian youth it becomes less difficult to understand why the country has so long maintained itself against overwhelming odds. Where there is life there is hope; where there is youth there is success.

Little need be added to the message from Russia. The Y. P. S. L. in this country is shamefully behind its sister organizations in Europe—much to the disgrace of the American youth. Since the national convention last May the members have fallen into a deadening lethargy. Some leagues do not even circulate the official magazine, altho it is published but once a month. May the example set by our Russian comrades guide us in our work for winning the working class boys and girls of America for Socialism. May the greetings from Russia pass on, inspiring us with courage and determination, not to rest, not to give up, but to keep on at increased speed till the youth of this country is gathered under the Red Banner of the International Proletariat.

Join Us

The time for indecision and hesitation is past.
The time for decisive action is here.
And the question is—WHERE DO YOU STAND?

If you stand with the social patriots, with the Berne International, with the Scheidemann Socialists of all lands, then this appeal to JOIN does not interest and indeed, it is not written for you.

The chasm which seperates us is too great. We have nothing in common. Our path lies toward workers' control whereas yours lies in the direction of petit bourgeoisie compromise.

• • • •

This is in the main addressed to the Left Wing Socialists formerly affiliated with the Socialist Party.

WHERE DO YOU STAND!

We know that the organization of two communist parties is an unfortunate event.

But we will place the blame where the blame belongs. And it belongs with those who organized the Communist Party and not with those who organized the Communist Labor Party.

The convention of the Communist Labor Party was a direct outgrouth of the majority decision of the Left Wing National Conference, which met at New York and which delegates from all parts of the United States attended. The vast majority of these delegates decided to work WITHIN the Socialist Party for Left Wing control of that party up to the Emergency National Convention, and if control of the convention was lost, to then meet in special convention on September 1st.

A little minority at this Left Wing National Conference, including the delegates from the Russian Federation branches, demanded the immediate organization of a new party, and also called for a convention to meet September 1st for this purpose.

This meant that in the very beginning, long before any delegates reached Chicago, two months before the Chicago conventions convened, a split in the Left Wing had occured, the Russian Federation, a minority going its way, calling its own September 1st convention, and the great majority of the Left Wing going its own way and also calling a September 1st convention.

This split in the Left Wing, because of the unorganizable character of the Russian comrades, occured about the time when state organizations were electing delegates to attend the Emergency National Convention of the Socialist Party. These delegates understood that should the Emergency National Convention of the Socialist Party prove reactionary, that then they were to attend the convention called by the majority Left Wing faction.

• • • •

We were unsuccessful. The Russian comrades do not want unity, they want unconditional surrender. We claim that majorities shall rule. The Russian comrades claim that the minority shall dictate. There's where the whole trouble lies.

We charge the Communist Party with the organization of a third convention in Chicago, which eventually placed two communist parties in the field. It was the Communist Party convention which was called by secessionists, by a minority group, which is therefore responsible for the present split in the Left Wing. And it is the Communist Party which intentionally prolongs this split because it refuses to debate the quetion of unity.

The Communist Labor Party does not assume a "holier than thou" attitude. But we do DEMAND unity. We do DEMAND majority rule. That is, majority rule as between comrades who are of one principle. And we DEMAND that the national officers of the Communist Party meet the national officers of the Communist Labor Party at once, to arrive at a basis for unity.

Until that time we call upon all locals and branches to join the Communist Labor Party. By doing so you strengthen our demand for unity. The membership strength of both parties, as they stand today, is about equal. The Communist Party has a membership of about 30,000 of which 25,000 belong to language federations. The Communist Labor Party has a membership of about 30,000, of which 20,000 belong to English speaking locals. By the very need of one for the other, of the language groups, for the English membership and vice versa, the two bodies should AND MUST get together. You can assist in this by joining the Communist Labor Party and help it make a fight for unity.

• • • •

This issue of the official organ contains the Communist Labor Party platform, program and constitution. Discuss these documents at the next meeting of your local or branch, deliberate upon this question of unity, AND THEN ACT.

Do not assume a neutral attitude.

STRENGTHEN OUR HAND FOR UNITY!

SENECA COUNTY PICNICS.

Local Seneca Co. held their annual picnic Aug. 24 at Meadow Brook park. The comrades brought their baskets and enjoyed a picnic party under the trees. At 2:30 comrade Hollenbaugh, chairman of the day, called the comrades to order and introduce comrade Scott Wilkins who addressed them for 30 minutes talking on the high cost of living, the signs of the times, and the approaching changes set in motion by the world war.

He was followed by comrade Ruthenberg, principal speaker of the day, who spoke an the coming Communist Party of America, The Russian Situation, and some of the lessons the war tauht the thinking Proletariat of the world, those not educated enough to reason incorrectly. Both comrades had excellent attention and much opplause. The collection and sale of literature was fine and on the whole the comrades were pleased with the success of the picnic.

Nellie Lescher.

They are where they can not help themselves. Every way they stretch their arms they encounter steel. They have been caged by a "democratic" administration for speaking their true thoughts about war. They have been tortured and harressed, threatened and bludgeoned. They are at mercy of military officials, some of whom the war department was forced to discharge for their brutality. They are at the mercy of prison officials and guards who are beasts in human form. And you are where you can do much to help them regain their freedom and restore them to their families, friends and comrades. Will you join the Army of Liberators and help?

Picnics, Pledges and Contributions large and small, make the Press Fund pass the $4,000. Point.

The constributions sent in the last two weeks show that the comrades are in deadly earnest in the matter of securing a printing plant of their own. The battle between entranched capital and the exploited workers continues and grows more intense and bitter as the months pass by. The need of a workers' controlled press grows more apparent every day. Even at the present time we are greatly handicapped in our propaganda because of this lack. Let every comrade realize this great need and hasten to do everything possible to attain our object — a press for the Ohio Socialist and a printing plant of our own.

Below are the names of comrades who have within the past two weeks contributed to the press founds and some comments and extracts from their letters.

Three Cheers for Bellaire

"At the picnic this afternoon, tho the gathering was not as large as expected by the comrades who worked so hard to make it a success, it was a success any way. After the speaking comrades came forward with their five and one dollar bills. Two comrades gave $25.00 each. The collection totaled $104.00 which I am sending along for the press fund. Three cheers for the loyal comrades of Bellaire. Would that we had thousands of such comrades in the movement." Chas Baker.

From our Farmer comrades.

"A few weeks ago, members of the Lasalle Club and the Herwegh Mannerchor visited our farmer friends at Batavia, O., in behalf of our cause and the press fund. Comrades Hoefer has made a report of this visit and the good time we had there. I now have the funds which were contributed at that little outing and am enclosing check for same." State Organizer Baker dropped into the state Office last week. He wore a happy smile upon his countenance and upon inquiry as to whether the H. C. L. had dropped into oblivion or the league of nations ratified, he laid upon the State Secretary's desk $40.65. "Collected on lists by the comrades of the German Branch of Akron" says Charles. All of which proves that socialists can be happy in spite of the rows of our capitalist itinerant sleight of had performers and Punch and Judy shows.

Thirteen dollars and fifty cents on lists circulated by comrade Jos Komar of Youngstown attests his activity in the great work of making the press fund grow. Beats all how the fund grows when a few comrades really get busy with that good intention.

Comrade J. Oberlin of Canton has been busy making the rounds of a few live ones. Result is another six dollars in the fund.

Comrade Henry Gotthard has found a method of making War Savings Stamps, stamp out capitalism. This week he sent us some stamps totalling $8.64.

Comrade K. W. Boring of Wellsville, O., remits his monthly pleadge of three dollars.

Comrade Alex Sherbin, of Pierce W. Va., has been doing some live scouting about in his section of the country. On his list we find the names of six comrades totaling $5.00. Thanks Alex.

Helping the press fund to grow is a little job that comrade Pete Boronich of St. Louis Mo., took upon himself. On the list he sends us we find a total of $4.50, which shows that the need of a workers controlled press is recognized in St. Louis as well as elsewhere.

More list circulators is what is needed. Get one from your local secretary, or make one. Make your doldars do it, get the press.

ANOTHER CORNER TURNED

The Social Revolution in America has definitely turned a corner in its march toward realization. Theories which have developed from the changeing social relations are being given definite form and programs for their realization are being mapped out and promulgated by millions of workers as solutions for the particular evils which it is believed they will correct.

As proof of this turning of vast numbers toward a definite goal distinct from any previous one set by labor, we may point to first, the Plumb plan for operation of the railways. This plan of ownership, control and management of the transportation system of the country is revolutionary in that it gives the actual workers in the industry a definite and prescribed part in the management. The worker is given his say-so in the conduct of the business. It is a revolutionary change in that the principle of private ownership of a basic social need is displaced by government ownership with a limited democracy in management.

Whatever may be said against the Plumb plan, and there is very much to said on that score, we here view it as a REVOLUTIONARY TENDENCY. This tendency toward revolutionary thot and action is a new thing in America and is a welcome token of the rising revolutionary tide upon the shores of proletarian thot. That large groups of organized workers are giving support to it is sufficient proof of the universality of the change that has taken place in the views of millions of workers upon questions of private versus social control of the necessities by which all men live.

The nationalization of mines which was approved by the miners convention at Cleveland is another indication of this trend of thot and action among the masses. Coming as it does immediately after the miners of Great Britain have delivered an ultimatum for nationalizaton of mines, it is proof positive of the swiftness with which revolutionary movements are progressing. It is no coincidence that American miners follow so soon in the footsteps of those of England. Revolutionary movements in England are certain to have profound impression upon workers here, more so than those taking place in any other country.

These movements of two great bodies of labor away from the beaten paths but express the growing revolutionary element in our social life. The months ahead are pregnant with possibilities. Labor is awakening. It is feeling its way. The rank and file are on the alert. It refuses to be led, but continually challenges its old leaders. It is beginning to rely upon itself, to feel its strength and is cultivating the courage to carry its convention into practice.

The SOCIAL REVOLUTION in America has definitely turned a corner and is marching headlong toward the realization of a better world for the workers.

IF LA FAYETTE CAME BACK

No name rests more honorably or securely in the annals of American history than that of Marquis de LaFayette. His unselfish devotion to the cause of American independence fills a sublime page in our national history and a place of deep respect in the hearts of Americans.

On September 6th, 1757, he was, born, a notable with a princely fortune and at thirteen became an orphan. He married at the age of sixteen. He chose the carreer of his father and entered the Guards.

He was nineteen and a captain of dragoons when the American colonies declared their idependence of England. "At the first news of this quarrell," he wrote in his memoirs, "my heart was enrolled in it." In this short sentence is revealed a key to his character for his whole life from this moment was dedicated to the cause of liberty and the uplifting of the oppressed.

In spite of protests of friends and against the orders of the French king, he surreptiously slipped out of France in disguise, caught a ship in a Spanish port and set sail for the land he was to honor with his ability, his finances and his great example. Tho pursued by two English crusiers his voyage terminated successfully at Georgetown S. C. two months later. He entered the American army upon two stipulations—that he should receive no pay and that he should act as a volunteer. He met Washington and became his friend, and an active participating in the cause of American liberty.

La Fayette visited America twice after the Revolution was won as the guest of the nation.

We wonder if he would receive such honor if he came back today. We don't think he would. More than likely he would be called a "radical" and would be warned against by our itinerant politicians and socalled statesmen.

The anniversary of La Fayette's birthday has lately been justly celebrated in this country. Wreathes were laid upon monuments erected to his memory, laudatory speeches were made and honors were showered upon him.

But we think that could La Fayette have been present in the flesh he would have peered beneath this mockery of his name. For be it known, La Fayette spent five years in Prussian and Austrian prisons as a political prisoner because of his activities in the French Revolution. Because of his loyalty to the cause of humanity and progress he suffered as many are suffering in Ame-the cause of humanity and progress he suffered as many are suffering in America today—in American bastiles. If LaFayette came back to America to-day that he trod. We imagine that his impetuous spirit would cry out against this mockery of democracy that uses his name and fame to shield its mailed fist.

The same love of humanity, of hatred of injustice, of unselfish devotion to a great human principle that ruled life also rules that of his kinsman, Eugen V. Debs, now a victim of those who rule America, and jail America's best — in the name of Democracy.

If La Fayette came back to-day he would seek out those who have carried on the fight he fought, who suffer persecution, he would not be found with those who desecrate his name by imprisoning the advocates of real democracy. La Fayette's last speech in 1834 in the Chamber of Deputies was on behalf of Polish political refugees. If he could come back to America to-day his voice would ring out again in denunciation of the injustice that is being done our political prisoners. The hands that served democracy for so many years on this soil and that of his native land would reach thru the prison bars and strike in comradely greeting those of Debs, of Kate O'Hare, of the I. W. W.'s of Leavenworth and the under sea dungeons of Alcatraz.

With our Liberators

The Liberators are growing daily. With every mail come signed application blanks for membership in The Liberators, the most numerous, most aggressive organization in existence that is fighting for the Liberation of ALL political prisoners.

In every mail come donations that have been contributed to help in the agitation for their release. From Mr. and Mrs. Fred Thompson, Barberton, O., comes $2; Comrade J. S. Austranskas, Wesleyville, Pa., sends a list amounting to $4.40. Horace C. Shank of Hamilton sends in $. contributed by Comrades. R. Tryeyk of Leechburg, Pa., has collected $5.00 for the Liberation.

"Enclosed find money order for $14.50 for the Liberation Fund. The slip was handed to me to get what I could on it and this is what I got. C. M. Savage, Crookesville, O." From ahe South Slavic Branch of Woodlawn, Pa. comes $13.50 in contributions from various comrades. Comrade Wm. Muck of Norwood, O., collects $4.50 for the Liberation Fund. "To help free our Debs", writes comrade Sigmund Nisensor of Alliance, O. He sends $9.00 collected from comrades.

Six dollars for the Liberation Fund was gathered by comrade Walter Schoettle, of W. Covington, Ky. H. G. Clonghel sends $2. from Strassburg, Va. From New York City comes a list amounting to $7.65 from comrade Antony Mihalik. Comrade U. A. Vincent of Shinnston, Va. remits $12. Five is his own contribution to free political prisoners and seven is Three dollars arrived this week from Frank Primrose, Bridgeport, O. Comrade A. E. Johnson of Moline sends a dollar. Comrade Dudenstadt of Pleasant Ridge, O., sends in three dollars for himself and two sons. A $12.00 list was sent us this week by comrade Alley McConnell of Lorain, O. A very substantial sum of $22.85 has been received from comrade O. R. Plummer of Napoleon, O. And another list amounting to $22.00 came from comrade Jos. Rody of Pitco, Pa. Comrade W. A. Humphreys of Hamilton, O. collected $6.00 to aid the political prisoners to liberty. H. G. Robertson of Clifton Forge, Va. sent $5 and states that he has promised more.

Other comrades who have been collecting finds to aid the fight for freedom for our imprisoned comrades are Julius Beigany, Cincinnati, $4.00; Joe Phillips, Irondale, O. $6.25; M. Wallner, Lorain, O., $5; Steven Flornik, Neffs, O. $3; F. Keistner, Cincinnati, Herman Frank, John Eichelbacher, Norwood, O. $6; Alex Sherbin, Pierce, W. Va. $11; Stanley Marshall, Cincinnati $3; J. D. Reedy, Bickmore, W. Va. $2; Edw. Piche, Richmond, Ind. $7.00.

Comrade Harry Waroff, of Toledo, O. got busy with TWO lists and collected $20. for the Liberation fund. A ten dollar list was sent us by comrade H. Markoff of Gary, Ind. "I am yours for the cause of all suffering comrades and fellow workers", writes comrade Max Citron of Pittsburgh, Pa. He collected $13.50 for the Liberation Fund.

Comrade Wesley A. Sharp of Piqua sent us $6.00. Comrade John Jelvic of Wendel, W. Va., remits $10.25 which has donated by comrades. $1.50 was sent in by comrade J. Friedman of Toledo. The Left Wing Group of Local St. Louis, Mo. emits $6.50 to help in the fight. Comrade Chas. Repine of Charleroi, Pa. contributes $2. Local Ransom, Kan. contributes $5 to help the cause of freedom. Two dollars from comrade G. Nitschke of Covington, Ky., helps the fund to grow. Comrades F. E. and J. R. McKinnis of Marysville, Kans. add each a dollar to the fund.

Ten dollars is the amount of a donation from a comrade of Local Cayahoga Co., who did not give us the name of the donor. George Steinert of Toledo, O. adds his dollar to the growing fund. From far away Chandler, Okla. comes a list from comrade W. C. Ricard. It contains $7.50. Another Okla. comrade to boost the Liberation Fund is comrade L. A. Bogby, of Eakly. A list of $4 testifies to his spirit in the fight.

Comrade Theo. Haryeyk of Ambridge, Pa. collected $3 on a list which he remits. Comrade Jno Gica of Canton, O. remits $8. Comrade Mable Forter, Secretary of Local Butte, Mont. remits $5.00 which she collected for the Liberation fund. Ten fifty is to hand from comrade Theodore Stuntz of Charleston, W. Va.

These comrades also sent in Liberation Funds: Anna Novak, Neffs, O. $5; Nick Savo, Toledo, O. $3; M. Schrodek, Toledo, O., $1! Archie McViker, Battle Creek, Mich. $1; G. Huber, Battle Creek, $2; Geo. Krautwater, Springfield, O. $6.05; Jno Bammann, Girard, Kans., David Scheintaub, Toledo $6; W. S. Bennett, Sault Ste Marie $4.

REMEMBER!

We speak to you from jail today,
Two hundred union men,
We're here because the bosses' laws
Bring slavery again.
We make a pledge—no tyrant might
Can make us bend a knee,
Come on you workers, organize
And fight for liberty!

Yours for the revolution,
C. W. ANDERSON,

Liberators Army Offers Free Leaflets

The dollars contributed to the Liberation Fund have been put to work. They have printed thousands of leaflets which are now offered FREE to those who desire to assist in the liberation of all political prisoners.

The leaflet offered FREE the "Open Letter to President Wilson", written by Jos. W. Sharts, one of the Liberator Army attorneys.

How many of these leaflets can you distribute? If you can only distribute ten, write us for that many. If you can distribute 500, send for that number. DO NOT SEND FOR MORE THAN YOU CAN DISTRIBUTE, for we want to make every leaflet count.

This offer of free leaflets to assist in the liberation of Debs and other prisoners is made possible by the ever growing Army of Liberators and their conscientious labors in securing contributions for the Liberation Fund.

Other offers of free literature will be made from time to time and as the fund allows.

Hundreds of thousands of leaflets must be distributed to awaken the working class to their lass interests.

Help in this first distribution of this leaflet offered you FREE.

How Were Ohio Delegates Instructed?

The state referendum which instructed Ohio delegates to the Emergency National Convention, carried overwhelmingly.

Ohio delegates were instructed to go to the Emergency National Convention of the Socialist Party and if that convention proved reactionary, if it refused to seat the ousted Left Wing factions, to then go to the September 1st convention?

What September 1st convention was referred to when this resolution instructing the Ohio delegates was placed before the state convention?

The September 1st convention referred to was NOT that called by the seceding Russian Federation group, which bolted the National Left Wing Conference to organize a party of its own.

The September 1st convention referred to was that which was ordered called by the majority of the National Left Wing Conference and which the national council elected at this conference was to make arrangements for.

Ohio delegates obeyed instructions to the letter.

They obeyed the call of the newly elected and revolutionary National Executive Committee in attending the Emergency National Convention called to order by it after the Germer convention had ousted them with the help of the Chicago police. They obeyed the mandate of the National Left Wing Conference and arranged for a September 1st convention as per its instructions.

That there are two Left Wing parties in the field at present is entirely the fault of the seceding and bolting Russian Fderation minority group.

The minority group wanted a convention of its own. It organized the Communist Party.

The majority group which obeyed the mandates of the newly elected National Executive Committee and the majority delegates attending the National Left Wing Conference, organized the Communist Labor Party and immediately entered negotiations for unity.

The Communist Labor Party is the true and logical outgrowth of the Left Wing fight within the Socialist Party.

All Ohio locals are invited to affiliate with this party, which all but one of the Ohio delegates helped to organize.

rope starve but all you offer is your bayonets. You take from the tiny mouths of suckling babes the last drop that would save their lives. Your system is bankrupt, your economic structure wrecked, you have nothing to give, no remedy to offer, but still you cling and hang. Get off our backs, and there will be no poverty, no wars, no high cost of living. Get down and let the workers who mind the machines, who till the soil, who create the wealth; own and enjoy the fruits of their toil. Your hypocricy cries to the very heavens, for whilst you scream freedom you are stabbing our Russian comrades in the back. Get out of Russia, you Incarnation of greed. Get out. Let them tend their own affairs. Haven't they fed, and bled for you long enough. Didn't they pile their dead high, in your war for the Dardanelles? Didn't you satisfy yourself, with the tons of thousands, that you sent over the frozen steppes to Siberia? With the use of your knout? With your Bloody Fridays? Russia will build the first Communist Society if you do not murder her, during the struggle of transition. Your Satanic Majesty, you've played your part, now make your exit. Your tyranny is unequalled. Our class is suffering bitterly under your whip. You have sent Our Gene to jail. You have sent him for life, for ten years to him, means life. O'Hare, Haywood, Wells, thousends more are sinking in your bastiles. You are torturing them, as in days of old. You know Mooney did not throw the bomb, but you hold him still in jail. You are deporting men and women simply because they challenge your pirate rule. But listen, as you told us. The Twighlight of your reign has come. We are educating and organizing. We are getting together. We will forget your national boundaries, we will unite as an International working class. We will be free. Your bolts and bars cannot confine us, nor your whips our spirits tame. History is as much with us as it is against you. As your power decays ours grows stronger. The jail doors will yet be opened, the Commonwealth of the Working class is as sure as the rising sun. Long Live the Solidarity of Labor.

His Majesty trembles, as he yells —
"Twenty Years."

Debs' Loyalty to His Imprisoned Comrades a Superb Sacrifice

TELEGRAM AND LETTER FROM LIBERATOR REPRESENTATIVES JUST RETURNED FROM CONSULTATION WITH WORKERS' CHAMPION

Debs made his decision. A month ago when our representatives visited him to consult him in regard to starting habeas cpours proceedings for the purpose of ending his illegal confinement in Atlanta federal penetentiary, he said "Return in thirty days and I will give my answer".

On Spt. 20th, attorneys Sharts and Castleton again visited him to receive his answer.

Here it is, a telegram sent us immediately after the consultation was ended, and a letter from comrade Sharts which gives further details.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

A WAGENKNECHT, 1291 COOK AV. CLEVELAND, O.

DEBS SAYS: "I HAVE STUDIED THIS MATTER THIRTY DAYS. EVERY INSTINCT IS AGAINST MY MAKING AN INDIVIDUAL FIGHT FOR LIBERTY WHILE MY COMRADES ROT IN JAIL. WOODROW WILSON AND HIS POLITICAL CROWD SENT ME HERE FROM MOUNDSVILLE TO KILL OR BREAK ME. I SHALL STAY UNTILL I DIE OR HE IS FORCED TO RELEASE US ALL. MY FAITH IS IN THE RANK AND FILE OF MY COMRADES."

SAMUEL M. CASTLETON JOSEPH W. SHARTS

A. Wagenknecht,
3207 Clark Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.
Dear Comrade:

My telegram of last Saturday tells the story.

Debs was much surprised to see me. For one thing, he thought the 30 days would not be up until the 22nd. For another, he said he had written home to Terre Haute telling the folks to notify Comrade Prevey and me not to come as he had finally decided not to make an individual fight for freedom. Comrade Prevey must have got that word, for she did not come.

The telegraphed message from the boys in Leavenworth also failed to reach me in time. I wish I had had it to show to Gene. It is as magnificent a thing, coming from the political prisoners he is trying to rescue by his own self-sacrifice, as is his own attitude. He would have cried over that telegram, I know.

He is still in the hospital. And right here let me say a word for the warden of the Atlanta Penitentiary. Those who heap curses upon the warden for the brutalities committed upon our comrades in that hell-hole—and it is a hell-hole, I know—do him a great wrong.

The brutalities that are being practiced at the Atlanta penitentiary are systematically prescribed from Washington.

Let us get that fact clear. To blame the warden for what is being done to Debs and our other comrades is like biting at the stick instead of attacking the hand that wields the stick.

The men we have to hold responsible for what is happening to Debs and the others are in the White House and the Attorney General's office and back of them all is brutal capitalism. It is silly for us to look lower down.

There is a lot of twaddle extant about the alleged "kind heart" of Woodrow Wilson and his personal desire to pardon these prisoners and end the sufferings of the conscientious objectors also, were he not deterred by "reasons of state." He acquired that credit by commuting the death sentences inflicted on a couple of soldier boys who fell asleep on picket and mercifully giving them a chance to die in battle killing Germans. After all it was a more efficient and economical way of using them.

I have looked into the cold, thirfty Scotch Presbyterian heart of Woodrow Wilson, and I believe Debs is right when he says that neither he nor his fellow political prisoners will be released thru any spark of magnanimity emanating from that fountain of fancy phrases.

The release will come when Woodrow Wilson and his satelites are forced to do it by the rising tide of the workers indignation; they will do it then to avoid being inundated but will put on a show of magnanimity to save "their face."

Our task, then, is to rally our comrades in a united effort to force Woodrow Wilson to recognize the necessity of releasing all political prisoners.

For Gene Debs individually, it may be that appeals pouring in upon him from his fellowprisoners and from his comrades may induce him to change his mind. I think you should wire him the message from Leavenworth or enclose it in a letter to him. He ought by all means know of it. He ought also hear from his comrades so that he may know whether or not they wish him to remain passive in prison or make the effort thru habeas corpus for his own release.

"Every instinct is against my making an individual fight for liberty while my comrades rot in jail"

THOSE WERE THE WORDS DEBS SPOKE TO LIBERATOR REPRESENTATIVES JOSEPH W. SHARTS AND SAMUEL M. CASTLETON AT ATLANTA FEDERAL PRISON SEPT. 20th. THEY ARE HIS ANSWER TO THE QUESTION: "SHALL WE GO AHEAD WITH HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS AND GIVE YOU A FEW WEEKS, POSSIBLY MONTHS OF FREEDOM, WHILE THE QUESTION OF THE LEGALITY OF YOUR REMOVAL FROM THE HUMANE CONDITIONS OF MOUNDSVILLE PRISON TO THE HEALTH DESTROYING ATLANTA PRISON ARE BEING THRASHED OUT IN THE U. S. SUPREME COURT"?

IT IS PERHAPS NOT THE ANSWER WHICH YOU OR WE WOULD HAVE THE MORAL AND PHYSICAL COURAGE TO GIVE TO SUCH A QUESTION—WITH TEN YEARS AND PERHAPS DEATH IN PRISON CONFRONTING US. VERY LIKELY OUR ANSWER WOULD HAVE BEEN DIFFERENT. YOU AND WE LOVE LIBERTY. VERY LIKELY THE SMILING FACE OF FREEDOM AS WE GAZED THRU THE BARRED WINDOWS WOULD HAVE BECONED TO US—JUST AS IT DID TO DEBS—BUT WE WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN ABLE TO PUT THE TEMPTATION FROM US. WE LOVE LIBERTY. SO DOES DEBS. YET HE ANSWERED "NO" WHEN IT WAS OFFERED HIM.

BUT DEBS' ANSWER WILL FOREVER BIND HIM TO THE OPPRESSED FOR WHOM HE HAS ALREADY GIVEN A LIFE OF SACRIFICE AND SERVICE, AND FOR WHOM HE STANDS READY NOW TO GIVE HIS FEW REMAINING YEARS OR EVEN LIFE ITSELF. DEBS HAS ANSWERED EVERY CALL OF HIS COMRADES, ANSWERED THEM FULLY WITHOUT STINT OR LIMIT. AND NOW IN PRISON, ILL OF BODY AND LIVING UNDER MERCILESS PRISON RULES HE STANDS LOYALLY BY THE PRINCIPLE WHICH HAS GUIDED HIM IN HIS LIFE WORK.

DEBS IS AS CLASS CONSCIOUS IN PRISON AS HE WAS WHEN AMONG US. HE FEELS HIMSELF ONE WITH THE THOUSANDS OF OTHER POLITICAL AND CLASS-WAR PRISONERS NOW IN AMERICAN BASTILES. HE IS ONE OF THEM AND THEIR CAUSE IS HIS CAUSE. RUMORS FROM MANY SOURCES HAVE REACHED DEBS THAT PRESIDENT WILSON AND HIS ADVISERS HAD HIS CASE UNDER ADVISEMENT FOR A PARDON. THEY HAVE HAD NO EFFECT UPON HIM. HE HAS REPEATEDLY AFFIRMED THAT HE WAS ENTITLED TO NO MORE CONSIDERATION THAN THE MOST LOWLY AND UNKNOWN POLITICAL PRISONER IN THE LAND. HE DOES NOT APPROVE OF THE ADMINISTRATION ABSOLVING ITSELF FROM DOING JUSTICE TO ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS BY SETTING AT LIBERTY A FEW OF THE MORE NOTED ONES. DEBS PREFERS TO BE THE LAST MAN OUT. HE WANTS TO SEE THE BOYS FROM LEAVENWORTH, THE FELLOW WORKERS AT ALCATRAZ, THE MEN AND WOMEN FROM EVERY POLITICAL PRISON IN THIS LAND WALK OUT INTO THE SUNLIGHT, FREE TO GO AND COME AS YOU AND WE ARE FREE TO DO SO, THEN AND ONLY THEN, DOES HE CONSENT TO LIBERTY FOR HIMSELF.

DEBS KNOWS THAT POLITICAL PRISONERS WILL BE FREE IN THIS COUNTRY ONLY WHEN THE DEMANDS OF THE WORKERS REACH FLOOD TIDE AND THREATEN THE POWER OF THE CAPITALIST CLASS. HE KNOWS THAT ONLY THREATENED MASS AND CLASS ACTION BY THE WORKERS WILL OPEN THE PRISON DOORS. AND HE IS RIGHT. ONLY AN AROUSED WORKINGCLASS, DETERMINED TO SEE JUSTICE DONE THE POLITICAL PRISONERS WILL STIR THE ADMINISTRATION INTO ACTION.

DEBS HAS TAKEN HIS STAND FOR FREEDOM FOR ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS. HE IS WILLING TO DIE IN PRISON IF NECESSARY FOR THAT PRINCIPLE, HE HAS MADE HIS DECISION. BUT YOU? HAVE YOU MADE YOUR DECISION. ARE YOU WILLING—NOT TO DIE—BUT TO LIVE AND WORK FOR THE RELEASE OF DEBS AND ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS? WILL YOU STAND BY DEBS, AND STRENGTHEN HIS DETERMINATION THAT ALL SHALL WALK OUT TOGETHER? UPON THIS MATTER THERE CAN BE BUT ONE ANSWER. EVERY WORKER MUST DO HIS PART. THINK, TALK AND ACT FOR THE FREEDOM OF ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS. JOIN THE LIBERATOR ARMY. COLLECT FUNDS TO CARRY ON THE WORK.

STAND BY DEBS ON THE PRINCIPLE OF

"ALL TOGETHER"!

The Toledo Primary Elections.

Toledo showed the results of the year's work at the polls in the primaries just held. The Socialist Candidate for mayor received the second highest vote. However, the chances for first place in the November elections are even better than they were two years ago when there were only two candidates in the field, one the present candidate Cornell Schreiber and the other — Robert T. Haworth the Socialist candidate. The feature in this election is that the "Silkstocking Element" turned out in full force for the primary. This ward gave Schreiber the capitalist class candidate 1142 votes and to the socialist candidate only 97 votes. But in 9 other wards the socialist candidate was the winner. This leaves 6 wards for the present incumbent in office, who is blamed for the murder of 3 strikers in the Willys Overland Co. strike. The vote for the mayority candidates foolows;

Cornel Schreiber (Ind.)	5859
Solon T. Klotz (Socialist)	4775
Edwin J. Lynch (Democrat)	4407

All workingmens' wards voted for the Socialist candidate except the second ward which is mostly composed of small business men. This applies also to the 11th ward, where Schreiber polled 273 and Klots received 181, and in the second ward the count stood 286 for Schreiber and 217 for the Socialist candidate. Whereever the workers predominate in the ward, that ward gave a majority for the Socialist candidate.

The Socialist candidates for city council fared no less succesful. Four of the candidates came out first in their ward, several held the second position and some the third. Robert T. Haworth the candidate for Mayor on the Socialist ticket two years ago came out first in his ward, the 13th, where last year a socialist councilman was expelled from the city council for refusing to buy liberty bonds by force and coercion.

Thomas C. Devine (Socialist) Councilman 15th ward received 680 votes while his nearest competitor received only 270. Other socialist councilmen who led the field in their respective wards are — W. G. Bitters 16th ward, Elmer B. Lentz, 14th ward. Those running second are — M. A. Toohey 8th ward, Edward Hoskins 1st ward, Walter Harris 9th ward. Several came in third. All of these will go on the final ticket in November.

Cornell Schreiber had 2100 less votes this year than two years ago and the Socialists more than double their vote of 1917 when it was 2260(gaining 2515 votes. The Socialist candidate for Vice-mayor received 5896 votes running second, whereas two years ago the candidate for vice-mayor did not go through to the final elections because he was not one of the three highest. This years' vote was the largest ever polled at a primary election in Toledo, it being over 23000.

Miners Demand Amnesty For Political Prisoners.

A rousing scene occurred in the convention of the U. M. W. of A in the closing hours of its session in Cleveland last week when the resolution on amnesty for political prisoners came up for action before the husky coal diggers.

Upon the question of the miners' stand for the release of political and class war prisoners, there was little doubt in the minds of any who know the miners. Even tho the most prominent labor leader of the country were not a prisoner, is it likely that the miners' stand would have been different. But with the name of Debs added to the long list of courageous men and women who are serving long sentences in prison for opinion's sake, a decided stand favoring their release was certain at the convention.

The reading of the resolution demanding amnesty for all political prisoners was followed by a speech by a swarthy miner whose language was that of the man in the mines speaking of the interests that lay nearest them couched in language of the men who toil. It was marked by deep sincerety and comradely feeling for the imprisoned. He received the entire attention of the 2.000 delegates who showed by their faces how deeply they felt the injustice perpetrated upon their jailed comrades.

The mention of Debs' name was a signal for uproarious applause which swept in wave after wave back and forth across the great auditorium of Gray's Armory, where the convention was held. Cheer after cheer greeted his name, while eyes grew moist and a momentary feeling of tenseness held the assembly in its grip and cast a determined gleam upon all faces.

The resolution demanding amnesty for all political prisoners carried amidst a perfect [illegible] of applause.

Stevedores Refuse to Move Rifles for Kolchak

SEATTLE.—Frank Waterhouse, Seattle shipping magnate, has declined to become a party to the shipping of munitions to Russia for the slaying of Russian working men by Kolchak, it is declared by his waterfront representatives.

Three carloads of rifles now on the government dock will be turned over to government officials in Seattle, according to the announcement. The government is being notified by the Frank Waterhouse company that this firm will efuse to handle all shipments of munitions for the American army in Siberia.

The action of the Waterhouse company is in the nature of instant support to the action of 12 dockworkers who walked off the job at Pier 5 when they found that cases being loaded on a Japanese freighter contained rifles, munitions and machine guns intended for the wholesale slaughter of the supporters of Russia's working class government.

Cases believed to contain ammunition, rifles and machine guns consigned to Russia are sitting unmoved on Pier 5, the Frank Waterhouse & Co. dock, this week as the result of a car gang of 12 men walking off the job following their demands to know what the cases contained.

This action follows the passage of a resolution by the Central Labor Council indorsing the action of waterfront workers in their planned refusal to ship munitions to kill Russian workers

According to the men, they reported for work and began loading the case when the question was asked as to their contents. After some further questioning a customs officer was called and opened some of the cases, one of the workers declared, displaying their war-like contents. The men immediately got together and refused to continue the loading.

When questioned those in charge at the dock refused to state anything further than that the men had refuse to move the cases.

The cargo came to Seattle from an Eastern point and was to have been sent overseas on the Marho Maru, a Japenese freighter now loading at Pier 5.

At the headquarters of Local 3812, Stevodores and Dock Workers, it was declared that the men had refused to move the cases and that the matter was now up to the Central Labor Council.

Longshoremen on the waterfront have been warned to keep a careful watch for rifles concealed in innocent appearing packages.

Pacific coast longshoremen will tie up the coast from Seattle to San Diego before they will load rifles or munitions for Siberia or any part of Russia, declared delegates from the Riggers' and Stevedores' Local No. 38-12 at the meeting of the Central Labor council.

Stating that efforts are being made to load vessels with munitions in cratings innocently marked "sewing machines" or otherwise, the delegates lent their arguments to the support of a communication to the council from the longshoremen's local, asking its financial and moral support to keep the rifles out of Russia. Amid a wild burst of cheering, a motion that full support be given carried.

One delegate said it was well known that 17 carloads of munitions were in Seattle ready for shipment.

ASK PARDON FOR DEBS.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—Because of Debs' broken health, Dr. Earl E. Dudding, president of the Prisoners' Relief Society, announced today his intention of placing before the department of justice a recommendation for Debs' pardon. Dr. Dudding believes that the state of Debs' health, if for no other reason, is sufficient ground for his unconditional release from prison by the federal authorities.

No Wonder!

We do not wonder that the Attorney General's office is so eager to have it appear that there are no political prisoners in America. To deny the existence of existing political facts seems to be the altogether too familiar method of our legal and militarist system in times of war. Moreover, to admit that we have political prisoners would make the barbarous length of their sentence and their bestial tortures in prison entirely out of proportion to their offences, and it would establish a most unfavorable comparison with Czarist Russia and Kaiserist Germany. In Kaiserist Germany, Karl Liebknecht was sentenced to four years' imprisonment for having gone out to the German forces on the Eastern front and distributed handbills among them calling upon them to revolt against their officers. But in New York a number of young men and a young woman were indicted and convicted for using intemperate language in handbills opposing American intervention in Russia. The young men were sentenced to twenty years, the young woman to fifteen years, for this political offense; and the remarks and behavior of the Court in connection with the trial can be characterized as nothing short of a disgrace.

Why do they Silence the Demand for Unity?

In answer to C. E. Ruthenberg's article in the Socialist News, "Why do they refuse to follow the one way of unity?"

By A. Bilan.

The National Secretary of the Communist Party, C. E. Ruthenberg, is surprised that out of the Chicago Emergency Convention was organized a new Party, the Communist Labor Party, and asks the question: "If they desired unity of the Communist forces why did they hold a separate Convention at Chicago and organize themselves as a Party?"

Comrade Ruthenberg is playing "argumentum ex silentio", instead of giving an explanation to the rank and file he writes an article of question marks. If Comrade Ruthenberg were not interested in covering up the facts of the development of the Communist Labor Party, there would be no questioning at all, but he does not dare to do it, for if he did he would have to leave the Communist Party.

We knew that the Communist Party Convention was going to be held at Chicago Sept. 1st. We knew more than that, we knew that this Convention was going to be called by the Michigan-Federation combination which bolted the Left Wing Conference in New York and stated, that, regardless of what happened to the Left Wing movement, they were going to issue a call for a Sept. 1st Convention. Also, we knew what the Left Wing Conference answered them and how the National Council was instructed, and lastly we know what stand the Revolutionary age took against that "Communist Party", which the Michigan-Federation bolting group intended to organize. We recognized that stand and we still hold to it.

Now, let us recollect what was said and done by the Left Wing in the Conference and after.

The Revolutionary Age, Vol. 2 No. 1 of July 5th, 1919 carried a report of the Left Wing Conference and there we find the following in black on white:

"On the third day, 31 delegates consisting mostly of the Federations, decided after a caucus, that they would withold further activity in the Conference because of its attitude on the Communist Party, these delegates resigning from all Committees and having previously declined nominations for National Council."

What action did the Left Wing Conference take? Did they agree to join that call for such Communist Party? They did not. This is the ansver given by that Conference (the same report in Rev. Age)" The final act of the Conference was the adoption of the followin motion made by Fraina:" "That the National Council call a conference at Chikago Sept., 1st, off all revolutionary elements willing to unite with a revolutionized Socialist Party or with Communist Party that may be organized by Left Wing delegates seceding from the Convention of the Socialist Party to be held August 30th."

Comrade Ruthenberg was elected to the National Council of the Left Wing, He knew who called the Communist Party Convention on Sept. 1st, he knew what the Left Wingers decided to do by adopting this resolution, Fraina did, Ferguson did, — because they voted for it, they defended it in the Revolutionary Age. Take every issue up to No. 36 and you will find articles from Ferguson and Fraina bitterly criticising the selfappointed organizers of the "Communist Party". Read Fraina's article: "All power to the Left Wing". Let us hear what Fraina of yesterday has to say against Fraina of to-day: — "There is a call issued for the organization of the Communist Party at Chicago on Sept. 1st. The Convention is called by a "National Organization Committee, consisting of Dennis E. Batt, D. Elbaum, O. C. Johnson, John Kerach , S. Kopnagel, S. Stilson and A. Stoklitzky. The Committee represents a small group which, emphasising its own plans and purposes as against the considered opinion of the Left Wing Conference is actually sabotaging the Left Wing." The whole article is in defiance of the selfappointed organization Committee of the Communist Party. Fraina of yesterday is denouncing Fraina of to-day.

In the same issue of the Revolutionary Age, there was a call issued by Ferguson, the Left Wing National Secretary, to the delegates to the Emergency Convention. Read that call and you will see to what convention they are called. He calls them not to the Communist Party Convention of Batt and Stoklitsky but to the Convention which will be organized by the Left Wing delegates after they are refused seats in the Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party.

But what is the use — the Frainas, Fergusons, Ruthenbergs of to-day are repudiating the Frainas, Fergusons and Ruthenbergs of yesterday. They left the masses and then they declared that the masses left them, that the masses went over to Batt's and Stoklitzky's Communist Party, so, being "Leaders" they had to follow and sign the call of the Michigan-Federation group without having the consent of the majority of the Left Wing.

When they came to Chicago they found that they had left the masses, that they were outgeneraled by the so called organization Committee of the Communist Party; they saw that there were present many delegates from the Left Wing who stood true to the edicts of the Left Wing Conference. The majority of the Left Wing Council to justify their position had to use all means to prove to the rank and file that their position was right. They forgot all that they said against the Michigan-Federation group and started to throw bricks at the delegates who followed the outlined program of the Left Wing Conference and the new revolutionary N. E. C. for organizing a new revolutionary Party of Communism, which was willing to unite all revolutionary elements. Instead of working with them they called them self appointed individuals, representing nobody.

Instead of joining with them and organizing a Communist Party they went over to the Michigan-Federation Comdnist Party, adopted their call for a basis of representation. They were willing to seat only delegates who went direct to that Communist Convention called by a bolting minority, and to the rest of the Left Wing delegates they were willing to offer reserved seats as special guesss to look on and see how a "real" Communist Party should be organized.

On what grounds do the majority members of the L. W. C. have the right to claim they represent the rank and file when they turned their backs upon them?

It is the silliest argument to deny that the Communist Labor Party represents the rank and file and then to reccommend to their Communist Party N. E. C. to issue a call to the Socialist party membership to join the Communist Party.

The Communist Labor Party's N. E. C. is not flopping from one side to the other every few weeks as the old Left Wing Council did. We state that the organization of the C. L. P. was a necessity arived at by the historical development of the Socialist Party controversy, endorsed and supported by the rank and file, wheras the actions of the Communist Party were predetermined on June 23d in spite of the Left Wing to organize a Communist Party of their own. The Communist Labor Party was organized to express the will of the rank and file of the Left Wing movement.

The strumbling block, which split the revolutionary forces was created who, going over to the Communist Party, created the audacious idea that by those elements from the Left Wing, they were now representing all true Communists and so prevented the possibility of unity.

It is an unpardonable blunder of the Left Wing Council members who are now with the Communist Party and we can not believe that they are seeking unity of all Left Wing forces — because they refused unity in Chicago — unless the rank and file of the Communist Party forces their leaders to admit this blunder and instruct their N. E. C. to meet the C. L. P. to bring about unity on the basis of equality. The C. L. P. has proclaimed a standing invitation for unity to all revolutionary elements and organizations who agree upon the principles of the Third International formed at Moscow and stand for affiliation with it — to join their forces.

This is the only way toward unity. There can be no other.

MEXICO

Are we for war with Mexico? Not much.

Let American and other foreign capitalists liquidate their investments in Mexico as best they can. If they must lose, then let them lose.

These investments were not of our making. We were not consulted — our government was not consulted.

Our financiers unpatriotically invested good American money — not at home to benefit their country and our country, but in Mexico to enrich themselves.

We remember what Lincoln said about that other Mexican war.

Besides, there is Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Hawaii — we have violated American ideals in our dealings with each and all of these. The people of these islands seem no longer to care for us.

Government by consent of the governed — that is the American way. We must live up to our ideals.

Theodore Roosevelt said that he "took the Panama Canal from Colombia and talked about it afterward." Now we are forced shamefully to admit this steal by paying Colombia $25,000,000.

We have enough black pages in our history.

We want no long-spun theories as to why we should go to war with Mexico.

"But," they say, "we will lose our money and our property!"

Probably they will.

But what of it?

Will the American people not lose money if we go to war with Mexico?

There's got to be an end to this war business — somwhere—sometime.

It is easy for gentlemen sitting in swivel-chairs to agitate war, and then, when war comes, perch themselves safely in the rear and watch the hideous business — like sports around a cockpit or a bull ring.

We've had about enough of this business of war. — Soldiers-Sailors-Marines National Weekly News.

BELGIUM

Belgium Miners to Meet.

Brussels.— The National Committee of Belgium Miners has decided to call an extraordinary national congress of miners for September 28. The congrers will be invited to ask the Government for a special organization for the control of the whole coal industry — production, prices and distribution.

The committee insists upon the nationalization of the mines as soon as possible.

NORWAY

Labor Forces Split

Winnipeg, Man.— The new democratic group in opposition to the Norwegian Labor Party, which has decided to affiliate with the Third International at Moscow, has been formed with Mr. Buen, President of the Storting, and leader of the Parliamentary socialist group, at its head.

Whit one exception, all the members of the editorial staff of the party organ, "Sozial Demokraten," have given notice that they are unwilling to support the present policy of the paper.

The labor movement in Norway is organized somewhat on the lines of the British movement, There is a trade union organization, including all the skilled unions, which have a total membership of about 108.000. It guards the economic interests of the workers and their relations to the employers. Purely political questions are the concern of the socialist party or "Norwegian Labor Party", which has a paying membership of over 94,000 members. It is the latter organization khich has decided to affiliate with the Moscow International, and from which the moderate have seceded to form a separate group within the organized movement.

(Western Labor News, Aug. 15).

[illegible] — A party congress of the Socialist Party of Switzerland [illegible] upon the question of affiliation with the Third (Moscow) International, held here on August [illegible] to decide. When the final vote was reached, the question was decided affirmatively by 318 votes to 147.

SWEDEN

Socialist Strong in Upper House

Stockholm.— At the recent elections for members of the upper house of the Swedish Riksdag, or parliament, the socialists elected more candidates to office than any other political party. Following is the composition of the new senate:

Social Democrats, 48, Liberals 41, Conservatives, 39, Farmers' Union, 10, Imperial Union, 8, Left Wing Socialists, 4, (Common Sense, London, August 2).

FINLAND

Who Is Mannerheim?

London.— "Foreign Affairs," organ of the Union for Democratic Control of England, in its August issue presents a compilation of data regarding the record of General Mannerheim, dictator of Finland, with whom the Allies are co-operating in every way possible. Here are some of the items:

"Acquired power with German assistance in April, 1918. Arrested 90,000 workers; 11.478 died in prison, mainly from starvation. Between 15.000 and 20.000 others shot without trial. All Socialists brutally persecuted ever since."

As authorities for these figures the publication cites such respectable organs as the "Manchester Guardian" and the "New Statesman."

MEXICO CITY.—In his opening address to the First National Congress of the Socialist Party of Mexico, on August 26, Secretary Adolfo A. Santibanez strongly exhorted the delegates to abandon syndicalism for revolutionary socialism and to bid good-bye to parliamentary methods and procedure.

Three days later his suggestions formed the chief subject of debate. Unanimously the delegates declared themselves for revolutionary socialism and voted to join the Third International.

RUSSIA

No More Foreign Interference Wanted.

NEW YORK.—That even in the Archangel region, thus far regarded by capitalism as one of its chief bulwarks in Russia, the Russians are willing to accept bolshevism rather than continued foreign occupation, is the opinion of Crawford Wheeler, a Y. M. C. A. worker who has just reached New York after a year in charge of "Y" work in the Archangel region.

"The people up there," said Mr. Wheeler, "want everybody to get out. They simply are weary of having opposing armies chasing over their land; and in addition they are inclined to distrust the movies of the Allies in maintaining troops there."

Mutinies have taken place on five fronts, he asserted.

To support reaction.

LONDON.—A White Paper just issued shows that the expenditure on naval and military operations in Russia from the date of the armistice to July 31 was nearly $350,000,000, of which $215,000,000 went in direct assistance to the "White" armies of the Baltic States, Admiral Kolchak and General Denikin. In the House of Commons, in answer to a question, Mr. Churchill stated that 1,200 Russian officers were now being trained at Newmarket camp, at a weekly cost of about $20 per officer, inclusive of their pay. Although these men are being trained at the expense of the British taxpayer in order to go to Russia to fight in a civil war against Bolsheviks some ten of those in the camp have been arrested for alleged conspiracy in the bolshevik interest.

A recent editorial in a popular Catholic Weekly Magazine again calls the attention of its readers to the fact that the catholic church has been the implacable opponent of Socialism ever since the day Marx and Engels wrote its constitution and program seventy years ago.

Unfortunately for the catholic church it always has been from the time it was first launched in the latter part of the first decade of the seventh century the implacable opponent of every movement social or religious which it could not dominate or control. This characteristic was to be the distinguishing feature of the two horned beast that looked like a lamb but spake as a dragon which was to exercise such tremendous influence for a time, that is 1260 years, from A. D. 619 to A. D. 1870, over the affairs of the nations symbolized by the seven headed ten horned beast.

The writer of this article has unbounded reverence for christianity, and is fully convinced of the absence of all discordance between the ethics of Socialism, and the ethics of Christianity, but considers catholicism and protestantism a pair of evils which society as it becomes more enlightened will banish from its midst, in spite of the fact that thousands of loveable but misled people help to augment the membership of these two institutions.

In the meantime the Socialist movement minus the mark of the "Beast" is sweeping grandly on to its ultimate goal of universal economic justice and freedom in spite of inherited ignorance, malignent misrepresentation, internal dissensions and papal anathemas.

Socialist thought and action was never more potent and prevalent during the last seventy years than it is today, in proof of which, witness Great Britain about to socialize her land, mines, railways and steamships. Other nations are moving rapidly in the same direction. In our own country the socializing of our magnificent(!) railway systems is more than likely to be one of the predominant issues in the coming presidential campaign.

Exploiters and profiteers with their whole retinue of hangers on, point to the wartime inefficient administration of the railways by the government as the horrible example of what would repeatedly happen under public ownership much of which was undoubtedly the direct result of previous managerial incompetency. No otherwise sane person accepts this experience as an Euclidic demonstration of the superiority of private over public ownership.

It should be highly interesting to learn at first hand by what insane process of logic the working class of of any county delude themselves into believing that a public utility such as a railroad which enters intimately into the life of every citizen is more beneficial to society owned privately and operated at cost plus seven per cent, plus a multitude of princely salaries to a vaste horde of useless and unnecessary officials than it would be owned publicly and operated at cost without the added percentages and unearned incomes.

What is the great incentive that the great mass of workers prefer to slave in the service of a soulless corporation rather than to labor in the service of the great body public of which they form the most honorable and conspicious part.

Yours for social rigtheousness
ALEX CONNELL.

NEED OF COMMON SENSE EDUCATION.

Yesterday I heard an antiquated and venerable pulpit pounder talking to a bunch of innocent little school children at a school picnic. He told the children that the flag had never been raised except in an honorable war; that it was never carried in a war for aggression or conquest, and as he talked, I thought of what President Grant wrote in his "Memoirs" about the war with Mexico, branding it as an imperialistic war of pulnder and conquest, and a blot upon American history; I thought of the war in the interest of the Sugar Trust in 1898, of the imperialistic seizure of the Phillipines, of the Marines in San Domingo, holding down the rebellious workers there in the interest of the sugar trust, of the soldiers in Archangel and other Russian points, waging what Max Eastman in the Liberator called, "Wilson's private and personal war against Russia" and the more I thought about it, the more I thought it was time our leading educators, pulpit pounders, editors and magazine writers, had a course in common sense education.

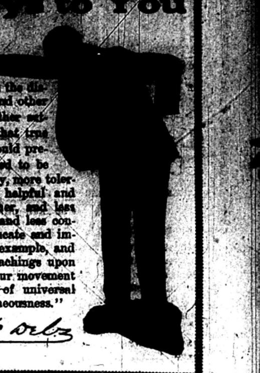
Debs says to You



"In our propaganda in the discussion of our tactical and other differences and in our other activities the larger faith that true comradeship inspires should prevail between us. We need to be more patient, more kindly, more tolerant, more sympathetic, helpful and encouragig to one another, and less suspicious, less envious and less contentious if we are to educate and impress the people by our example, and by the results of our teachings upon ourselves win them to our movement and realize our dream of universal freedom and social rigtheousness."

Eugene V. Debs

Debs Goes to Prison

By DAVID KARSNER

"How many letters can he write?" I asked.

"Well, the rules call for two letters a month, but I shall allow Mr. Debs to write as many letters as he pleases, subject always, of course, to the prison censorship. I understand that Mr. Debs has thousands of people who want to know how he is faring, and I shall let Mr. Debs tell them—in reason." We inquired if Debs might receive newspapers, magazines and books of the radical type.

"Well, now, that would be all right, gentlemen, if Mr. Debs only received them. Of course, they could do him no harm, but there is some danger of those kind of papers getting into the hands of other prisoners, and that would not do, for we have some very ignorant men here."

We all laughed.

"Well, Warden, here's a chance to reduce prison ignorance," we said.

"Yes, but you know how it is——" The Warden's voice trailed off.

"Well, let the papers and the books come for a little while and we will see how it goes," said the Warden Finally he seated himself at his desk and asked us to be seated.

"How old is Debs now?" I told him Debs was 64 years old. "Well his age alone would be sufficient reason for an early pardon for him." So with this tip from the Warden, Debs' keeper, we might take some heart, knowing that if we do not get Debs out of prison his age will get him out sooner or later.

"Of course, gentlemen," said Joseph Z. Terrel, the Warden, "the regulation visiting days come once a month, but in Debs' case I shall make no rule. Those who have a right to see him may do so at any time. I mean his family and very personal friends. But I am not going to let hundreds of people in here every day to see Debs. That would never do. In reason, Debs may see his friends, and his friends will be friendly to Debs by not abusing the privilege I am trying to extend to him."

In a few minutes a reporter for a Wheeling paper appeared. The words exchanged between the Warden and the reporter indicated that they might be political cronies. Perhaps the reporter was merely trying to show off to as how well he stood in with the officials.

The reporter, of course, wanted a story. The Warden would not let him see Debs, because the great Liberator had just gone to bed for the night. I ventured to tell the Wheeling journalist some of the incidents of the trip through the entire state of Ohio.

Then I gave him the last statement that Debs made to me on the way down in the trolley car. It began this way:

"I enter the prison door a flaming revolutionist, my head erect, my spirit untamed, my soul unconquerable."

The reporter wrote fast. The Warden whistled a tune.

"So, we have a flaming revolutionist in our midst, Doctor," the Warden said to the prison physician. "Well, Mr. Debs may be a flaming revolutionist as long as he likes, so long as he doesn't inflame my boys."

DEBS —5

It was amusing to hear this politician, who has been Warden only since last October, refer to nearly 900 prisoners as "my boys." I do not know what was wrong, but it did not smack of sincerity.

I told the Warden that tens of thousands of Debs' friends and followers on the outside would be watching Moundsville.

Moundsville has now won immortal fame, or infamy, which shall I say? The state of West Virginia will also be linked with Debs' name in the days to come, when children shall read in the school books about this great human liberator, this lover of mankind. And in that day to come they will wonder—they will just wonder what a lovely time we must have had back in 1919, when society confessed its inherent weakness and wickedness by placing 'Gene Debs in prison.

CONVICT NO. 2253 IS CLERK IN PRISON HOSPITAL.

CHAPTER FIVE.

Who is United States convict No. 2253 at the Moundsville State Penitentiary? He is Eugene Victor Debs, four times candidate for President of the United States on the Socialist party ticket, and one of the world's greatest liberators. What is he in prison for? Why, he made a speech in which he spoke the truth as he saw it. How long will he be in prison? Until the workers of the United States assert their economic and political power, and force the capitalist class to unlock the doors that bar him to freedom.

On the prison records, Debs' occupation is given as writer and lecturer, but he is the only convict in the state prison at Moundsville who will not be allowed to practice his trade or profession. Warden Terrell has had several conversations with Debs in which he said rather sternly to the 64-year-old humanist that he must not under any circumstances attempt to "organize" his fellow convicts. The Warden explained to me later that Soviets might be all right in Russia, but in Moundsville he was the supreme dictator.

Convict No. 2253 gave the Warden his solemn pledge that he would not violate the rules of the prison, and when convict No. 2253 gives his word to any man, nothing on earth or in heaven could persuade him to break it.

Debs slept Monday night, not in a cage like a wild beast, as he slept Sunday night, his first in the West Virginia state prison but in a little room in the hospital of the prison, for Our 'Gene has been appointed a hospital attendant, and he has a separate room to himself, with a white iron bed, newly clothed, a table and a chair.

Shortly after 11 o'clock Monday morning, April 14, Debs was taken from his cell, No. 51, in the second tier of the south wing, to the prison baths. He was examined by the prison physician, and then donned prison underclothing, and the prison uniform. But when I saw Debs late Monday afternoon the prison garb was not unbecoming to him. It was well fitting, and contained the tiniest check. It is the kind of suit that anybody might purchase at cheap clothing store.

Warden Terrell explained that he had at first thought of placing Debs in the prison library because of his knowledge of books and literature, but he did not do this because he thought Debs might be too much subjected to curiosity. As hospital attendant, Debs will have a room entirely to himself. The room is of a good size, larger than most rooms of the Bronx tenements. It is on the ground floor. There are two ample windows, one facing the south and one the east. There are no bars at his windows. The door is open at all times, and Debs has full privilege to come and go as he pleases. He has full and complete acces to the prison yard and lawns.

When Engdahl, Wagenknecht and myself went to the prison Monday we were led by Warden Terrell through the turntable. He took us through long, winding coridors to the hospital section. As we passed, the prison druggist was making little pellets. He was a convict "in" for murder. He looked at us as we passed with a furtive look, then went on filling the capsules.

We walked up one flight of stairs. The Warden opened the door of a freshly painted room, and there was 'Gene quietly sitting in a low rocking chair, smoking his pipe and reading a book. At first he did not look up.

"Mr. Debs, here are your friends back again to see you," said the Warden. 'Gene put his book aside on the bed and disturbed the big gray cat that was sleeping by his side.

Greetings were over, and the Warden then told Debs that he had free access to the prison library.

"We have a rule here, Debs, that prisoners must be checked up on books they take from the library, but we will waive that rule for you. I know you appreciate the value of good books."

"Indeed, I do," said Debs, thanking the Warden.

We talked a few minutes, and Debs told us that he slept "like a log last night", and now felt "as chipper as a young goat on a tin roof."

He laughed good-naturedly as he looked at his prison garb and asked us how we liked his new suit. Debs had come to the penitentiary in a new blue serge. He was still wearing the vest of it. He wore his own collar and tie.

"I have met many fine people here," 'Gene to us. "In the cell right next to mine last night there was a man whom I met at McKees Rocks, Pa., many years ago. He was telling me his story."

The Miners' Convention

The United Mine Workers' Convention has passed into his history; the results of its deliberations will leave a mark upon the sands of time. While communists will find much in the convention's acts of a disappointing nature, there was yet much progress made toward an upward and onward march of this great section of American labor represented by 2,000 delegates assembled at Cleveland from all parts of the U. S. and Canada.

The failure of the Illinois insurgents to gain seats in the convention appear to prove that the organization machinery was too strong a bulwark to be overthrown, however necessary were the actions of the insurgents in striking without the permission of the organization officialdom. Temporarily, "government" won a victory over the necessities of life.

The overwhelming vote of the convention against endorsement of the One Big Union idea gives probably the best idea of the extent to which industrial unionism has permeated the rank and file of the coal diggers. The pitifully small vote in favor of this resolution indicates that the miners are as yet practically certain of being able to cope with the operators in any emergency that may arise. As it would be folly to expect an endorsement of the O. B. U. by a body of labor men except they were schooled in class-consciousness and felt the need of the support of a more closely united working class, we are forced to believe that the miners as a body are merely craft-conscious. They are not yet ready to make one with all of labor.

The endorsement of the Plumb plan of railroad administration and of the Labor Party are problems of conjecture in so far as adding greatly to the strength of these two movements. Compared to the reception given the resolution for the realease of political prisoners, that tendered the above two resolutions were mild mannered indeed. The intense feeling manifested in the assembly at the mention of Debs' name, indicates the hold he has upon the minds of the miners. That it is the conviction of the miners that a great injustice is being done the political prisoners was proven beyond a doubt by the tremendous ovation and endorsement given the resolutions for the realease of political prisoners.

The resolution favoring the withdrawal of American troops from Russia and other foreign lands was also received with great enthusiasm. American interference with the working-class government of Russia is an unwarranted act of capitalistic aggression is the belief of the miners. They demand that the U. S. get out and leave Russia to set up the government of her choice.

That the miners are borrowing liberally (tho logically) from English labor tactics, is seen in their demand for nationalizaton of mines and for a closer alignment with the transportation workers' unions. A "Big Three', patterned closely after that of the English workers will doubtless rise within a few months. The time is ripe and conditions favorable. The English labor movement is stamping indelibly the labor movement on this side the Atlantic.

More Democracy within the miners' organization received favorable attention when the question of election vs. appointment of organizers came up. Apparently the miners desire to bring more completely under their direct supervision the choice of their field workers.

The big event of the convention, the one which will mark the conferance as an epoch making one, is the action declaring for a six hour day and a five day week with wage increase approximating 60 percent. This action which was foreshadowed as a moral certainity before the convention convened, was the main purpose of the meeting and the one upon which was focussed the attention of all thinking workers. The shortening of the work day in the mines is certain to have its effect throut the entire labor movement and the miners deserve the support of every worker in making their declaration a fact.

The present wage and hour agreements between miners and operators will end Nov. 1st. At that time one of two things will occur. Eitither the new demands of the miners will be granted or a nationwide strike of miners will occur. International officers of the union are now in conference with the operators at Buffalo. They are fully empowered to call a strike at any moment it becomes apparent that their demands will not be met.

The convention of the U. M. W. of A. at Cleveland was not of a revolutionary character. Neither was it marked by extreme conservatism. The granting of any or all of its demands will not lessen the exploitation of the miners by the operators, nor need their profits be a cent less, nor is their economic power threatened in the slightest degree. Rather, has the miner demanded merely more bread and sunlight—and yet, sunlight is the source of all life.

The six hour day means a NEW day for the miner and the beginning of the era of a shorter workday for all labor. The miners have taken the stand for it, let all labor back them up.

The Steel Strike

The steel workers of the nation are at death grapples with the most powerful corporation yet developed by capitalism, the steel trust. Hundreds of independant companies are also involved. Arrayed against these powerful groups of capital are a quarter million workers who spend their hard lives in service of societys' most basic industry.

While wages and hours are momentous questions in this conflict which assumed even in the first days the proportions of a general strike, yet the issue at stake is of a higher nature, it has a high moral quality and upon the attainment of this demand by the strikers rests the whole future of organized labor. The question at issue is the right of collective bargaining by the workers. In other words shall the workers be allowed to organize and deal with the organized steel companies or shall they be forced to pit their individual strength against the organized might of the steel trust? Upon the winning of this demand rests victory for the workers.

The history of the steel trust's treatment of its workmen is one long history of crime. From legalized stealing in the form of wages to outright murder and armed warfare upon the workers, the steel trust has developed a condition comparable to enforced chattel slavery with none of its mitigating features. Too long has the greed of Gary and his predecessors ruled in the realm of steel. Their hands are adrip with the blood of thousands of workers. Their power must be shorn from them. For the workers to loose in this fight means a turning back of the chariot of progress. The welfare of civilization demands the granting of the right of the workers to organize for collective [illegible] property.

Labor seems to realize the issue at stake. Labor is becoming alert to any assault upon it [illegible] the [illegible] of its fellows. The situation is very pregnant with possibilities of a general strike. Already the miners at the ore [illegible] of the Great Lakes are out, the [illegible] employed in companies' yards are out, the strike may spread widely.

The steel trust has attempted to drag a red herring across the path of the strikers which they have labelled "foreign worker". In order to create division in the ranks of the workers whom it hopes to exploit more [illegible] in the future than in the past, it seeks to stir up the false issue of race hatred. Let all workers realize that the only foreigner is the capitalist.

In this titanic struggle there is but one position for the worker to take. He must stand by the strikers. Their cause is the cause of every worker. Let us all stand together.

Debs' The Magnificent.

No more magnificent act has arisen out of the Debs' case than that of the political and class-war prisoners of Leavenworth in urging him to make the fight for individual liberty. And just as magnificent is his response to their comradely urge. He refuses to make an individual fight even for liberty.

Debs has been schooled in collective action. He has long ago learned that where workers are concerned the principle of "all together" is the one to win by. Upon this principle his lifes' work has been carried on. He recognises no other principle as a guide for workers in their conduct toward one another. He prefers to stand by and with the workers who have been made the victims of capitalism and capitalism's liberty destroying administration at Washington, rather than to seek liberty for himself while steel and stone encompass his fellows.

Because of his internationalism, he was sent to prison.

Because of his internationalism he now refuses to leave prison.

This episode in the class war exemplifies the character of Debs. Another tie now binds Debs to the workers. Another monument has been erected to his great soul.

Dr. John Wesley Hill is deeply moved to state his objections to socialism in Finance and Industry (Cleveland) in an article entitled "A Blend of Oil and Patriotism, in the issue of Sept. 6.

We have noticed a peculiar blending of oil and patriotism of late, especially the oil that resides in the oil fields of Mexico. In fact the "blend" is becomming more pronounced right along, but we calculate that as time progresses and the establishment of a mandatory over Mexico on the part of the United States becomes established—in accordance with the principle of "self determination", that hardly a trace of patriotism will be discernible—to those who recognise the article at sight.

Dr. John points out that a million "76 Questions on Bolshevism Asked and Answered" have been circulated in this country, and countless tons of other radical literature. He is quite alarmed and warns his hearers, for it is at a meeting of prominent blood suckers that these statements are made, that we have got to get right out and fight this thing. He says that car loads of anti-Bolshevik stuff has got to be distributed in every industrial center or the country is bound to succomb to the Bolshevik germ.

However, he has another remedy, if the first fails. It's a clever coupling of the powers of Omniscience and the ingenuity of man that is to turn the trick and make this earth an exploiters' paradise forevermore. Here it is, put it beneath your hat band. "The government ought to herd them (the agitaters) together and load them upon a ship of stone and a keel of lead, propelled by the wrath of God and with hell for the nearest port".

Mrs. Sophia Lyons, a reformed criminal and accomplice of bank robbers for thirty years states that she has made more money as a real estate shark than she ever did in the illegal game of highwayman and safe-blower. Sure. Three out of a hundred succeed in the legal game of robbery. The rate for illegal thievery is not so high.

"The Grand Army of the Republic," declared Clarendon E Adams, commander-in-chief, "has opposed the pernicious doctrines of—pacifism and Communism and is today battling against the anarchist, the socialist, the I. W. W. and Bolshevists". Then the G A R proceeded at their Columbus convention to take a stand in opposition to the league of nations. Those who oppose the league of nations, states President Wilson, in effect, are Pro-German and Bolshevists. What, oh, what, is the G. A. R.?

And here we have it. After nearly two months of intense furore concerning the war upon the H. C. L., R. G. Dunn and Company make the statement that prices in the Fourth Federal District which includes Ohio have decreased very slightly. Some prices have declined, others have risen, the net result is an exceedingly slight decline.

MT. HEALTHY COMRADES ATTENTION

Attend special meeting Oct. 6th, Perry St. Question of taking action on joining Communist Labor Party will be decided. Be Present.

Geo. W. Markert, Fin. Sec'y.

[illegible] that Ohio Delegates did not obey Instructions

Ohio sent 16 delegates to the Emergency National Convention. Of these [illegible] C. E. Ruthenberg alone, [illegible] instructed to take part in the Communist Party convention.

The claim is made that the Ohio delegates were instructed to attend the Communist Party convention. What were the instructions to the Ohio delegates? They were instructed to attend the SEPTEMBER 1st CONVENTION, should the Emergency National Convention refuse to seat delegates from the suspended and expelled factions.

What convention did the state convention, which instructed the Ohio delegates, have in mind when it instructed the delegates to go to the SEPTEMBER 1st CONVENTION under certain emergencies? When the state convention met the call for the convention of the Communist Party had not yet been issued. At that time, Fraina, Ruthenberg, Ferguson and others of the Left Wing Council were bitterly assailing the Russian-Michigan group which contemplated calling the September 1st convention for the organization of a Communist Party.

The convention which the Ohio delegates were instructed to attend on September 1st under certain emergencies was that which was ordered called by the National Left Wing Conference, which met just about a week before the sessions of the Ohio state convention. Ruthenberg, Brahtin, Bilan, Zitt and others, fresh from this Left Wing National Conference, understood fully that when the resolution, which Ruthenberg drafted, was passed by the state convention, instructing delegates to go to the September 1st convention, it did not mean the Russian-Michigan group convention, which had bolted the National Left Wing Conference, but it meant the convention to be called for September 1st by the National Left Wing Council under instructions from the National Left Wing Conference.

In the eleventh hour the National Left Wing Council, a body of half a dozen comrades, violated their instructions to carry on the fight within the party up to the Emergency Convention and call a convention for September 1st, and surrendered to the Russian-Michigan group. The National Council did this without a mandate from the Left Wing membership in the party. The result was that all delegates elected to go to the Emergency National Convention who were Left Wing delegates, went to this convention as originally agreed upon, and then organized the Left Wing delegates attending the Emergency Convention as the legal Emergency Convention under the direction of the newly elected national executive committee. The first act of these Left Wing delegates was to ask for unity with the Communist Party convention. The Communist Party convention, controlled by the Russian Federation, refused to unite the two conventions. And this accounts for a Communist Party and a Communist Labor Party.

We of the Communist Labor Party hold, that if instead of bitter denunciation as that made by Ruthenberg and other Communist Party adherants, a spirit of conciliation were manifested, unity could be secured and one strong party of the Left could be organized. The tactics persued by Ruthenberg and others, however, will result only in enstrangement and are not such tactics as should be used against their fellow comrades who stand for Communist principles as wholesonledly as he does.

Zitt, Bilan, Wagenknecht,
Clifford, Prevey, Baker and other Ohio Delegates attending the C. L. P. convention.

Local Cincinnati Will Have Lecture Course.

The Lecture Course, of the "Workers University", of Local Cincinnati, will begin the 1st Sunday in October, and take its regular Course until about the middle of May, every Sunday Eve., at 8 P. M., at the Socialist Party Headquarters 1314 Vine street.

Everybody is invited to attend those meetings as it shall be the Committees earnest duty, to make the Lectures of "The Workers University", as interesting as possible, and also will engage the best Speakers.

Comrades, Friends and Fellow Workers, make these meetings by your attendance a great success. At those lectures you will be able to hear the Ttruth about Socialism, also about the Exploitation of the Workingclass, also many facts, which you never will be able to read in your Daily Capitalistic Press.

Everybody invited! Everybody wellcome!

[illegible] Notary Public

(My commission expires Sept. 17, 1920)

Communist Labor Party National Office [illegible]

Address 3207 Clark Ave, Cleveland.

— Telegrams in great number are pouring into the national office of the Communist Labor Party. Locals in all parts of the nation are wiring [illegible] of their cooperation in building the new party and, more important, are demanding dues stamps and supplies.

— Edward Lindgren, acting state secretary of New York wries as follows: "Local Kings County, formerly the second largest local in the Socialist Party, decided at a meeting of the central committee held last Saturday, Sept. 20, to affiliate with the Communist Labor Party. Of course, the controversy has split the local, about [illegible] going over to the Socialist Party, [illegible] to the Communist Party including the federation branches, leaving about 2,000 to 2,500 after we get thru with our organization campaign just started, send me at once for the state office 2,000 dues stamps, 2,000 dues cards and other supplies."

— L. K. England, Edgar Owens and Perry Shipman are engaged in organization work for the Communist Labor Party in Rock Island County, Ill. The C. L. P. state convention for Illinois has been called to meet in Moline on Oct. 12th.

— The Cook County (Chicago) organization committee for the C. L. P. is composed of G. A. Engelken, Arthur Proctor, J. Meisinger, Samuel Hankin and John Nelson. A stiring proclamation has been issued to the revolutionary membership in Cook County calling them to join the C. L. P. which will hold its organization meeting Sept. 23th.

— Chas. Baker is assisting in organization work in Chicago. He was conscripted by the Chicago comrades for the greater part of the week of Sept. 21st. Marguerite Prevey will make a tour beginning about October 1st. Chas. Baker is scheduled to speak in the following cities: Ft. Wayne, Ind., Sept. 29, 30; Lima, O., Oct. 1; Columbus 2nd; Dayton 3rd; Hamilton 4th; Cincinnati 5th.

— Max Bedacht, member of the national executive committee visited the national office this week. He reports that the mass meeting of German branch members held in Chicago went on record as advising all German branches to affiliate with the C. L. P.

— Noble Wilson of Indiana reports an interesting battle between Wm. Henry, old line Socialist state secretary and Jos. Zimmerman, delegate at the C. L. P. convention.

— W. F. [illegible] of Indianapolis writes that at least 75 per cent of the Indiana membership is Left Wing.

— READ THE NEXT LIBERATOR: The coming issue of the "Liberator", the monthly edited by Max Eastman, will contain an interesting report of the Chicago conventions. Buy a copy.

— "I will say for my part that the C. L. P. is the only one of the three parties we can consistently support." W. B. Dillon, New Mexico.

— The first Russian Communist Branch of Chicago has endorsed the C. L. P. program and applied for a charter.

— Ruby Herman, state secretary of Washington, wires for convention minutes and actions. Mary Geffs, state secretary of Colorado, writes that we shall have her undivided support.

— "We have the Scandinavian Branch of Duluth and Local Duluth, 400 members, with the C. L. P." Jack Carney.

— The Italian Branch of New York City has withdrawn from the Italian Socialist Federation, fearing that the federation will remain with the reactionary Socialist Party. It intends organizing an Italian Federation affiliated with the C. L. P.

— The locals at Worcester, Mass., and Conway, Pa., have written for programs and constitutions of the C. L. P.

— Adolph Germer was in Ohio last week attempting to repair his broken fences. It is rumored that he well soon resign his office in the S. P. The ship 's sinking.

— GERMAN FEDERATION JOINS C. L. P.: The national executive of the German Federation voted 41 to 8 to join the Communist Labor Party. Branches in New York and New Jersey, numbering 1,700 members, have already decided to affiliate.

— The first order for dues stamps came from Thos. Crimmins, for Local Syracuse, N. Y. He writes: "The language federations here decided to join the C. L. P. Send 200 dues stamps at once."

— James Dolsen, California state organizer, is touring the west for the C. L. P.

— An application for a charter has been received from Local Rock Island County, Ill., the largest local in Illinois outside Chicago.

— "State conferences for the Communist Labor Party were held in Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 21. Temporary organizations for the party were effected. Sufficient representatives were present from the two states to assure us half the membership at the first sweep. The under- [illegible] board was elected secretary for the [illegible] Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska." J. P. C[illegible].

— Local Danville, Ill. decided unanimously to withdraw from the Socialist Party and join the Communist Labor Party.

— L. E. Katterfeld has given up his residence in Kansas to take up his duties in the national office of the C. L. P. His years of organization experience will be of much value to the party nationally.

— The Scandinavian Socialist Federation has decided to withdraw from the Socialist Party and will decide its future affiliation either by referendum or in convention.

— TELLEGRAM: Rhode Island state mass convention voted overwhelmingly to affiliate with the C. L. P. Temporary state committee elected. Yours truly elected state secretary. Rush stamps and supplies. Will remit by return mail." James P. Reid.

— The "Melting Pot" has been offered to the Communist Labor Party by the editor, H. M. Tichnor, to be owned and controlled by the party as one of its official monthlies.

— A Unity Convention was held by the rank and file of Left Wing members of Manhatten, N. Y. Communist Party adherants discouraged attendance at this convention. Communist Labor Party adherants encouraged the convention. The order of business was the question of securing one united communist organization. Delegates to either convention were not admitted.

Local Toledo O., second largest local in the state sends word that the local has voted in favor of affiliation with the C. L. P.

DUES STAMPS AND SUPPLIES

New dues stamps, charter member stamps and party supplies are now ready. Locals in states where the state office is with the Communist Labor Party should make purchases direct from their state secretaries. Locals in states where the state secretaries still adhere to the reactionary Socialist Party should buy stamps and supplies direct from the national office.

Dues stamps to state offices affiliated with our party and to locals in states where the state office is not affiliated, are 20 cents each. Charter member stamps sell for 25c each. Initiation stamp (the same as charter stamps for the first year) sell for 25 cents each. Dues cards are $1.00 a hundred and membership application blanks are $2.50 a thousand.

A uniform [illegible] CHARTER MEMBER stamps for all who affiliate with our party may be registered as charter members of it. Members will pay $1.00 for such stamp. The proceeds from these [illegible] will go into the organization fund. Applicants for membership are required to pay $1.00 initiation fee.

PLACE ORDERS FOR DUES STAMPS AND SUPPLIES AT ONCE.

— Felix Catlin for Local Youngstown, Ohio, ordered 200 dues stamps and 100 charter stamps. Local Youngstown has joined the C. L. P.

— Five thousand dues stamps, 1,000 charter stamps and a large shipment of suplies have gone forward to the office of the German Communist Labor Party Federation.

— One thousand dues stamps, 800 charter stamps and supplies were mailed to the Rhode Island state secretary. Two thousand dues stamps and 500 charter member stamps and supplies were shipped Local New York. Reports from everywhere show excellent progress. The Communist Labor Party is predestined to be a growing, virile, powerful organization.

— NEW YORK LETTER: Local Queens with a membership of about 500 has gone Communist Party by a very narrow margin. There is every possibility that this local will reverse itself in a very short time. Local Kings, the largest local of the Left Wing section in New York will positively line up with the C. L. P. In Manhatton proper, the branches have decided upon a Unity Conference despite the opposition from the Communist Party comrades. In one branch, the 8th A. D., which sent four delegates to the Communist Party convention. the unity conference was endorsed whereupon Maximillan Cohen, Jos. and Karl Brodsky and Fannie Horowitz, all delegates to the Communist Party convention, resigned. The following branches will surely line up with the C. L. P. Four Russian branches, one Lettish branch, five English branches, all German branches, one Italian branch and several of the Jewish branches. In the Bronx the Communist Party comrades, true to their "rule or quit" tactics, refused to abide by the decision of the general membership meeting and bolted. Here we will have the Hungarian branch, the Russian branch, two English branches and probably one Jewish branch.

The Children's Bureau report describes a well nourished child as one who "first of all, measures up to racial and family standards of his age in height and weight. He has good color, bright eyes — no blue or dark circles underneath them — and smooth, glossy hair. His carriage is good, his step elastic, his flesh firm, and his muscles well-developed. In disposition he is usually happy and good-natured; he is brim full of life and animal spirits and is constantly active both physically and mentally. His sleep is sound, his appetite and digestion good, his bowels regular. He is, in short, what nature [illegible] If people could have known in 18[illegible] the staggering burden of land value increases that were lying in wait for their descendants, they might well have saved this generation the labor that will be involved in converting so huge a special interest as that, now represented by land-lordism in the United States into a community benefit. Such a change can be made in one way—and only one. The land of the United States must belong to the people of the United States — just as the rivers and harbors do—and must be used, as the rivers and harbors are used—not for private profit but for community benefit.

[illegible] Here is a measure to which [illegible] New York, an investigation by the Bureau of Child Hygiene made in the Borough of Manhattan (March, [illegible]) showed that 37.3 per cent. of the children were excellently nourished; 41.1 per cent. were passably nourished; the remaining 21.6 per cent were undernourished. This 21.6 per cent. spread out over the United States means millions of the child population denied an opportunity for that standard of glad-eyed health which the Children's Bureau describes.

Millions of European children are facing a savage winter. Millions of American children are slowly starving to death. Europe is war-torn. The United States is ridden by an old man of the sea in the form of an industrial system which provides the luxuries of life for a few tens of thousands while it condemns millions of children to the hell of slow starvation.

ENJOYING AND PAYING

The American people take it for granted that a fortune is a great boon to a community. According to the commonly accepted line of reasoning the existence of a fortune is a sign of community prosperity. The more fortunes the greater the prosperity.

Leaving aside for the moment any consideration of the obvious fallacy which lies behind a system of social organizations that allows some of its members to live in comparative luxury and idleness while others — and these the direct producers—exist for the most part either on the verge of poverty or in its depths, it is quite worth while to ask whether a fortune is a community blessing or a community curse.

The possesor of the fortune has in most cases secured titles to social values—that is, he has made himself master of the natural resources, of the franchises, factories and the other economic opportunities upon which the people depend for work and livelihood. Once having the title to these special privileges, the owner is able to avail himself of the full monopoly power which is included in his ownership. The owners of the anthracite coal fields, for exemple, have added no coal to the store already in the ground, nor have they themselves taken any of it out of the ground. They have merely employed their ownership as a means of securing monopoly profits or landlord profits when the coal is taken by the workers from its place in the earth and turned into forms that are needed by the American people.

The question may be put in this way. Suppose there were no private owners of anthracite coal. Would there be any less coal in the ground? Would it be any harder to reach? Would it be any more expensive to mine? Would it cost the consumer any more? Obviously the answer to all of these questions is "no". The owner of a natural resource merely puts a fence around it and notifies the people that if they wish to use any portion of his resources they must pay him a royalty or rent for the privilege.

There are millions of acres of land still in the possession of the government, located in the Alaskas, in the Rockies and in the Sierras, in which there is to be found all the minerals necessary to prosperity and upon which there are, in some cases, valuable growths of timber. These things now belong to the whole people, just as the rivers, harbors and lakes belong to the whole people. Consequently no value is set upon them.

Suppose, for example, that people had never learned the use of anthracite coal, and suppose that the little section of Pennsylvania in which most of the anthracite is deposited are still in the possession of the federal government. It would represent no value at all, and yet as soon as a method of utilizing the anthracite was discovered, the fourteen billion tons of unmined coal would acquire immediate economic importance. Suppose that the right to mine this coal were leased by the government to the highest bidder on a royalty basis, or suppose that the government should mine the coal and dispose of it at cost to the people. In either case no private fortunes would be made out of the land, yet the coal would be utilized just as effectively and perhaps more so than it is under the present system Yet so absurdly have economic truths been presented to the American people that they feel instinctively that the coal land is more valuable in the hands of private owners than it would be in the hands of the federal government. Of course it is more valuable to the private owners and perhaps that is the reason they have been so anxious to impress the point on the public imagination.

Special privilege, privately owned, represents a gain to the owner, but a loss to the community. The owner is able through his privilege, to increase his wealth, but because of the private ownership, the community is compelled to pay more for the goods and services which it uses. The privileged enjoy — the community pays.

STARVING AMERICANS

Starving children in Servia, Greece, France, and Belgium make a touching appeal to us. Even the starved children of Austria and Germany are commanding our attention. We organize, work and give to relieve their distresses and provide them with at

EARLY IN THE GAME

Henry Clay commented on the economic situation in the United States in a speech which he made to the Senate in 1832, "A friend of mine in this city bought in Illinois last fall, about 2,000 acres of this refuse land at the minimum price for which he has lately refused six dollars per acre........It is a business, a very profitable business, at which fortunes are made in the new states to purchase these refuse lands, and without improving them, to sell them at large advances."

Clay was arguing to prove that the national domain was really valuable and not "refuse" land as one of his opponents had insisted.

In those days of the early settlement of Illinois a land boom set the values at $6 an acre. Henry Clay cited the incident to show how some men might get rich without working by buying and selling land. Little did he dream of the lengths to which this real-estate-speculator prosperity would lead.

Between 1900 and 1910 the value of Illinois farm land increased 1,576 millions or 104 per cent. in ten years. A recent report carried in a New York financial paper notes sales of three farms at Champaign, Ill., for $4.00 per acre; and another farm at Kankakee, 160 acres for $68,000 ($425 per

QUESTIONS REGARDING COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY ANSWERED.

To J. F. — The Communist Party, in its program, provides that political candidates be nominated for legislative bodies anly and prohibits nomination of candidates for mayor, governor or president. The program or constitution of the Communist Labor Party has no such provisions.

To M. G., Cleveland, — So far as we understand, the petitions which were circulated to place C. E. Ruthenberg upon the ballot as candidate for mayor have been filed. Ruthenberg intends to decline the nomination after the petitions are filed and as a result there will be no candidate for mayor for you to vote for this fall.

To L. S. — Yes, the constitution of the Communist Party provides that persons living wholy from rent, interest or profit can not join that party.

To C. L. — The Communist Party gives language federations greater autonomy that they had in the old Socialist Party. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the Communist Party is, in the main, a party of language federations. The Communist Labor Party constitution provides that all language branches shall belong directly to the local or to the state office where there is no local. Language branches shall pay dues to the local or state office, and the translator secretary shall receive finances to conduct his office from the national office.

DEPORTEE IS HAPPY

Deportation holds no terrors for workers deported to a country like Norway, where the labor movement is strong. Alof Finnestad was one of those shipped from Seattle to New York on the "Red Special" last winter, and from there to Norway. He is now very happy at his lot, for night after night he has an opportunity to address meetings from a soapbox on conditions in the United States.

He finds that wages are two crowns an hour (about 70 cents), while living cost him 30 crowns a week. "Wages are high," he declares, "food is also high but plentiful; so there is no need for anyone to be scared to come over and give us a helping hand"

Debs and the Revolution

"I am opposed to bloodshed in any form. A revolution is coming, but it must be peaceful. That is the reason I am opposed to war, to making men soldiers. A soldier is a human being trained to kill other human beings. I don't believe in killing, I am opposed to it I can go to the gallows with a smile on my face, without a quiver, but I'll never have the stain of any man's blood upon my hands. I'm opposed to all forms of murder. We must do our work, comrades, peacefully. We are slowly but surely welding the iron ring about our exploiters. But, because they have treated us cruelly and like cattle that is not the spirit in which we must treat with them. We must be gentle and ask God to forgive them. They speak of Americanizing the foreigners—why? To make strikebreakers of them? God forgive them! When I am gone, the richest gift I ask, is that some child will lay a flower upon my grave and say: 'Gene did something for me.'"

—From Debs' last speech before going to the penitentiary, delivered in Youngstown, Ohio, April 6, 1919.

Debs' Loyalty is Superb Sacrifice.

I believe he could be induced to make the fight if convinced that such was the desire of the movement generally; for he always subordinates his own opinion to that of the movement in such matters.

He sends by me his love and greetings to all his comrades. And I wish I could repeat all the stories he told Comrade Castleton and me of the little incidents of his prison-life manifesting the affection and regard his fellow-prisoners for him. In the murderers and rape-fiends among whom he has been placed he has found traits of gentleness and generosity absolutely unintelligible to the highly respectable and successful gentry who send them there.

"Think of a man risking a hundred and thirty days in the 'Hole'," said he, "just to smuggle a piece of pie to me in the hospital. Or to wave a greeting to me across the yard."

"I have lost a few ounces of gristle," he remarked laughing, as I touched his fleshless arm. "But I have gained tons in spirit. And while Woodrow Wilson could put me here, he can't make me look at the steel-bars or the stone roof. I can see beyond the bars the flowers; and above the roof I can see the stars, and beyond all this prison poison I can see my comrades bravely battling for the release of all workers from bondage. We are waging a winning fight and that makes me bear up and gives me new life."

The Shop Steward Movement as Developed in Seattle, Wash.

By WALKER S. SMITH.

(Editors' Note. In harmony with the endorsement by the Communist Labor Party of mass action by the workers and the shop committees and shop steward movement, we reprint from The Voice of Labor this week an article about the development of this latest phase of the class struggle in Seattle. For the elucidation of our readers we shall continue to publish from week to week articles relating to this movement.)

While the whole labor movement of Seattle appeared to have been torn with dissension over the question of industrial unionism, or the less clearly defined idea of One Big Union, a development along constructive though not so spectacular lines has proceeded beneath the turmoil. Advocates of the Shop Steward System have pushed their ideas to the front by addressing themselves directly to the workers in the unions.

Where shop stewards already exist the campaign has been to democratize them by instituting direct election from the rank and file, and to have each steward responsible for a smaller number of men. Where stewards have been merely for the purpose of colleting dues, seeing that no one in bad standing could work on a job, and takig applications for membership, there has been a strong effort to have these men take up and adjust the minor grievances of the workers in their respective shops. In all cases the advocates of the movement have emphasized the necessity for industrial unionism and for an understanding of Socialist economics.

All of this has involved various compromses and deviations from the Shop Steward System as it is theorized, but the issue has kept fairly clear on the most vital points. Election by the men themselves regardless of grades of skill in a shop, one steward to represent from 12 to 25 men and no more, adjustment of all grievances peculiar to a shop by action confined to that shop, frequent committee meetings of shop stewards within a plant or industry, and regular meetings of shop stewards of each craft throughout the city, have been the points emphasized.

A Real Shop Steward Movement.

Perhaps the cleanest cut example of the Shop Steward System in Seattle is to be found in the Journeyman Tailor's Union. The reasons are plain. The movement has encountered no opposition from either International or local officials, the union has declared for and is striving toward an industrial form, the local membership is nearly 100 per cent class conscious and is far obave the average in intelligence, and the Shop Steward System was set down almost complete within the framework of the union, without the necessary [illegible] and is far above the average in intelligence, and the presentation. Here is a sketch of the system as it exists now, a little more than three months since its introduction.

The union has a membership of about 1,000 distributed in 755 to 80 shops with from 5 to 40 workers employed in each shop. Every shop in the city is thoroughly organized. There is now one steward to each shop who represents alike the skilled, semi-skilled and apprentices, and who is elected by a joint meeting of all employees In addition to this there is a general grievance committee composed of five stewards elected at the regular fortnigthly meeting of all tailor shop stewards in the city.

The initial meetings for the election of shop stewards were called by the business agent of the union, who went to each shop and announced that on a certain date every employee was to be present in the office of the union. At the meeting of each shop group the business agent explained the workings of the Shop Steward System, but beyond a recommendation that the shop steward be a person possessing both the ability and the courage to meet the foreman or employer on any issue that might arise, he took no part in the elections. Nearly one-fourth of tailors' shop stewards are women.

What a Shop Steward Does

Decision on any action to be taken is made by the workers, whereupon the shop steward must carry out their wishes or be subjected to immediate recall. Adjustment of local grievances within a shop, if not made at once, is taken up at a meeting directly after working hours, or in extreme cases by a meeting on the job. Failing of an adjustment, appeal is made to the grievance committee of five, by whose decision the foreman or employer must abide or face a walk-out; and should the aggrieved workers dissent they can appeal to the stewards as a whole or the Union direct.

In addition to adjusting grievances the duties of a shop steward are to see that all union regulations are complied with, to initiate new members in an emergency, or otherwise to present their applications to the earliest union meeting, and to collect dues. Stewards from the taliors receive the pay checks of the workers in each shop, and after examining them to see that there is no shortage they pass them to the workers whom they represent. By this means the steward makes sure the apprentices are paid according to grade, and the union is also able to enforce its rule that no more than four hours of overtime shall be worked in any one week.

Aditional power has come to the tailors by reason of the Shop Steward System. After a worker has been employed for two weeks the employer cannot discharge him except by the joint consent of the grievance committee and the affected workers in a shop. Lay-off of workers on account of slack work is on terms approved by the workers in the shop, and the grievance committee, in accordance with union regulations. Seattle is now forcing a wage scale of $44 for 44 hours, with double time for overtime and absolutely no work on Saturday afternoon, helpers to receive $33 straight pay. The old scale was $36 for an 8 hour day with helpers drawing wages ranging from $20 to $26. This scale will probably go into general effect upon the Pacific Coast, and the credit is largely due to the Shop Steward System and the revolutionary spirit of the Seattle tailors.

The Boilermakers

Nearly one-half of Seattle's union members are employed in the shipyards. The largest union in the yards is the Boilermakers. Inability to bring this union into line with the Shop Steward System has been the main stumbling block to the progress of the movement. Shop Stewards exist, but they are answerable to a chief steward and to autocratic union officials, and not to the rank and file, the latter regarding them as a species of private police acting for the distrusted officials. These stewards are known by the wearing of a star, not by their name or because of their union activity on the job. No system exists in their selection; some being appointees of the chief steward, the business agent or other officials, some being approved in a general business meeting, but none being elected by the rank and file. Their dues are allowed by the union in return for their services as stewards.

Within the shops, however, the demand for systematization and democratization of the stewards is gaining ground. Recently in Duthie's shipyard there was a meeting of shop stewards from every craft, the first meeting of its kind to be held in a Seattle yard, and stewards from the boilmakers were present.

Spreading Fast

Steam and Marine Pipe Fitters have one steward to each shipyard in addition to a shop committee of five. These men are elected by the members on the job, or if appointed by the members of the committee or by the business agent, it is in default of action by the rank and file. One steward is elected on each job employing more than four men elsewhere throughout the city. This union has a membership of about 600, of whom 200 are employed by the Skinner & Eddy yard.

Both the Machinists' Union and the Shipyard Laborers, Riggers and Fasteners, are enthusiastic boosters for the Shop Steward System. In the latter union the assistant business agent has charge of the stewards, and makes arrangements for lectures on their duties and functions twice each month. Through the activity of these stewards the initial meeting of all stewards at Duthie's yard was called, and they are foremost in working out plans to coordinate all stewards in all of the yards. The majority of the stewards of both the unions mentioned are class conscious and are well versed in economics.

In the Longshoremen's union there are more students of the Shop Stewards System than in any organization, yet there are as yet no shop stewards, due to the fact that no effective plan has been developed to care for the short time jobs of loading or unloading cargo. A voluntary committee is working on the matter at this time, and with the present temper of the membership, an almost unanimous adoption of any plan which will leave control of the stewards in the hands of the rank and file can be foretold with complete assurance. Abolition of the business agent by substitution of shop stewards is one of the problems the committee is asked to figure out.

How It Works

As a sample of provisions which are now being inserted in various union constitutions, the following from Inside Electrical Workers, No. 46 is of interest:

Art. VIII, Sec. 1.—It shall be the duty of the first journeymen on the job to act as Steward until such time as there are five men or more on the job, when a vote must be taken to elect a Steward, which shall require a majority vote of the journeymen members on the job. The foreman to have no vote. No foreman or assistant foreman shall act as Steward.

"Sec. 2.— The Steward will be held responsible to the Executive Board and to the Local for the enforcement of the working rules and By-Laws."

Electrical workers stewards appoint assistants whenever there are so many workers on a job as to render it necessary, and they call in the business agent on any problem which they think is too large or too important to the entire union for the men on the one job to handle. The provision regarding votes of journeymen members is quite generally ignored, and helpers participate in the election of stewards. Weekly meetings are held of all shop stewards of this craft.

Propaganda

Ten thousand pamphlets on the Shop Steward System have been distributed in Seattle within the past six months. These have not been street sales. The pamphlets have gone directly into the union or have been quietly passed to workers in a shop prior to a call for the election of a steward. In addition to this there has been wide publication of articles dealing with the movement, and two men making the rounds of the unions delivering half-hour talks on the subject.

Having completed much of the preliminary propaganda work, a plan is now being mapped out whereby given yards will be called upon to elect stewards from the office employees, the various shops, the yard sweepers, etc., so as to affect a permanent organization of shop, deparment, yard and then finally of the entire industry in this district.

The death knell has sounded for craft unionism; the A. F. of L. belongs to the past. But that does not mean that the millions of members of the craft unions must be ignored, or that we must face the task of taking them one by one into the I. W. W. We know that a craft union crash is coming. When it comes we have to have in the autonomous and more or less unofficial Shop Steward System a means of holding together the productive units, so that One Big Union will arise from the wreck of the [illegible] A. F. of L.

THE OHIO SOCIALIST

No. 88 | Published at Cleveland, Ohio. | CLEVELAND, OHIO, OCTOBER 8th, 1919. | Address all mail to [illegible] Clark Ave., Cleveland, O. | $1.00 A YEAR

4,000 Years in Prison - That is the total of sentences given political prisoners - It means one hundred lives sacrificed to capitalist imperialism - Let not a day, let not an hour go by without a blow for their Liberation.

Act!

In our minds eye, every square inch of these United States is paved with good resolutions passed by workers.

LOOK AND YOU CAN SEE THE MILLIONS OF THEM YOURSELF!

Whereas and whereas and therefore be it resolved.

AND THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED—and the second the last word of the resolution was read every word of it was forgotten.

Are we against resolutions? No—but we are FOR ACTION.

Before action can be taken action must be planned.

And before action can be planned, action must be decided upon.

Resolutions passed by the workers in the interest of the workers, if they are to be worth more than simply the ink they are written in, must decide upon ACTION. They must contain a call to amass the workers, so that by their power they win their demands.

The formula then is this—DECIDE WHAT TO DO—PLAN HOW TO DO IT—CARRY OUT THE PLANS.

Resolutions decide what we must do. The reason the millions of resolutions passed by the workers have not been effective is because the second step in the formula, namely to plan how to do what is decided upon, is never taken.

AND BECAUSE OF THIS, ACTION IS NEVER HAD.

WE ARE FOR ACTION!

The working class ran have anything it wants if it ACTS unitedly politically and industrially. United action at any time for the release of political prisoners would be political action. United action by the workers must be had if political prisoners are again to take their place beside us as comrades in the cause that knows no defeat.

Debs has given his answer. "All or none" So it shall be.

We have always been given to the principle of "ALL TOGETHER".

But we wanted to save Debs' life.

And now Debs has chosen to die in jail. We bow to his choice. Only one in a milion men is man enough to make a sacrifice so great.

Debs has chosen to die in prison rather than gain freedom for himself alone.

DEBS WILL DIE IN PRISON—and so will many others —others who have been sentenced to ten, twenty, thirty years —UNLESS—

WE GET ACTION!

To get action we have planned to tour a number of speakers to the labor unions in the larger cities. We shall appear before them with a request for help—help not in sympathy or dollars and cents—but the kind of help which will open the prison gates and free all political prisoners.

DOWN TOOLS—that's the slogan.

Down tools, look your masters squarely in the face, point your finger toward Atlanta, Leavenworth, Alcatraz and say —"OPEN".

And so we again call upon you to assist and keep on assisting in the preliminaries.

Have you a LIBERATION FUND CONTRIBUTION LIST?

If you have, get the dollars from your fellow workers and acquaintances AT ONCE.

If you have not, send for one AT ONCE.

DOLARS ARE NEEDED.

Many dollars are needed—thousands of them.

REMIT NOW! And next we will report to you our action in the Liberators' campaign to GET ACTION from the workers, all of whom we know are READY to do all they can to FREE DEBS and ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS.

BROWN TO SHARTS

My dear Comrade:

Your article about the visit of the Liberators committee to the great Spartan is profoundly interesting and deeply touching. Mrs. Brown and I read it together I doing the reading, and I could hardly proceed because of blinding tears.

She feels that dear Gene should have taken the chance of getting out by signing, but I am glad that he declined.

He will live longer in prinson with the approval of his conscience, than he would at home without it, and, in any case, under present conditions, his burning soul will do more where it than it could do where we would like to have it towards spreading the rising, sweeping, consuming flames of the pending revolution by which all capitalists shall be burned from the earth and all gods from the sky, a burning upon which the salvation of the wo is dependent, for otherwise it must be lost.

The virtuous man,
Who, great in his humility, as kings
Are little in their grandeur; he who leads Invincibly a life of resolute good,
And stands amid the silent dungeon depths
More free and fearless than the trembling judge,
Who, clothed in venal power, vainly strove
To bind the impassive spirit.—Shelley.

Good News from New York

Organization work in the Communist Labor Party is speeding forward in a most encouraging manner. A telegram just received from New York gives this good news:

National Headquarters
Communist Labor Party.

In addition to other branches already reported to you, the following have joined the Communist Labor Party: In Manhattan the 1st and 2nd Russian Branches; the 3rd, 5th, 10th and 17th A. D.; three German Branches; rganization formed in the 8th A. D. Bronx, 3rd Russian Branch; German Branch: 3rd and 4th A. D. organizing. In New Jersey, 1st Russian Branch and the Newark Fort Lee Branch.

Benjamin Gitlow.

WE HAVE ORDERED THE PRESS!

Yes, we have written the manufactures that we are ready to sign a contract for a printing press for the Ohio Socialist to be delivered at the earliest possible moment.

This action has been made possible by the generosity of the hundreds of comrades who have so loyally stood by us these last few trying months and by their hard work and self denial contributed over $4,000.00 for the purchase of the printing plant.

Early last spring we opened a campaign for twenty thousand subscribers. We hoped that with this list of readers to be able to make the Ohio Socialist a twice a week paper, thus laying the foundation for a daily. Our readers worked hard and faithfully with us in this laudable effort and our mailing list was doubled in a very short while. From a list of 6,000 we mounted to 13,000. Then came the White Terror of the capitalist clas beginning with the notable first of May.

It was then the capitalist printers of Cleveland refused to publish the Ohio Socialist. Without an hour's notice we were told they would not print for us. At the last moment we were able to make arrangements with Local Dayton, Socialist Party, whereby we were able to print on their press. This arrangement was very unsatisfactory on account of the distance and added expense of expressage.

For the last few weeks we have been printing on an aut of date press in Cleveland. But this tvo, is very unsatisfactory. The press is old, nearly worn out. It frequently calls a strike of its assembled parts and refuses to either work or walk out. It has learned to perfection the art of "striking on the job". It is because of these trying conditions, and realizing that the Party must own its own press if it was to continue unhampered its great work of education and organizing the workers, that we were moved to take up the campaign for $10,000 for a press and printing plant for the Ohio Socialist. The response of the comrades to this call has been most generous. On October 1st, over $4,000.00 has been contributed for this purpose. This generous support assures us that we can rely upon our comrades to stand by us until our press is paid for and a full and up to date printing equipment is acquired.

The capitalist class is organizing to defeat the workers. We may soon expect capitalist printers to refuse to print our publications. Unless we are prepared to publications. Unless we are prepared to publish our own papers, books, pamphlets and leaflets, our propaganda will suffer greatly and the development of workingclass power will receive a set-back that will be a tremendous injury.

We have ordered a press of sufficient capacity to print a daily.

A linotype must be installed just as soon as possible, and other equipment added as funds permit.

We are preparing for not only the needs of today but of the future. We wust prepare to make the Ohio Socialist a greater and still greater power in the working-class fight for emancipation. We hope that when our new press is set up we will be able to print a semi-weekly

And now comrades, and we mean every reader, every Party member and every sympathizer, every class-conscious worker—we say this: we are going to do every thing within our power to make the Ohio Socialist a bigger, better paper; a more powerful weapon for the workers in the class struggle. We want every one of you to help us realize our aims. For they are your aims too. You have helped before. But the fight is not won. You must help again. It is your fight and as you fight so do you deserve to win. Therefore take up the matter of securing funds for the new press among your comrades and fellow workers. Give another dollar toward it. Get a comrade to do the same. Don't let the press fund drive lag, for now that the press is ordered, it MUST BE PAID FOR. Let's have your dollar—NOW.

As you fight so do you deserne to win!

As you fight so do you deserve to win!

The Land of Black Despair

Berlin, August 20.

It is impossible to describe the blank pessimism which is all but universal in Germany today. People are hopeles. without faith in God, themselves their rulers, the Allies, or the neutrals; in capitalism or Bolshevism; in democracy, revolution, or monarchy. And they are too tired and half-starved to care. The casual visitor to Berlin Frankfurt, or other German cities today finds little changed—the streets a bit dirtier, the policing laxer; but the theatres full, the cafes crowded, the main streets gay. Behind this facade is a despair such as only a people with the intense self-consciousness of the Germans can know.

It is startling to find so constant a consciousness of the immediacy of the abyss. You find all sorts of men — Professor Nicolai, for instance— looking forward to the worst winter of the war and to a victory of the workingsmen's councils (soviets) as its consequence, then to their failure, and then to utter chaos. "If only we had leaders," began a young doctor who eat with us. "Leaders don't count any more," Nicolai broke in. "It is only the mass. It can do whatever it wills, and as in every country the mass is stupid and blind and without intelligence." In Russia the Revolution ushered in a radiant era of new hopes. Even the Bolsheviks have a kind of religious fervor. In Germany the November revolution brought a glimmer of light, but since then the night has steadily deepened. The revolutionary leaders themselves make no glowing promises. They say with Nicolai: "The revolution will come, not from idealistic motives, but from harsh economic pressure, from the bitterness of despair: and once it comes, it will be impossible to control it."

You hear little complaint of the treaty. It is accepted with a curious combination of fatalism and conviction that it cannot endure. You find no intention to resist it, simply a calm assumption that it cannot possibly be executed. Nationalists papers deplore the "absence of national self-conciousness" which takes territorial amputations with such a shrug. The only provision much discussed is that concerning coal.

According to the treaty, Germany is to deliver forty million tons of coal per year to the Entente, beginning in September. The Frankfurter Zeitung calculates that this leaves Germany about thirty million tons of anthracite per year for her own use — less than a fifth of her peace-time annual consumption. Germany produced 191.500.000 tons in 1913, and used 171.000.000 tons at home. If she loses Upper Silesia as well as the Saar and the Aachen regions as coal sources, she loses 50 + 12 + 3½ — 65½ million tons, leaving her, at her peace-time rate of production, 126.000.000 tons. But the lowered strength and productivity of German workers, the shorter work-hours, and the intermittent strikes which even Herr Noske has been unable totally to suppress, have reduced the production to fifty-five per cent. that of peace-times, or about seventy million tons per year, and it treatens to become less still. The peace treaty obligates Germany to deliver more than half of this to the Entente. Assuming that the amputated regions accounted for a quarter of the coal consumption of 1913 — probably a large figure — her need would be for 143.000.000 tons a year. Against this she will have thirty. Germany will have scarcely enough coal to run the railways on reduced schedules without providing for heating homes or running industries.

Many communes are laying in supplies of wood for household use, and the production of lignite fortunately is not so catastrophically slight as that of coal. But small dependence can be placed upon the schemes for recruiting regiments of volunteer miners—especially when labor regards such plans as capitalist camouflage — and Germany is face to face with the fact that she cannot reckon an sufficient coal even to operate her railways and warm her houses, without beginning to supply her industries. Low as is the present operation of her factories, the general expectation is that more than half the factories now in operation will have to close down next winter for lack of coal. The consequences of the resultant unemployment and discontent can only be guessed.

The food situation is slightly better. Prices are high, but fats and flour are beginning to come in. The week I arrived in Berlin the city was flooded with American chocolate — the first shipments since the lifting of the blockade. Cripples—legless, armless, noseless, or eternally shaking their diseased heads—and old women and little children, and worse still, healthy-bodied ex-soldiers with nothing better to do, shouted at one on every street corner, even out in the suburbs, "American chocolate — ten marks a cake!" People bought it — at what to them was $5.00 a pound. The first chocolate in years—no other city ever sold so much chocolate in six months as was sold in that first week in Berlin.

In this desperate situation—high food prices, coal shortage, forced unemployment — the social revolutionaries see their hope. The political revolution workingmen will tell you that but workingmen will tell you that they have been cheated of the social revolution. Steps have been taken toward socialization, but they have been faltering steps, and the Russian soviet system is pictured in sharp contrast as something truly proletarian and. whatever its defects, at least equalizing. Your German workman is very bitter about the revelries of the rich, determined that the present inequalities shall not persist, unwilling to toil on for the benefit as he sees it, of people who do not toil beside him. You find the same temper in the scores of socialist and communist pamphlets which are on sale on every news-stand, in the posters and stickers posted through the cities; in the meetings of workingmen and women, of workers' children, of revolutionary students.

Revolts are spasmodic througout Germany today, but they are not products of deliberate underground campaigns of agitation; they break out against the will of the leaders growing out of the desperateness of present misery. When Hamburg sausage-makers are caught using cat-meat, the city goes temporarily Bolshevik; when Chemnitz is breadless for weeks, it revolts. The revolts are put down with monotonous brutality by Noske's half million volunteer guards.

In the German militarism of today there is no menace to France. The new German army, made up of professional officers, of young boys who have been through five years of war fever without seeing war realities, and unemployed men in desperate need of steady pay, may stubbornly fly the flag of the old regime, but it is directed against communist uprisings at home. The ubiquitous recruiting posters, calling upon volunteers to defend law and order, all raising the scarecrow of Bolshevism, are evidence enough. It may be menace or salvation to Germany, but it is nothing to France.

The prophets of social revolution in Germany — Ernst Daumig, Richard Muller, Kurt Geyer, Ledebour, the Left Wing Independents and the Communists, are praying for the demobilization which the treaty promises, in the hope that if Noske's army is reduced to 100.000 the revolution may be bloodless. They are sure it is coming. The next revolution may find them readier. In November, 1918, the change was personal rather than organic. Next winter may find a national network of workingmen's councils, homogeneously organized, prepared to take over the functions of government and operate as an effective national soviet system. The Communists and Independent Socialists are working to that end, but their bitter feud with the old Socialist party retards their progress.

Workingmen's, peasants', and soldiers' councils were formed anarchically in 1918 — some by self-appointment, some on nomination by the two socialist parties, some by shouted app- lovers or old regime officers. There are no soldiers' councils in the army today; the peasants' councils have died of inanition; and there are two sets of workingmen's councils. The Independents and Communists have seceded from the national councils, controlled by the Right Wing Socialists, and the Right Wingers and Democrats have seceded from the Berlin organization, controlled by the more radicals groups. The Right Wing group has government subsidies and occupies government offices — the Central Council of Workingmen's Councils is in the old Prussian House of Lords! Noske periodically raids or arrests the other group, and thereby gives them added power in the working class. The Independents now control the vast majority of Berlin workmen and the Saxon industrial field, and are threatening to win control in Westphalia and elsewhere. Utterly disregarding the Government's proposed laws regarding councils, they are proceeding to call new elections for workingmen's councils throughout Germany, in which the factory will be the basic unit rather than a geographical district, and only employed head or hand workers may vote rather than any one with an income under ten thousand marks. Their strength revealed itself on July 21 when the independents called a general strike; the Right Wing Socialists denounced it, but the strike was general.

No immediate betterment of the workingman's economic position is foreseen as a result of this social revolution — only an equalization of misery. Workingmen would be quartered in the half-empty homes of the rich — so much may be accomplished before winter even by the bourgeois municipal governments of Berlin and Charlottenburg, which, however, will pay for them, as the Communists would not. The unhealthy gaiety of Berlin-West and the Friedrichstrasse would end. And in a community of poverty they would start to rebuild on a new and fairer basis. So they picture it—they, the most hopeful group in all Germany. A Verzweiflungsrevolution, they call it—a revolution growing out of desperation. Whether the hungry workmen who have got out of the habit of steady work, will work harder or more regularly for a communist government, is a question.

One comes out of Germany utterly at sea, uncertain of the future. Ash-men's salaries have decupled; professors' barely changed. Old values have gone by the board. Yet one suspects that if Entente diplomacy were a little shrewder and less revengeful it might still save the old [illegible] regime.

From The Nation.

Europe Has More Faith in Marx then in Christ.

Col. Robbins tells Ministers in discussion of American Economic Problems.

"Out of Russia comes a challenge that is more vital and fundamental than the issue which confronted the western world in the autumn of 1914. Though the challenge comes from Russia it is not peculiar to that country. It is a challenge that represents the crystalization of the protest of the disinherited against a class state, a class church and a class economic order as they have existed."

Extending his arms to quiet the applause of 200 clergymen upon his introduction, Col. Raymond Robbins, former Red Cross representative in Russia, thus announced what he considers the paramount issue in "The Church's Outlook in the Present Social and Industrial Unrest."

Before the ministers of the Cleveland Federation of Churches at a luncheon September 30th in Euclid Avenue Baptist church, Col. Robbins outlined conditions in Russia as he saw them in his service abroad as a Red Cross worker, and pointed out the challenge to the American economic order with the prophecy that "unless America can produce a better system for the welfare of human life than that coming out of Russia, America is doomed."

Hearty applause and choruses of "amens" by the clergymen punctuated the noon address by Col. Robbins. The speach came at the close of the forenoon program in which the ministers were addressed on industrial and social questions.

"America is at present the only nation whose institutions are valid enough to meet the challenge of the world's unrest," asserted Col. Robbins.

"We have the capacity if our intelligence is equal to our resources.

"This protest of the disinherited against state, church and economic order of the class regime expresses the loss of faith in those institutions as they have existed. The people of Europe trust Karl Marx more than Christ.

"Britain, even under Lloyd George, has not been able to enforce the public law in the cases at Liverpool, Belfast and Dover because the law has not had the supporting sentiment of the mass of people. Clemenceau's rumored retirement upon the conclusion of the Paris peace conference and the strength of the socialist following in France are but other significant straws in the current of the world's history. Italy is masquerading over a potential volcano.

"The fundamental characteristics of weakness in this European situation is that the masses, 93 per cent. of the people, have been betrayed by the classes, the other 7 per cent., and have lost faith in the institutions of state, church and economic order."

Three dangers Col. Robbins pointed out in the American economic order with the statement that the point of stress in the present unrest is in economic conditions.

"I have been a laborer and I am now, in a small measure, a capitalist," the speaker continued.

"In my boyhood days I worked as a coal miner twelve hours a day and seven days a week at the rate of $1 a day. But from my gold mining in Yukon, I have been able to qualify as a small capitalist. So I have had experience on both sides of the present issue.

"Capitalistic production has shown in the last two years that it is equal to the demand made upon it. The keen competition of free industry is an economic asset. It is only when capital attempts to monopolize, to cut off the incentive of competitive production, that it becomes dangerous.

"Regarding labor as a commodity is the second danger. We must remember that the rights of capital are the rights of property, but that the rights of labor are those of persons. That is fundamental personal rights are superior to those of property in any clash of the two."

Quoting from Lincoln's first message to congress in December, 1861, Col. Robbins asked for a show of hands from those who knew the autorship and secured but a scant half-dozen in response:

> "Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the highest consideration."

In emphasizing this quotation from Lincoln, the speaker indorsed the strike as an instrument to compel the attention of capital.

"A strike is a school kept for those who won't learn in any other," he asserted.

The tendency to trust force rather than injustice was cited as the third grave danger in the existing economic order.

"Reliance on the power of the bayonet should be placed secondary to the rule of reason. The bayonet is an emergency instrument, and only as such should it be used."

THE THREE CHICAGO CONVENTIONS

By Max Eastman in The Liberator.

The convention of the old Socialist Party began with a belligerent apology by the national secretary, Adolph Germer. The convention of the Left Wing began with a great singing of the "Internationale," three cheers for Revolutionary Socialism, three cheers for the Russian Soviet Republic, three cheers for Debs, and three cheers for the I. W. W. The convention of the Communist Party began with an announcement that "the management committee has decided that there shall be no smoking during the convention," followed by an accurate rendition of the "Internationale" with full orchestra and brass.

These different ways of beginning were characteristic. In the old S. P. convention, the "parent body," the emotional tone was a little apologetic throughout, a little wan and anxious, and yet at the same time indignant of criticism — about what you might expect of the mother of twins.

The Left Wing convention—which became the Communist Labor Party — had a little of the quality of a revival meeting. The delegates were always singing and shouting and feeling that the true faith was about to be restored in their hearts and homes. At least they were, until the Program Committee made its report, training some big guns from the Manifesto of the Third International on them, and they realized that they must either put their names to a program of deliberate, hardheaded revolutionary science, or go back where they came from. They took a long, hard breath then, and most of them "came through," but they did not come through singing.

The Communist Convention—more properly called the Slavic-American Communist Convention—was characterized throughout by a spirit of youthful but sophisticated efficiency. It was a consciously expert convention. It showed the rest of them what a convention ought to be. It was almost incredibly neat and clean and regular. I was sitting there some time before the formal opening, admiring the way the big sheets of heavy yellow paper were spread over the delegates' tables and folded and tacked underneath; I was admiring the smooth high railing of new wood which divided the delegates' stalls from the audience room at the back; in particular I was admiring the soda-water fountain shine and polish on the white oil-cloth which covered the press-table where I had laid my hat; I was just reflecting that these things had surely been prepared and arranged by an unmarried lady of advanced years, when a young Russian comrade came up with a damp cloth and asked me kindly to remove my hat so that he could "clean" that oil-cloth!

A Little History

In order to understand how these conventions came to be, and what they came to be, it is necessary to apply the mind to some rather complicated history. I will generalize that history as clearly and fairly as I can.

There have always been elements in the American Socialist Party who were more revolutionary than the majority, and in a state of continual protest against the official counduct of the party. They were more devoted to the principle of the class struggle, less willing to waste energy in office-seeking, reformism, and parliamentarism. They believed in the I. W. W. They believed in the Communist Manifesto of 1848. These elements were for the most part distinctly American; they were never very conspicuous in the "foreign federations" affiliated with the American party. And also they were never very strong.

The proletarian revolution in Russia and the surrounding countries—proving the literal truth of almost every word in the Communist Manifesto — gave them their strength. It sent a wave of militant or Bolshevik, or Communist, Socialism around the world. And this wave naturally reached the Slavic Federations first, and affected them the most. They became almost unanimously and automatically Bolshevik. At the same time their membership increased enormously—the gospel being accepted by thousands of new recruits, both through a genuine emotion not unrelated to patriotism, and through expediency, it being generally understood that a Russian would not amount to much at home unless he had been a socialist here. This very willing membership was organized into a magnificent political machine by the brainy officials of the Slavic Federations, and it supplied both revolutionary will and revolutionary power to the scattered elements of the American Left Wing.

These officials were able to cast the vote and appropriate the funds of about 40.000 out of the 100.000 members of the Socialist Party. They made Louis C. Fraina's paper, The Revolutionary Age, and its wide circulation, possible. They made it possible, in spite of the Postoffice censorship, to carry the "Left Wing Manifesto and Program," and the motto, "Capture the Party for Revolutionary Socialism," into the hands of almost every Socialist in the country. No one can estimate the amount that this propaganda accomplished — as compared with the direct affect of the European revolutions upon the party membership — but it is certain that by last May or June on overwhelming majority of American Socialists were committed to the Left Wing Program in general, and the Slavic Federations formed the solid and well-organized heart of this majority.

That all sounds very simple, but it was not so simple. In the first place the Left Wing took to itself a degree of organization and autonomy, which gave the Right Wing officials who controlled the party, plenty of emotional, and not a few legal, grounds for expelling Left Wing members. The Slavic Federations were expelled in a body; the State of Michigan was expelled; other states, locals, branches and members were expelled. The membership of the party was reduced by and during these proceedings —according to the report of its own secretary — from 109.000 to 39.000.

In the second place, the leaders of the Slavic Federations — partly as a result of their expulsion, partly through a thinly veiled nationalistic egotism, and partly through a sincere if somewhat theological desire to exclude all wavering or "centrist" elements from the new organization, decided at the national Left Wing conference in June, that the idea of capturing the American Socialist party, or even attempting to capture it, was wrong, and that a call should be issued for the immediate organization of a 'Communist Party.'

In the third place the expelled "Michigan Crowd"— although really too political-minded to be called communists—joined with the Slavic Federations in this particular demand, and the Federation Leaders made every use of this increase of their voting power in the Left Wing, although privately condemning the Michigan ideas and intending to suppress them when it came time to adopt a platform.

Even so, however, they were unable to control the Left Wing conference. It decided by a considerable majority to adhere to the original program of capturing the party, and it elected a "Left Wing Council" to carry this out. The Slavic Federation and the "Michigan crowd" then decided to ignore the decision of the conference and call a Communist Convention, whether the rest of the Left Wing agreed to do it or not.

The majority of the "Left Wing Council," together with the Revolutionary Age— the organ of the whole movement—denounced them as "traitors" for a week or two, but then suddenly capitulated in the middle of the summer, abandoned the slogan, "Capture the Party for Revolutionary Socialism," upon which their paper had built up its constituency and united the American revolutionaries, and joined in the call for an immediate Communist Convention to meet in Chicago on September 1st.

This sudden change of front occurred so late that there was no time left, even if there had been a moral possibility, for those who had united upon the original plan to unite upon the change. For better or worse, the Left Wing was split into two camps.

On the one hand there were the heads of the Slavic Federations and the Michigan Socialists, with the Revolutionary Age and all the National Machinery of the Left Wing organization, in the hands of Louis C. Fraina of Boston, I. E. Ferguson of Chicago, C. E. Ruthenberg of Ohio, Maximilian Cohen of New York, John Ballam of Massachusetts, Hiltzik of the Left Wing Jewish Federation, Jay Lovestone, Rose Pastor Stokes and a few other non-Slavic delegates.

On the other hand, adhering to the original program of attempting to capture the party, there was the minority of the National Left Wing Council, Ben Gitlow and John Reed of New York, with other prominent Socialists of the Left like Kate Greenhalgh (Kate Sadler) of Washington, Joe Coldwell of Rhode Island, Fred Harwood of New Jersey, Max Bedacht of California, Jack Carney of Duluth, William Bross Lloyt of Chicago, Ludwig Lore, Editor of the Volkszeitung of New York, Margaret Prevey of Ohio. Tichenor of St. Louis, Owens of Illinois, Wagenknecht of Ohio, Katterfeld of Indiana, Mrs. Harmon of Kansas, and 92 other delegates from 22 States. To this group there was also promised the adherence of the Italian Socialist Federation, and the Scandinavian and Left Wing German Federations, together with 19 Slavic Federations who were expelled from the major organization for resisting the machine.

Each of these groups would like to think that the rank and file of the American Communist movement was represented in its convention. But it is impossible to decide that question now. The rank and file never had time to consider and act upon the issue between them. It was a division among leaders, and a very vague and queer one too. Delegates were wandering from one convention to another under indefinite instructions, or no instructions at all, except the understanding that they were to form a party in accord with the Manifesto of the Third International. Out of this unhappy confusion almost everybody hoped and strove for a unity of the revolutionary elements, except the heads of the Slavic Federations, whose absolute control would have disappeared if unity had been achieved, and who maintained that their absolute control was necessary to the formation of a pure and perfect party of communism

The Parent Body

If this confusion of elements represented is exasperating, it is at least a relief to know that the conventions occurred in some historic order. The Socialist Party Convention was convened in Machinists Hall on Saturday morning, August 30. The Left Wing delegates who were seated in that convention, walked out and joined with the rejected delegates waiting in a room downstairs, to form the Convention of the Communist Labor Party, on Sunday afternoon. The Convention of the Communist Party was called to order in "Smolny Institute," a hall leased by the Russian Federation of Chicago, on Monday, September 1st, at about noon.

Art Young and I arrived at Machinists' Hall early Saturday morning—early enough to find Julius Gerber looking like an unsettled thundercloud, and Jack Reed beaming. This is not because Julius was vanquished and Jack Reed victorious, but because Julius doesn't enjoy a fight and Jack does. It seems that some of the Left Wingers arrived early at the building, and decided after a caucas to go upstairs and take possession of the hall, putting their own national secretary, Wagenknecht, in the chair when the time came, and proceeding to organize the Convention. Having elected their National Executive Committee by an overwhelming majority, and having through their committee duly appointed their secretary, they felt justified in this procedure, notwithstanding that the election had been set aside as fraudulent by the old National Executive Committee. So they proceeded upstairs in a rather formidable frame of mind. They were met and opposed at the door by Julius Gerber, the secretary of local New York, and it seems that Gerber in his turn was "set aside." We heard a good many different stories of this incident by eye-witnesses, and none of them were quite so blood-curdling as what we read in the newspapers. It seemed to one of our informers that Gerber could have licked Reed, if Reed hadn't held him so far up in the air that he couldn't reach down." Another comrade said that Reed acted just like a nice big dog, shaking himself. Another reported that there was "a little windpipe work on both sides." Gerber stated to the convention that he made Reed understand that "swinging a sledge-hammer with the proletariat is just as good a preparation for life's battles as playing football at college. At any rate the "Left Wingers" got in, and there they were and what was the right wing going to do about it?

Some of them didn't know what they were going to do, but Adolf Germer knew. He may not have consulted anybody when he arranged to have the police there, but he consulted the membership figures and the record of recent votes for officers, and votes on referendums, which were in his possession, and he decided that if the official minority were going to exclude the voting majority from the convention, they would have to do it with the forces of the capitalist state. In that he was entirely right.

Germer never denied that he had arranged to have the police there, although some members of the national committee denied it for him. When he was asked poinblank across the floor of the convention whether the officials of the Socialist Party brought the police to that building he said, "What officials do you mean?" and withdrew his attention while some interrupter took up the talk. But he did deny that he told the police to "treat 'em rough," as two passionately indignant delegates subsequently informed the convention. He said that he asked the contested delegates two or three times "in a comradely spirit" to leave the room, before he told the police to put them out, and that he didn't tell the police anything else.

Two women who were among those put out, swore to the truth of the following account; one of them, Mrs. Harmon of Kansas, was later seated in the Convention, and made the convention believe what she said:

"The first thing I saw was that they were trying to eject Reed through the door. Soon after that Germer came up to us where we were sitting, and said, 'You'll have to clear the room.'

"'I'm a delegate,' I said.

"'It don't make any difference,' he said. 'Clear the room. If you don't I'll call the police.'

"I said to myself, 'Well, I have a right to the convention floor, and I'm going to sit here till the police tell me to go.'

"Pretty soon a policeman came up to me and said, 'You'll have to go, Misses.'

"I went, but I went kind of slow, and I heard Germer say, Officer, clear the hall, and if they don't go, policemen, do your duty!'

"So the delegates who were with Berger and Germer stayed in the hall, and the rest of us went out, and our delegate who received the largest vote in the State of Kansas was put out of the Socialist Convention by the police!"

Perhaps these excessively lively preliminaries accounted for the unceremonious opening of the convention. With a beautiful upstairs hall like a little theatre, one whole side a great sunny sky-window, and decorations containing twenty-five American flags, I expected a certain amount of introductory hallelujah of some kind. But Germer simply stood up, looking like a big welldressed police-sergeant off duty, banged the gavel on the table, and started in.

He stated to a round of applause that "We intend to follow the splendid example set by our comrades in Russia," and added in a severe silence, "By that I want it distinctly understood that we do not intend to adopt the same methods."

He struck the key-note of the convention there. And he struck another key-note when he said, "The St. Louis program and the jail-sentences of our officials prove the revolutionary and anti-Scheidemann character of the party."

It is characteristic of old people to attach a great importance to what they have done in the past. And the majority in this convention were old. Even some of the young ones were old. They seemed to think it was personal and impertinent for any one to be chiefly concerned about what they were doing now, or what they were going to do in the future.

"There is no issue at stake"—"We are all agreed in principle" — "It is all a matter of personal jealousy"—"If a few so-called leaders would get out of the way, we could have a united party" —that was the burden of the talk and feeling in the ante-rooms of the convention. I suppose it will be a rather exasperating thing to say, but I felt sorry for a good many of the delegates. They had served their time, they had born the heat of battle when some of us were in our cradles, and then to crown it all they had stood up under the bitter test of the St. Louis declaration, going around their home towns for two years, solitary, vilified, whipped with the hatred of their neighbors, beaten and worn down by the universal war-madness of a nation, and not flinching. They could not understand why they should be shoved aside. And I could not either, any more than I can understand death. But it is significant that in the conventions of the young, the conventions whose eyes were on the future and their muscles ready for action, there was not a single person to be found who would say that the split was personal, and that there were no vital issues at stake. They could not think of saying it; they were wholly absorbed in the issues at stake.

Germer's speech did not sail very clear after he began denouncing the Left Wing leaders as "Harry Orchards of the Socialist movement," describing them as going about "in the dark like midnight thieves sneaking from ear to ear, whispering, indubitably hoping thereby that the comrades may think there is something wrong with those selected by the comrades to manage the affairs of the party." Cries of "Count the Ballots!" "Is it in the Constitution that you have to make a speech!" brought his defense to an end, and the balloting for temporary chairman began.

Seymour Stedman, the Right Wing candidate, received 88 votes, and J. M. Coldwell of Rhode Island, the Left Wing candidate, 37. There were enough Left Wing delegates in the building to have elected Coldwell with a substantial majority, even though 40.000 of their members had already gone over to the Communist Party, but only these 37 had trickled through the official sieve. The rest were "contested," and most of them never got through the credentials committee, and many of them never tried.

The pulse of the convention rose noticeably when Stedman took the chair. His sturdy and winning grace of utterance made the delegates feel a little sure they were not wrong. But his speech, like Germer's was a summing up for the defense. And his defense, like Germer's, rested upon a record that is past, and, in this time of rapid movement, stale and ready to be forgotten. He did not say that the Socialist Party would join the Third International and loyally stand up with our Russian comrades who are starving and dying and pouring out their blood in battle for socialism, and everybody knew that it would not.

Stedman scored a point as chairman when some impertinent delegate, "rose to inquire" why we should elect a sergeant-at-arms when we have the police force?

"Well," he said, "that, election was provided for at a time when it was understood that all the comrades would be gentlemen at least." But the police question would not down. It would not let itself be forgotten for two hours at a time. Once it was a white-faced ministerial comrade in the audience room, at the side of the hall.

"Comrades, I demand the attention of the delegates!" he shouted. "I just heard one of these policemen threaten to throw a comrade down-stairs, and he said 'You won't light on your feet either, you'll think you came down in an aeroplane.' I ask you if that is the way visiting Socialists are going to be treated by this convention!"

"What kind of Socialists are they?" from the New York delegation.

From Stedman: "I should suggest that it would be a good idea to forget what occurred this morning. At the present time Chicago is under the police department, whether you like it or not."

From George Goebel: "I say anybody who says we invited the police here are God damn liars!"

From Germer: "I'm glad they're here!"

And this second storm was no sooner past, and the trouble hearts quieting themselves a little, when in pops a letter from the Chicago Machinists—that one dread sovereign of all political socialists, a real labor union:

Dear Comrades and Friends:

On behalf of the Die and Tool Makers Lodge No. 113, International Association of Machinists, and the Machinists Society of Chicago, we protest against the harboring and use of police in this hall. This hall is the property, as well as the sanctuary, of a progressive and militant labor organization, based upon the class struggle. We do not permit our members to work under police protection; we can not conceive how we can let any meeting in this hall be carried on under police protection, when we as an organization condemn it and oppose it. While we are not represented in your convention as individual members or representatives of an organization, we nevertheless are with you in spirit. For all these reasons we can not let the police remain as your protectors, or perhaps as your invited guests, without submitting our deepest protest. We call upon you to take steps to remove the police or make such arrangements as will satisfy us that you are not responsible for the presence of the police.

We are not asking this to put hardships on you, but for the best interest of the Socialist party and the labor movement in general.

Yours for International Solidarity,
Executive Board Die & Tool Makers Lodge No. 113

After a serious pause one of the delegates proposed a resolution stating that it is "the sense of this convention" that the police are not here at the invitation of the party officials. Another remarked that such a resolution would prove that the convention had no sense, for they would be stating something that they could not know.

Classens of New York offered a resolution "that the police department of Chicago shall be and hereby is disbanded."

Mayor Hoan of Milwaukee asserted that "they came here under the invitation of Germer for the purpose of protecting our legitimate rights and purposes," and proposed that no apologies should be made.

"We in Milwaukee," said Berger, "would have done it a good deal better than Germer did, because we have our own police." His speech was the straightest one I heard. "I've never tried to be revolutionary," he said, "but I've tried to be honest. If the police weren't here, none of you would be, so what's the use of all this hypocrisy!"

It was finally voted to send a communication to the Machinists union stating the facts, but just what the facts were, nobody knew—unless it was the policeman who told a reporter that Germer had called up the chief and asked that they be on hand early.

In the midst of this storm a telegram arrived from some rustic local: "Peace and harmony will lead us to success—hurrah for International Socialism!"

The Left Wing Delegates — about 30 of them— walked out of this convention after it adopted a motion to consider (but not act upon) the report of the National Executive Committee, before the status of all contested delegates was determined. J. M. Coldwell of Rhode Island simply rose in his chair and said, "At this point I am going to leave this convention and I call upon all delegates of the Left Wing to withdraw."

"That is your privilege," said Stedman, and the business of the convention proceeded.

It was a business largely as I have indicated, of selfjustification upon the part of the official machine for resisting the Left Wing machine up to the point of wrecking the party—although the Left Wing Machine had organized a clear Majority of the members. And this business was made interesting by the fact that a lively handful of semi-Left Wingers, or at least conscientious objectors against tyranny, was left on the floor. They were led by Kruse, who stated that in spite of his disgust at the acts of the officials, he believed it was a question of "sane Socialism against direct action," and he intended to "stick by the party and make it what he thought it ought to be."

Judge Panken of New York was less moderate. For him it was a question of "tying up with a bunch of anarchists," and he was glad of everything they did.

A delegate from Maryland supported him with the statement that "Every organization has an inherent right to preserve itself." He said "we lawyers" in the course of his remarks, but it was not quite clear whom he meant to include.

Another delegate offered the prudent remark that "We've got to endorse the action of the National Executive Committee, but we've also got to be able to inform our constituents that we gave the N. E. C. hell!"

Barney Berlin of Chicago, for twenty-five years a worker in the Socialist movement, was the old man Nestor of this council, presenting what seems to me the only justification for the National Executive Committee that there is. He reminded the convention of historic instances in which legal and constitutional forms and formulas had been violated in the interest of a deeper principle, and concluded, "I have not been in harmony with certain tendencies in the N. E. C., but I glory in their spunk in having saved the party."

That is a pretty final attitude to adopt toward all the atrocity-stories that have accompanied this conflict, and it applies equally to both wings. The people who created the Socialist party all of them have enough healthy anarchy in their blood, to transgress the forms of law when they are aroused over a principle. There is no doubt that they were so aroused, and did so strangress on both sides. And while I thing that the principle on the Left side is the true one, and therefore I can appland their "spunk" a little more heartily than that of the Right, nevertheless I recognize a similar moral quality in them both. "Necessity knows no law," is a maxim that lives in the heart of every live man.

Somebody will ask me just what the principle is upon which this split occurred, and which enabled trustworthy people to commit so many moral and legal atrocities. And I answer, in the most general terms, as follows:

It is a question of whether the Socialist theory shall be permitted to recede into the cerebrum, where it becomes a mere matter of creed, ritual and sabbath-day emotion, as the Christian theory has done, or whether it shall be kept in live and going contact with every-day nerves and muscles of action.

Before parting from the picture of the Right Wing convention, I ought to state that a motion endorsing the action of the old N. E. C. in setting aside as invalid the recent election of a new N. E. C., was passed by those remaining in the convention, without a dissenting vote. I ought to record also some of the indignant demands for "justice" to the Left Wing, or what remained of it, which were occasionally voiced by comrades of the right. In particular I preserve a picture of George Goebel's long earnest and excited figure, darting about over the convention like a superintending dragon-fly. "Aw comrades, let's take a chance on fair play!" was one of his characteristic interpellations.

It was twilight when the Left Wing delegates convened in the billiard room down stairs—twilight that came dimly through ground glass windows into a low room with dull blue walls. But there was more life to be felt there—if life is spontaneous volition —than anywhere else during all the conventions. It seemed as though a thing with growth in it were being born in that place. In the other places whatever came, was engineered into being by the perceptible workings of an established machine. This may be— in cold reality—either a good or a bad sign for the Communist Labor Party. I record it simply as a fact.

Wagenknecht, who had been made National Secretary by that Executive Committee whose election was declared invalid upstairs, opened the convention here. The sound of his gavel was greeted with a song and those cheers for which all the delegates stood up. Wagenknecht's speech was a simple statement that having done everything else in his power to give the membership a change to express itself, he had summoned the delegates here "as the Regular Convention of the Socialist Party of the United States." He then presided during the election of Owens of Illinois as Temporary Chairman.

Owens is a cripple—pale, but jolly and fearless as crippled people sometimes are. I can remember one sentence of his speech: "We must be ready to back up the revolutionary implications of everything we do here, and if it leads us along with Debs we must be willing to go there."

Margaret Prevery was elected vice-chairman, and soon took Owen's place in the chair. It would have been well if she had stayed there throughout the convention, for she was not prepared in her mind for the actions which were taken on the floor, but she was the most able and good-humored and the best-looking chairman in the place. In its initial mood of exaltation the convention hesitated a little at the election of a sergeant-at-arms, and finally appointed William Bross Lloyd "a sort of page boy." But there was no demur after about three hours of work, when Lloyd asked the chair to appoint "two assistant sergeants-at-arms for the purpose of clearing the aisles."

After sending a greeting to Debs and all class-war prisoners, and accepting the report of the National Executive Committee, the convention proceeded immediately to attempt to achivie unity with the "Communist Convention." C. E. Ruthenberg of Ohio, who had joined in the call for the Communist Convention, but nevertheless took his seat here for the time, introduced a motion that would have delayed organization of a party here, until after a consultation could be had with those who were to organize the Communist Party the next day. It would have been a humble act on the part of these delegates, leading towards a possible submission to the control of the Slavic Federations. It was vigorously, and at times violently opposed—especially by Jack Carney, who declared "before God," as irreligious Irishmen always do, that if this convention went over to the Federations, he would go home and tell the workers of Duluth that there was no party of communism in existence.

John Reed offered to amend Ruthenberg's motion somewhat to the following effect: We declare ourselves to be the party of Communism in the United States and we invite all other revolutionary groups to join us.

Katterfeld of Kansas offered a further amendment to this effect: We declare ourselves to be the official Socialist Party of the United States, we invite all other revolutionary groups to join us, and we will elect a committee of five to confer with the Committee of the Communist Convention in order to find a basis for uniting the Communist elements in one party. It was this amendment (I regret to say not accurately quoted) which finally passed with an almost unanimous vote.

The principal points advanced by speakers in favor of sacrificing everything to unite with the Communist Convention were these:

(1) No principles divide us.

(2) Our unwillingness to do so is due to the personal pride of a few leaders.

(3) The whole trouble is that "there are too many statesmen in New York."

(4) The capitalists are uniting, and they will be glad to see us divide.

(5) It is a cheap satisfaction to say that we organized the party of Communism first.

These points were acknowledged by the opposition, who advanced the following points in favor of organizing a party nevertheless:

(1) The delegates of the Slavic Federation have already made it clear that they will not admit us, except upon terms which leave their machine in control of the convention.

(2) They are politicians and political bosses.

(3) They are at heart against industrial union action in the class struggle.

(4) They were traitors to the Left Wing program, and the decision of the Left Wing conference in June.

(5) They are incapable of co-operating with American comrades, they will demand autonomy, and another split will follow.

(6) It is impossible to start a Communist movement in the American proletariat with a Russian nationalistic group in control.

It was midnight when Katterfeld's motion was passed and the committee elected. And thus having declared itself to be a party—indeed the party—the convention adjourned until morning, when the election of committees for routine work would begin.

The Communist Convention

The Chicago police supplied the best of all arguments in favor of the Communist Convention. The Right Wing was protected by the police, the Left Wing was ignored, but the hall of the Communist convention was raided, photographs taken, decorations and revolutionary placards destroyed, and two men arrested. Perhaps this argument is a little crippled by the fact that one of the men arrested was a lawyer, and the other was Dennis E. Batt of Detroit, one of the leaders of that Michigan group whose excessively political or educational brand of Communism is the chief weakness of the Convention.

A glowing tribute was paid to the female sex by Detective-Sergeant Egan when he arrested Batt. Rose Pastor stokes called out: "They are arresting our comrade—three cheers for the revolution!" Egan yelled back: "Shut up—it's always a woman that starts the trouble!"

Butt was informed of the presence of a detective with a warrant for his arrest just before he went on the platform to open the convention, but he was not much disturbed by it. He stood up there looking very four-square, as he is, with a long cigarette holder in his mouth, and a lighted cigarette—defying the regulations just laid down by his own committee if not the laws of the land—and his speech was brief and quier. He hoped that the delegates would "exercise forbearance in their deliberations and conduct themselves as men and women who have the good of the American working class at heart."

The Platform at the Communist Convention

Louis C. Fraina was elected temporary chairman, and made the "key note" speech. It was the same note that had been sounding all along in the Revolutionary Age, with this significant, if somewhat incredible, addition: "We now and once for all, all factional disputes. We are at an end with biskering We are at an end with controversy. We are here to build a party of action."

Considering that the convention was to spend the remaining hours of that day until well after midnight, and all of the next day until late afternoon, in a locked battle between its two factions on the question whether or not it would deign to elect a committee of five to meet the committee elected by a third faction represented in the Left Wing Convention—Fraina's promise seemed a little bit premature.

To anyone interested in brains for brains' sake, this battle was vividly entertaining. It was brilliant, sharp. rapid, full of poignant contrasts in personality, far more philosophic, more erudite, more at ease in the Marxian dialect, than anything to be heard at either of the other conventions. The points made by those opposing the election of a conciliatory committee was that the elements who had bolted from the old Socialist Party with the Left Wing were not true Communists. They were "centrists," "Kautskyians," in some cases mere radicals who objected to the tyranny of the party officials. All but a few, at least, of the true communists had abandoned the Left Wing program of capturing the party, and come directly to this communist convention.

The point made by those advocating conciliation was that, although undoubtedly some Kautskyians and centrists were to be found in the other convention, they were not predominant, and they were not any more predominant than the centrists in this present convention—the "Michigan crowd" being those alluded to.

Having already attended a session of the other convention, and satisfied myself that there were really many delegates there who had no understanding of the Moscow program, and whose revolt against the old party was but an emotional reaction against the acts of its officials, I was rather friendly to the opposition in this debate. I cannot divide and classify people, and place them so accurately in the various pigeon-holes of the Marxian theory, in advance of their acts, as most of these speakers could; but I fully realize the necessity of casting out of the concept of proletarian solidarity, not only the Scheidemanns and Noskes who murder the revolution with machine guns, but also the Kautskys, the Longuets and MacDonalds, who poison it with passivity and negative thoughts. That peculiar state of mind described by Lenin as the "wavering centre," expressing the fluctuating will of those economic classes not wholly bourgeois nor, yet wholy proletarian, is an identifiable thing, and a thing that must be regarded as hostile in the period of the actual breakdown of capitalism.

In spite of my realization of this fact, however, and a prepossession that had been growing in favor of the "Communist Convention," I was discouraged by what I heard in the course of this debate, and when the opposition won, and the Left Wing convention was given the cold shoulder by a vote of 75 to 31, I felt like going back to the Left Wing convention.

It is not easy to tell exactly why, but after I recovered from admiring the mere quantity of abstract intellectuality which filled the air, my mind began to grow a little tired, as it does at a game of chess, with so many problems that are unrelated to reality or action. Along towards ten or eleven o'clock a realization stole into my head that there was something a little childish, a little sophomoric, in all this exaggerated statesmanship. I saw in the flesh that academic and rather wordy self-importance which has characterized the official literature of the Left Wing, and made it get so much on my nerves, as well as on the nerves of the I. W. W. editors. The political and educational expression of the class struggle is always excessively loud and distracting, like the racing of a motor when you detach it from the running-gear without shutting off the gas, and in this group of self-consciously detached and perfect Bolsheviks that impression was emphasized almost to the point of burlesque.

"Our purpose is to organize a real, a pure com-

Omaha; a Prelude and a Warning

The recent mob activities at Omaha sound a warning to thinking people and to the working class in particular that must not go unheeded. For hours the city was ruled by mob violence which culminated in the most revolting atrocities. Three unspeakably monstrous acts were committed and hundreds of lesser ones. The mayor of the city, in attempting to quiet the mob, was lynched and narrowly escaped death. The negro accused of a criminal act, and for whose punishment the mob was aroused, was riddled with bullets, burned and dragged at the tail of a wagon thru the streets; the new court house was gutted with fire.

Race riots, the American Black and White Terror, are becoming more and more a matter of common occurence. It is only when some such catastrophe as that which occurred at Omaha takes place that attention is drawn to the race question and even then it is treated as a mere manifestation of hoodlooism to be put down by the bayonet and the machine gun. The capitalist press finds the solution for all social questions in the use by the autorities of the armed power of the state. Such solutions are no solutions.

Capitalism has erected false barriers between the white and black workers of America, It has pitted them against each other while mercilessly exploiting both. In this nefarious work which is now bearing such terrible fruit, the A. F. of L. has aided by its refusal to admit black workers to its membership. In doing so it has played the bosses hand for him and sown seeds of its own destruction. The I.W. W. extends the cordial hand of fellowship to all workers of whatever race or color. The black man is finding his place in its ranks, a place which he is filling with honor to his race and his class. Where the I. W. W. is strong there can be no race riots, no race antagonisms. Race riots can arise only where the identity of the interests of ALL workers are not recognized.

We do not expect that the present capitalist state will find a solution for the race question. It does not affect directly the stability of the capitalist state, only indirectly as a training school for "direct action" can it be construed as a menace to the power of capital.

After all it is the workers, both black and white who become the victims as well as the actors in the armed conflicts which arise between the two races. Therefore it is their concern to seek a solution for all differences.

The fact which deserves attention in this question is that the negroes are being forced to learn the bitter truth that the law of the land is not equal in its regard for black and white men. Where a negro is concerned equality before the law ceases. When accusations are made against a negro, whether he is guilty or not, his chances of a fair trial are extremely uncertain. More likely a rope and a stake will finish the matter for him. He sees the law violated by white mobs, he knows not all are guilty who are burned at the stake. He realizes his helplessness before the white man's administration of the law. He is disfranchised where he is in the majority in the population. [illegible]

Nearly half a million negroes experienced military service in the late war. Over two hundred thousand were over seas. They finished their military service with credit. They have learned the value and use of force. Also they have learned that they have rights and a value in society. They hold a vision of a better place in the social scheme than to merely serve in the capacity of unrequited utilitarians of the white race. They are seeking a way out of the wilderness and a place in the sun.

The future is grave with possibilities. Race hatred has been sown for too many generations to expect that other horrors on a greater scale than has yet come about will present themselves in the not far distant future. We are not pessimistic we believe, when we assert that a chronic state of civil war between the two races is setting in. To that state of war Omaha may be viewed as a prelude. Let all workers take it as a warning and set about to avert it if possible.

The socialist movement has failed miserably in making headway in the enlightenment of the workers upon this question. Literature appealing to the black workers of the nation is scanty and of meagre circulation. Socialist Locals in the industrial cities where negroes in large numbers have located have been singularly amiss in this respect. It is time we took this matter seriously and prepare to align the negro workers with the white in our industrial unions and our political locals.

We must arouse the class consciousness of all workers and by education upon social and economic questions avert further violence between the two races.

Camouflaging the Robbery

A recent news dispatch from London states that on account of the great unrest and criticisms of the immensly wealthy, the mansions of London are being converted into needed dwellings and business blocks. Mansions provoke unrest. They fill the homeless with envy. The appearance of magnificience does not fit well into the picture of the hovel and the tenement occupied by London's workers. Therefore, as a means of quieting social unrest, one visible result of the exploitation of the workers are doomed to disappear.

The philosophy which seeks to allay popular discontent by such laughable means has a slightly superior quality to that of the Russian rich who stubbornly occupied their mansions until the Bolsheviks seized them. But as a means of satisfying the demands of labor, its a punk one. Of course the capitalists of England realize that what the workers want is economic power, and that the evil day (for them) when they will have to turn over their power as well as their mansions to the workers draws nearer daily.

It is quite possible that capitalists may resort to the dress of the laborer in a short while. We may reasonably picture them going about in overalls frequenting the cheap movies instead of grand opera, conducting himself much like you or we in our daily lives. Certainly, the spice of life will fade for them when that time comes, but one consolation will remain to them-they will still have a strangle hold upon the machinery of production and the jobs by which we live—that is unless the workers decide that camoflaging won't go any longer.

THE STORY OF $55.50

Guy L. Tappen of Newport News says: "I thought I might get ten dollars, but the ease with which I collected $55.50 from my fellow workers and the Carpenters Union members, plainly proves that the workers are alive to the dangers confronting them."

That's the story of $55.50. A simple story and told because it's time for you to GET BUSY. You also can do what Tappen did. Go to your union meeting and make a motion that a sum of money be voted out of the tensury to help liberate Debs and all political prisoners. Get a Liberation Fund contribution list and secure contributions from your fellow workers. Tappen showed the way. Go thou and do likewise.

Ohio is the first state in the country to carry on political campaigns upon a clear communist platform. Thousands of these platforms, adopted at the recent state convention and since endorsed by referendum vote, have been circulated by locals, the state office printing the names of the candidates thereon gratis. Ohio is also the first state to adopt a uniform municipal platform for all locals and in this respect is far in advance of other states in its development toward communist propaganda.

Dues stamp sale have bee avery gratifying lately. Toledo sent in a very large order for the new stamps, as did also Youngstown, Columbus, Hamilton, Uhrichsville, Piqua, Seneca County, Clark County, Power Point and Massillon all sent in substantial orders.

Ella Reeve Bloor has been dated in Ohio as follows: Dayton, Oct. 7; Hamilton 8, Cincinnati 9, Akron 10, 11, Toledo 12. Ella Reeve Bloor is a very impressive speaker, has had years of experience in the workers' movement and Ohio intends to secure her for an extended tour.

Chas. Baker will tour Ohio for the next two weeks. His dates are: Portsmouth Oct. 6 and 7, Springfield 8, Cambridge 10, Bellaire 11, Akron 12, Niles 13, Girard 14, Youngstown 15, Warren 16, Conneaut 17. Some of these dates are subject to change. Comrade Baker, upon his return from a short western tour, held successful meetings in Lima, Columbus, Dayton, Hamilton and Cincinnati.

An order for 10,000 Debs leaflets from Otto Hoefer constituted the prize literature order of the week. Toledo came second, with an order for 500 ten cent pamphlets sent in by Comrade Willnecker.

John DeQuer addressed a crowded hall in Toledo last Sunday. Tom Clifford and Tom Lewis addressed meeting in Tiffin and Findlay lately. Comrade Clifford will go to Portsmouth for a series of meetings the middle of the month.

The Communist Labor Party Song

Men of thought and men of toil
Men whose labor tills the soil
Stand together, tyrants foil
RISE! RISE! RISE!
Long we've waited in the night
Working for the dawning light
Now it's coming, all unite
RISE! RISE! RISE!
Rise majestic in your might Put the coward foe to flight
Fearless in the cause of right
RISE! RISE! RISE!
Far in Georgia's prison cell
Lies the Gene we love so well
Wrest him from that living hell
RISE! RISE! RISE!
All who right and justice seek Burst your bonds, no longer weak
Unite and join the Bolshevik
RISE! RISE! RISE!

[illegible] Notes

Here are the names, press fund [illegible]. You will note some new names among them, and again some that have become familiar thru repeated contributions. Among those who deserve special honorable mention are the Lorain Ohio Socialist Boosters Club, the Repeaters Club of Akron and that of Local Marietta, O.

Comrade Patrick Henry of New Riegel, O. sends a dollar. From New Castle Pa., comes another dollar. Comrade Mrs. F. M. Daytner is the donor. An old time O. S. Booster, G. E. Allen of Painesville, O. stepped into the State Office the other day for a moment and deposited a dollar in the press fund. Comrade O. R. Johnson of Akron is here again with another dollar. Our old time friend and comrade De Forest Sanford, of Atascadero Cal., sends a five spot which he states is an "appreciation" of our work in the movement. To which we reply, there is nothing like a word of appreciation to keep up one's spirits and determination to keep agoing. Thanks for both comrade Sanford.

Comrade Mary G. Waters, secretary of Local E. Liverpool O., sends in a list containing the following names and amounts: Rosa C. Powell, M. D. $1., Arthur Broadbent, 50c; Otto Singer, 25c; Mary G. Waters, 25c; J. T. Pinkerton, 25c; Thos Cunningham, 25c, Here are three more comrades who have piled a dollar each on top of the press fund: J. S. Albert, Van Wert, O. John Barlich, New Philadelphia, O; Anthony Novak, same city.

"Enclosed find three dollars for that Party owned printing plant", Larette W. Malone, San Angelo Tex. Comrade John Ivovic of Lorain O., adds a dollar to the fund. Comrade Wm. J. Pick, of Cincinnati, sometimes called Red Flag Bill, sends in 50c.

The Socialist Boosters Club of Lorain, O., remits $6.50 on a list containing the following names: Wm. Now Jr., $1. Albert Banchyk, $2., Wm. Barrett, $1., Emil Fisher, 50c, Frank Vaillant, $2.

"Enclosed please find $12.00 from your comrades, the Repeaters Club" S. Bryant, Akron, O. Some repeat, eh! Another Akron booster is comrade J. Koons, who sent a dollar this week. Comrades Mr. and Mrs G. Chrlton, of Akron remit two dollars for the new press. "One dollar to help build our press," is what comrade John Maonkick of Yorkville, O. writes us. And he sends the dollar too.

Local Secretary, T. J. McKenna, of Marietta, O., remits $25.00 for the press fund which contain these names and amounts: A. H. Hart, $5.00; Elmwood Spindler, $1.00; T. J. McKenna, $1.50; Savage Cigar Co. 50c.; Ben Ralston, $1.00; J. J. West, $1.00; Mrs. G. L. Schurch, $2.50; Selden Cole, $12.50. Comrade Cole has agreed to duplicate all funds subscribed by Marietta comrades to buy the new press. This is the third remittance he has duplicated.

Comrade H. T. Auckerman of Kalamazoo, Mich., remits a dollar. Another dollar is added to the press fund by comrade F. L. Manning of Newark, O.

A remittance totaling $6.70 comes from comrade Local secretary, H. Weichers, of Columbus. Comrade Fred L. Thompson, of Barberton, O. remits a dollar. Comrade Louis Krem, of the German Branch of Bellaire, O., remits $6.50 collected on lists. Here are the names appearing: John Filzenger, 50c; Mrs. Julia Filzenger, 50c; Mrs. Gustav Flux, 25c; Joe Becher, 25; Louis Krem, $1.00 Mike Treich, 50c., Louis Gmeinoll, 50c.; Math Gmeindle, 50c; Frank Potetz, 50c.; John Jalloupa, 25c.; Rudolph Meyer, 25c; Rudolph Schiller 25c.; Fred Makofsky, 25c.; Louis Poininger, 25c.; Steph. Dutsh, 50c.; Louis Potetz 25c.

Comrade C. W. Colman, of Buenna Vista, Va. remits one dollar.

Total amount contributed to the press fund to Oct. 1st $4.103.74.

THE [illegible] OF ADENA

We've heard of thieves in the night. In Adena, Ohio, we have thieves in the day who steal from miners who work in the night, who in fact slave in constant darkness to provide warm firesides for you and me.

The coal operators of Adena, so it is alleged, have been stealing from 800 to 1400 pounds of coal a day from each miner employed. Joe. Vegh, member of the party and two of his comrades, headed a committee to confer with the mine operators about this steal. Result—Joe. Vegh was arrested for violating the Freeman law, the law which prohibits violence, crime and sabotage.

It was the mine owners who were committing the sabotage and crime, but Vegh is to suffer for it.

And now, like a thief in the night, comes the mine owners' sheriff and spirits away Julius Simon, Joe Haborka, Geo. Kozari, Joe Toth, Jim Domoszlay and Steve Bogo. These comrades were taken from Adena to Cadiz and throw into jail. No one is allowed to see them.

The Liberators Army however, is always ready for just such emergencies. Joe. W. Sharts was immediately sent to Cadiz and he is now at work upon this case. Even the United Mine Workers officials refused help—it because these men were guilty of the offense of calling for a district convention to clean out these officials who, from all indications, seem to be hand in glove with the coal operators.

All of which means—JOIN THE LIBERATORS ARMY and help free all political prisoners as well as aid those who are still being arrested in the sacred cause of making the world safe for the workers.

Machinists Begin Fight for Debs

Resolution adopted by District Lodge No. 31, International Association of Machinists, and endorsed by Summit Lodge No. 203 of Akron, Ohio:

"Whereas one of the foremost champions of the working-class of this country, and the courageous, uncompromising foe of the class-privilege is destined to rot in the Federal Penitentiary, because of the abridgement of guaranteed constitutional rights of free speech, be it therefore

RESOLVED, by the Delegates of the Ohio State Federation of Machinists, District No. 31 in special session assembled, go on record to do their utmost towards securing the liberation of Eugen V. Debs, and be it further

RESOLVED, that the secretary of the district be instructed to immediately circularize all lodges within the jurisdiction of the International Association of Machnists, requesting said lodges to join us in securing the liberation of the grand old man of the Revolution.

munist party." said comrade Lunin. "We will allow the delegates of the other convention to come to our credentials committee one by one, and we will examine them thoroughly to find out if they are communists or not. For you can not become a communist in one day—no, nor in two days, nor in three days, nor n a year. Even in Russia it takes plenty of time to make a true Bolshevik." Like most of the Slavic Federation leaders, Lunin was himself a Menshevik only about a year ago.

"Give them the test of humiliation," said another earnest youth. "Demand that they come here and ask admission to this convention. This humiliation will test the sicerity of their revolutionary principles."

"Let them come here and sit in our convention without a voice," said Nicholas Hourwich, "We are perfectly willing to allow them to sit here. They might learn something. They might even learn enough to go next time to the communist convention." Hourwich is the editor of the Russian daily, Novy Mir—a strange, intense and intensely impractical intellectual gnome, with feminine gesture and attitude, but a kind of obdurate unsentimental force. He observed the ruthless workings of his political machine with so infinitely complacent a smile on his features, that I could not help feeling glad he was so happy.

The only effective opposition he received was from Fraina and I. E. Ferguson of Chicago, who made gnashing and spirited attacks upon his machine that was rolling over them, to the added delight of its engineers. "That man is a communist," said Fraina, "who happens to agree with your particular purposes at a particular moment. While you were boasting of the purity of your communism, you have made unholy deals with those whom you know and admit are not communists."

"The real question is," said Ferguson, "Do you want to exclude English speaking delegates from the floor of this convention. It is not whether you want to exclude centrits. The test of a communist for you is when or where one chooses to organize the communist party."

At the conclusion of the same speech he said: "I don't want you to lose control of this convention, because I know that your control means that we will have a real communist party in the United States." I do not know how to reconcile these two statements, and I do not believe Ferguson does either, but he was sincerely convinced of them both.

My impression was—to sum it up—that the heads of the Slavic Socialist Machine are in a mood for the organization of a Russian Bolshevik church, with more interest in expelling heretics than winning converts, and with a pretty fixed opinion that although Americans must perforce be admitted to the church they must not be admitted in such numbers as to endanger the machine's hold upon the dogmas and the collection box. (It is their mood, not their conscious intent, that these words describe.) And it seems to me that what has compelled some at least of the American comrades to accept the dictation of this machine, and try to form an American proletarian party with so preposterous a handicap, is that inward dread of not proving sufficiently revolutionary which hounds us all. It hounds us because we are conscious of the continual temptation of respectability and personal prudence, and because we see so many of our fighting Comrades lose their courage and fall by the wayside. It is a wholesale dread. But we ought to be sufficiently sure we are revolutionary, so that we have a good deal of energy left for trying to be intelligent. And it is not intelligent to start the American Communist Party with a mixture of theological zeal, machine politics and nationalistic egoism in control.

Taking Frainna's and Ferguson's own characterization of these Federations, without adding a word, there is enough reason for desiring that they should function by themselves as a Slavic Communist Party, and that the American party should begin elsewhere, more modestly, and more in proportion to the actual state of the revolutionary movement in America. I could not help thinking what Lenin himself would do to this group who are trying to bluff us in the name of our internationalism, into accepting a nationalistic control of the movement.

Some similar thoughts must have entered the minds of the American delegates, for after this session was over and the vote taken, they delivered an ultimatum to the Federations, stating that they would bolt the convention and go home, if the vote was not rescinded, and the committee appointed. Accordingly the convention was adjourned, and the next morning and afternoon devoted the caucas of the Slavic machine. Then the Convention was called together again about five o'clock, and the vote rescinded—unanimously. It is a formidable machine that can reverse 57 votes without a slip, without allowing one single individual opinion to record itself. It commands admiration. But I think there is a discouraging lack of realism and the sense of workmanship in a convention that will spend twenty-four hours fighting over the appointment of a committee, when it is clearly obvious all the time that the committee will do exactly if the committee had not been appointed.

The committee did, of course, go up to the convention of the Left Wing—by this time already the the same thing that the convention would have done Communist Labor Party—and hand in a type-written document embodying the will of the Slavic Federations. Beneath a good deal of diplomatic and rather Wilsonian indirectness, this document simply stated that the Slavic Federations would not permit a union of the two elements upon terms that would endanger their control, which they consider essential to the formation of a party of true communism.

The Communist Labor Party adopted a resolution making a standing offer to the Communists to unite the two parties upon equal terms. That is the end of the matter, until the rank and file of the revolutionary workers take action upon it.

The Communist Labor Party.

It was something of a relief to wander down to the I. W. W. headquarters, after all this theoretical striving after wind, and examine the new rotary press they are installing, and hear the clicking of two accomplished line-o-type machines in the back room. And it seemed a good omen for the Communist Labor Party that when they found themselves too large and busy for the downstairs room in the Michinists Building, they moved over to the I. W. W. Hall on Throop Street.

There a battle was fought and won, which for me seemed to contain the heart of the drama of these Chicago Conventions. It was not a battle between two machines, for there was no time or possibility here for the formation of a machine. It was a battle between those who understood and accepted the Moscow manifesto, and wanted to apply it in a concrete realistic way to American conditions, and those who did not understand or accept it, dreaded its practical application, and wanted to take refuge in more vague and old fashioned socialistic pronouncements. The most powerful figure in the militant group—and the best speaker, I should say, in all three of the conventions—was Ben Gitlow. The function of furnishing forth drafts of documents, making motions, drawing up amendments and resolutions, and being ever on hand in general with a wealth of ideas, was filled by John Reed. On the other side Margaret Prevey and Louis Boudin were equally prominent and equally definite in their opinions.

The convention, being somewhat dismayed by the voluminous and plain-spoken "program" which Reed's committee brought in, and yet feeling in their bones that they were going to have to adopt it, appointed another committee to draw up a "platform." I think they had an idea that they would keep the program as of a kind of "esoteric doctrine" to be revealed only to the true disciples, and distribute the platform to the general public. So they put their more tender-minded or "centrist" members on the platform committee, and these members drew up a brief document expressing only a little more vigorously than usual, the time-worn "ultimate demands" of the Socialist Party.

The communist element did not oppose the plan of adopting a brief and highly generalized "platform" in addition to their program of action, but they were determined that this platform should be in fact a generalization, and not an evaporation of the communist principles. Therefore they assailed the document that was reported to the floor, and succeeded in striking out every one of its vague or unscientific clauses, and substituting amendments in their own language. They succeeded with surprising ease until they arrived at the two final clauses, and here the minority rallied for a last obstinate resistance.

The clauses as reported by the committee, read as follows:

"To this end we ask the workers to unite with the Communist Labor Party on the political field for the conquest of the State and thus secure control of the powers of government.

"We also urge the workers to organize themselves on the industrial field, and thus unite their political and economic power to establish a cooperative commonwealth."

For these clauses Reed offered the following substitute:

"To this end we ask the workers to unite with the Communist Labor Party for the conquest of political power, to establish a government adapted to the communist transformation."

The significance of this change in the "Platform" is made apparent by the following clauses of the "Program" which had been reported to the floor, but not yet at that time adopted:

"The working class must organize and train itself for the capture of state power. This capture means the establishment of the new working class government machinery, in place of the state machinery of the capitalists.

"This new working class government— the Dictatorship of the Proletariat—will reorganize society on the basis of Communism, and accomplish the transition from Capitalism to the Communist Commonwealth.....

"Not one of the great teachers of scientific Socialism has ever said that it is possible to achive the Social Revolution by the ballot.

"However, we do not ignore the value of voting, or of electing candidates to public office. Political campaigns, and the election of public officials, provide opportunities for showing up capitalist democracy, educating the workers to a realization of their class position, and demonstrating the necessity for the overthrow of the capitalist system. But it must be clearly emphasized that the chance of winning even advanced reforms of the present capitalist system at the polls is extremely remote; and even if it were possible, these reforms would not weaken the capitalist system.

"The political action of the working class means any action taken by the workers to impose their class will upon the capitalist State."

It was an all day debate. I recall a few sentences somewhat at random. The first is from Margaret Prevey, whose friendship for Debs and her consecration to the task of liberating him from prison, gave a special interest to her opinions. "We came here," she said, "to form a political organization to supplement the industrial organization of the workers. If not why are we here? We must use the political power in order to get a hearing for the working class. I want to see a working class judge to pass sentences upon the workers, a working class jailor to open the doors of the prisons for the working class. I want to see the working class get control of the police and the United States Army, so that they can be used on the side of the workers, instead of against them in their industrial battles."

John Reed answered her in the one burst of oratory that came out of him. He reminded her that when a socialist Mayor of Minneapolis wanted to use the police to protect the meetings of the workers, his policemen were superceded by a body of special deputies appointed by the Governor of the State; when a radical governor of Illinois (Altgeld) tried to use the state power to protect the workers in the Pullman strike in Chicago, Grover Cleveland sent the United States army into Illinois to protect capital; "and if you had a Socialist president in the place of Grover Cleveland, the Supreme Court would come to the protection of capital; and if you had a Socialist Supreme Court, J. P. Morgan would organize a volunteer White Guard, and the interests of capital would still be protected! So it would always be. The struggle is between economic forces and it cannot be settled upon the political field." He asked Margaret Prevey and the others who opposed the program which he had drafted, and who wanted to elect Centrists to the executive committee, to explain candidly to the convention just what kind of a program they wanted, and what they conceived communism to be. After some hesitation the answer came that they wanted to go back to the language of the previous Manifestoes of the Left Wing. The special significance of this lies in the fact that those more academic and therefore less revolutionary Manifestoes were written by the very delegates in the "Communist Convention" who were now scorning this other not sufficientl revolutionary elements!

If that makes the reader dizzy, he has the satisfaction of knowing that he would have been a thousand times dizzier if he had actually tried to attend those three conventions.

Kate Greenhalgh said that she had often heard working men in the northwest say that they would never again put their name and address down in a poll book to be used in hunting them out by the master-class, but still she believed in political action as a means of acquiring a "political status" for the revolutionary propaganda.

Jack Carney supported the amendment with the vehemence of one who doesn't really care whether the propaganda acquires a "political status" or not. "I resigned from the Socialist Party," he said, "not because they expelled the members and refused to do their will but because I want the American workers to get down to the real fight, and the real fight is on the job."

Margaret Prevey's position was supported by Baker of Ohio, who said in the course of his remarks that, "The old guard used to be always telling us how they do things in Germany; now we have a crowd that are telling us how they do things in Russia; I thought we were here to decide how we are going to do things in America."

Ludwig Lore granted that the absence of "immediate demands" was enough to distinguish this platform from the reformist platforms of the past. [illegible] of Indiana was on the same side, although with a different point: "When the revolution comes," he said, "then we know what kind of methods we are going to use, and we won't have to ask any platform."

But the ever-present voice on the side of the Mensheviks was that of Louis B. Boudin of New York. Boudin is a Marxian scholar of great erudition, so great that he was given an honorary chair in the international university established by the Bolshevik Government at Moscow, although he happened to be employing his erudition in an attack on the Bolshevik Government at the time.

Boudin laughed with a learned scorn at one of the phrases which John Reed had embodied in an amendment to the platform. Reed said nothing, but quietly slipped out of the building and pretty soon came back with a copy of the Communist Manifesto, in which he showed Boudin the identical phrase at which he had been laughing. The scholarly brows were bent in perplexity: "It's a very poor translation," he said.

Boudin has learned a great deal about Karl Marx in spite of a busy life, but he has never learned to control those neural conduits which lead from the cerebral cortex to the organs of articulation. An idea no sooner pops into his head than it pops out of his mouth; and this makes it very difficult to conduct a parliamentary assembly in which he sits. Therefore it was a practical, as well as a theoretical triumph, for the majority, when Ben Gitlow, walking up to the front of the hall like a great sombre mountain, gradually unloosed the crackling thunder of his eloquence to the effect that Boudin had deliberatly employed his knowledge of Marx to dilute and destroy the scientific integrity of this platform, and Boudin, crying "It's a lie, it's a damn lie!" got up and fled like a leaf out of the storm.

Reed's amendment was then soon adopted, and the question whether this should be a communist or a "centrist" party essentially settled by a vote of 46 to 22. There was clear sailing for the "program" after that. It was adopted substantially as reported by the committee. A kind of anticipatory "St. Louis Resolution" on the war with Mexico, was also adopted, and it was cabled to every organization in the Communist International. An executive committee was elected, composed not of public celebrities who will meet once in a while, but of members of the party who are going to work—all of them ultimately, it is hoped, on salary from the party. With these goods signs of life the convention closed.

Its program is upon the whole a vital, simple and realistic application of the theories of Marx, and the policies of Lenin, to present conditions in America. It contrasts with the program of the communist convention in no point of principle, but it applies the principles more specially to existing conditions, it is written in a more American idiom, it is written in the language of action rather than of historic theory. It is not abstractly didactic in its attitude toward organized labor, but somewhat humbly instructive and promising of concrete help. In these respects it seems to me superior to the program of the Communist Party, although I have not had time to study and compare them at length.

It would be foolish to pretend that The Communist Labor Party, any more than the Communist Party, is a wholly satisfactory vehicle for the growth of Communism in America. Nothing that happened in Chicago was satisfactory. But the Communist Labor Party has a certain atmosphere of reality, a sense of work to be done, a freedom from theological dogma on the one hand and machine politics on the other which is new in American socialism, and [illegible]. A strong movement of the rank and file of the [illegible] to the Communist Labor Party [illegible] and at the same time leave the Federations [illegible] the attitude of their leaders [illegible] a separate or autonomous Slavic Party of Communism.

Communist Labor Party Bulletin

UNITY RESOLUTION

Adopted by UNANIMOUS vote of the Communist Labor Party Convention.

"Be it resolved, that the Communist Labor Party extends a standing invitation to the Communist Party to meet, on a basis of equality, in Unity Conference, and

"That we hereby instruct our national officials and committees to accept every such invitation from the Communist Party, or from any other revolutionary workingclass organization."

COMMUNISTS—COMPELL YOUR OFFICIALS TO ANSWER.

WHY DO THEY SUPPRESS THIS?

On September 6th, at the first meeting of the N. E. C. of the Communist Labor Party, the following letter was drafted, mimeographed, and over one hundred copies were distributed to the delegates at the Communist Party convention.

Not only have the officials of the Communist Party failed to answer this communication, but they have suppressed it. You will not find it published with the other "documents" in their official paper.

FINAL COMMUNICATION TO THE COMMUNIST PARTY, ISSUED BY THE N. E. C. OF THE COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 6, 1919.

To the delegates and members of the Communist Party,

Comrades:—

The Communist Labor Party Convention by unanimous vote adopted the following resolution:

"Be it resolved that the Communist Labor Party extends a standing invitation to the Communist Party to meet, on a basis of equality, in Unity Conference, and

"That we instruct our national officials and committees to accept every such invitation from the Communist Party or from any other revolutionary workingclass organization.

The convention has now completed its work and has adjourned. Obedient to those instructions from the convention, the national Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party addresses this letter to you.

Comrades, the organization of two Communist Parties is a crime. We have made every effort posible, short of turning traitor to the membership that sent us here, to avoid this deplorable situation. But our repeated attempts to unite all revolutionary Communist hosts seem to have been thwarded for the time being by certain elements in your convention.

As far as we can discover there is no fundamental difference of principle between us. The platform, program and resolutions that our convention adopted are uncompromisingly revolutionary. They conform to the Left Wing program and are in strict acord with the principles laid down by the Communist International of Moscow. We are affiliating with the Third International.

We are confident that the great majority of your delegates and yor membership agree with us in this. Why then should we remain apart?

We hereby announce that we are ready at any time to meet your your representatives to consider the question of unity on a basis of equality.

If certain elements in your Party make this impossible, we invite all individuals or groups, who may agree with us in our desire to unite all the Communist elements of the United States into ONE Party of Communist Socialism, to join forces with us.

ALL who agree on the fundamentals of Comunism, ALL who desire to affiliate with the Third International of Moscow, are WELCOME in the Communist Labor Party.

Comrades, let us unite against our common foe.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY
(Signed)

JACK CARNEY
L. E. KATTERFELD
EDWARD LINDGREN
ALEXANDER BILAN
A. WAGENKNECHT, Executive Sec.

To date no answer has come from the officials of the Communist Party to this straightforward request for a Unity Conference. Their only proposition is that we should disband and apply as individuals for admission to "their" party. They refuse to meet with our organization on any equal basis. They assume an attitude of superiority toward the membership of the Communist Labor Party, and deny our Comrades the same respect as Communist that they demand for themselves. The only unity that they consider is the unity offered by the pope of Rome: "Join MY church, and then there will only be one church". We demand that we meet on an equal basis of Comradeship.

Since the officialdom of the Communist Party has suppressed this unity offer it is our duty to give it publicity and to carry it direct to the rank and file of the Communist Party. Let every Comrade help with this task, and show this article to as many members of the Communist Party as possible. When the membership of the Communist Party finally learns how it is being deceived by its leaders, it will make short shrift of those that now stand in the way of uniting all Communist elements of the United States under ONE banner, and a United Communist Party will emerge to rally the revolutionary hosts.

THE SPLIT PHILOSOPHY

Some of the "leaders" of the Communist Party frankly admit their adherance to the SPLIT PHILOSOPHY. This is, briefly, that the more you split, the "clearer" and stronger you become.

Hourwich of New York for instance explains that in order to have a group of uncompromising leaders competent to lead the workingclass when the final crisis comes, you must constantly "split and split and split". You must keep the organization small and constantly bring about situations within the Party that will result in splits. In that way he intends to rid the Party of all "unclear" elements, reserving to himself and his group the right to determine what is "clear" and what is "unclear", of course.

The communist Labor Party on the other hand has but little faith in socalled leaders and places its dependence rather upon the increasing consciousness of class interest among the workers. It is not opposed to a split upon a fundamental difference of principle. But it tries to unite ALL that agree on fundamental principles of Communist Socialism into ONE Party to become a real and growing power in the land. It proposes to develop its own educational institutions, so that instead of being split off the new elements that come in may be educated and assimilated, and as nearly as possible to make its entire membership competent to assume the responsibilities of leadership when the crisies comes.

COMMITTEE ACTION OR MEMBERSHIP MANDATE.

The Communist Party is largely the result of Committee action. A Committee in New York, called National Left Wing Council, made a deal with another Committee in Chicago, calling itself a National Organization Committee, and produced a Party of their own, which they still control. Most of the delegates ot their convention although purporting to represent great masses of membership, were really selected by small committees in different cities and federation.

On the other hand, with but half a dozen exceptions the delegates of the Communist Labor Party Convention were elected by regular membership referendums, and represented directly the expressed will of the membership in the districts and States from which they came. The mandate of that membership was to affiliate the Party with the Third International. This implied the instruction to transform the Socialist Party into a Party of Communist Socialism. This they did, and the Communist Labor Party is the result.

Today the committees that organized and still control the Communist Party act against Unity. The officials of the Communist Labor Party obey their membership mandate and offer unity to all Communist elements united in principle.

Of which policy do you approve, Comrade?

RESOLUTION OF GERMAN COMMUNISTS OF CHICAGO

A mass convention of former members of the Socialist Party who belonged to the German Federation, was held in Chicago recently. This convention passed the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, by the convention of members belonging to the German Federation, which met in Heidelberg Hall, Chicago, on September 20th, that the affiliated branches be instructed to recognize the national committee elected in New York and shall immediately communicate with this committee relative to dues stamps purchases and organization work. (The national committee referred to is that which voted 41 to 8 to affiliate with the Communist Labor Party.—Ed.)

"Adopting this resolution however does not mean that this meeting in any way agrees to the split in the communist ranks, but asks all branches, state organizations, the federation, the national organization of the Communist Labor Party, as well as its officers to do all in their power to bring about unity between the two communist parties.

"Be it further resolved, that this resolution be sent immediately to the national committee of the federation the national committee of the Communist Labor Party and the national committee of the Communist Party so as to demand action tending to solve the unity question.

JOS. FALKNER, Secretary,
German Federation of Chicago.

West Virginia—Attention

Delegate Firth's Report of National Convention.

Jesse Bird, State Secretary,
Barrackville, W. Va.
Dear Comrade and Comrades of West Virginia:

As your Delegate to the National Emergency convention August 30th, 1919, I wish to make the following report.

I presented my credentials to ex-National Secretary Adolph Germer and was informed by him that the old N. E. C. had decided to contest my seat on the technical ground that I was not a resident of the State of West Virginia. Under an iron clad construction of the Constitution this was probably correct but I went before the Contest Committee and told the members that I was not a legal resident of Illinois yet and would not be until I had resided here a year, that the financial condition of the Socialist party in W. Va. would not permit the sending of two delegates, that I had been State Secretary of your state for three years, that I had just left the state a few months before and that the membership was anxious that I represent them. All to no avail; I was refused a seat. Everybody knew that in a normal year no question would have been raised in connection with my credentials. I was too Left this year. However, the Left Delegates gathered in the convention hall for the purpose of demanding our seats at the hands of the convention. While seated there Adolph Germer approached and said "I ask you in a comradely way to leave the hall." We claimed our right to be judged by the convention. He then said "If you do not leave at once I will have the police put you out". We said "Then the will have it to do." He then gave the order and the police, six or eight in number, drove out the Left Delegates. The police remained in force in the Moderate Socialist convention during the entire proceedings. This became so obnoxious to the Labor union that owns the hall that they forwarded a formal request from the Executive Committee to Adolph Germer demanding that he and the Socialist conventon no longer disgrace the labor movement by being responsible for having the police powers of the capitalist state in control of a socalled labor convention. The police were not removed.

The National Executive Commitee that was elected in the recent referendum that was thrown out by the former N. E. C. then called a caucus of the Left Delegates on the first floor of the convention building. A general discussion of the instructions received by the various delegates from their constituents then took place

The majority had instructions to try in every way possible to rescue the Socialist party from the reactionaries; failing in this they were to organize for revolucionary Communsm. I had no definite instructions from West Virginia but I know the membership of that state and I was positive that the great majority were ready for a radical change in the policy and tactics of the American movement and were for casting the die for going forward shoulder to shoulter with the Bolsheviks of Russia and the Spartacists of Germany, as against further temporizing with the putrid corpse of parliamentarism and Moderate Socialism. I therefore entered wholeheartedly into the organization of a force to represent honestly and scientifically the proletariat of the world and carry out the program of revolutionary Communism such as you and the other 110,000 members of the Socialist Party voted for eleven to one in a referendum that was also thrown in the waste basket by the former N. E. C., namely, the referendum for affiliation with the Third or Communistic Internation

Comrade Snider approved my course and made application for admission to the Left convention. He was seated but, as he stated, for the purpose of being able to report the proceedings of the old party convention, he would remain in the old convention. I doubted the wisdom of this, but he can make his own explanation.

The organization of an instrument to give expression to the aims and purposes of the American proletariat in the international crisis now confronting us all was next in order. The membership had unmistakably registered ts desire to affiliate with the Third Internatonal and adopt the principles of the struggling Communists of Russia and Central Europe. The Communist party of America was scheduled to meet and organize Monday September 1st. The first work for us to do was to clear the ground for a meeting of minds of the delegates of the revolutionary elements in Chicago as represented in the two Communist conventions. In this we failed. Each side invited the other to participate in thei deliberations. The C. L. P. invited the delegates to parteipate on a basis of equality, delegate for delegate; and we agreed to go to their convention on this basis. The C. P. agreed to admit us as fraternal delegates or visitors until the Communist convention decided as to who represented Communist organizations. These were to be seated with voice and vote. This was not acceptable to the majority of the delegates in the C. L. P. convention, permanent organization was perfected and the matter squarely put before the rank and file. In closing this part of the report I wish to say that the C. L. P. convention instructed the new N. E. C. to issue a standing invitation to the officials of the C. P. to meet to adjust the insignificant differences that now divide the Communist elements in America. I am confident this will be done.

I would suggest that just as soon as all members get a copy of the program and platform of the Communist Labor Party that you immediately hold referendum for the purpose of determinig whether you shall unite with the revolutionary Communist movement or whether you shall continue to stay with the reactionary elements who have prostituted the American Socialist party to the purposes of parliamentarian Socialism and stubbornly refused to allow you to align yourselves with

ILLINOIS COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY CALLS STATE CONVENTION

The outstanding fact of this, the most momentous period in the world's history, is that Capitalism is tottering to its ruin. The Great War, heralded throughout the Allied nations as "the war against war" to "establish self-determination of all nations" and to "make the world safe for democracy" has inaugurated the era of Capitalist Imperialism. The Peace of Versailles has proven more ruthless than Brest Litovsk. Labor's Bill of Rights, written into the Peace Treaty by Samuel Gompers is but another chain binding the wage slave to the master class. And now we behold the Capitalist World in chaos.

Out of this chaotic condition came the challenge of the Third International held in Moscow last March. Here was a call to action, based upon the wisdom gleaned from the Russian Revolution. This Call was sent to the Socialist Parties of the world urging that all revolutionary organizations affiliate with the Third International.

The official Socialist Party of the United States has failed utterly to measure up to its historic task. On almost every issue which concerns the vital interests of the working class it has shown itself weak, vacillating and reactionary. The despicable acts of the old Executive Committee and the proceedings of the recent National Emergency Convention have laid bare the miserable compromising spirit which animated those in control of the Party's destiny. The Socialist Party has broken faith with the workers. At the Emergency convention it repudiated the Third International by a vote of 61 to 33.

In a communication dated Sept. 9th State Secretary Oliver C. Wilson declares that no Local or Branch may take under consideration those matters of controversy within the Socialist Party, thereby making himself the censor of what the membership shall or shall not act upon. It was just such usurped power as this by the old National Executive Committee that tore the Socialist Party asunder at the recent National Emergency Convention.

Honest and sincere socialists can no longer remain in the Socialist Party. Thousands of class conscious comrades have already left the Party, and, recognizing the need of a party of revolutionary Socialism have joined the Communist Labor Party which was born in Chicago August 31st, 1919.

In response to the demand from comrades all over the state this Call goes forth for the organization of the Communist Labor Party of Illinois. A state convention will be held in Rock Island Sunday Oct. 12th at Workmens Hall, 712 Eighth St. The convention will be called to order at 9:30 A. M. and all business logically coming before such a convention shall be transacted, such as drafting a state constitution selection of state executive committee, state secretary, and such other committees and officials as the convention may decide. The basis of delegate representation shall be as follows: where a county organization exists it shall have one delegate for every fifty members or major fraction thereof. In districts where there is no county organization every organized group of ten or more members who subscribe to the Principles, Program, and Platform of the Communist Labor Party shall be entitled to one delegate.

Comrades: we urge all branches and locals of the Socialist Party to consider fully the failure of the Socialist Party to measure up to its historic task and responsibilities. Secretaries are urged to immediately call a meeting of their membership and if they subscribe to the Principles, Program, and Platform above set forth, to select delegates to the state convention of the Communist Labor Party of Illinois. Send the name and address of your delegates, together with the number of members represented, to Edgar Owens, 433—16th Ave., Moline, Illinois, at the earliest possible moment. This is absolutely necessary in order that proper arrangements may be made.

Comrades! A splendind opportunity awaits us. The steel workers strike; the impending clash between the workers and owners of the railways; the proposed general strike of miners—these are of far-reaching political significance. Illinois is so conditioned industrially that the decisive battle will take place here. Let us not prove delinquents. Let us measure up to our historic task.

Fraternally yours,
SAMUEL HANKIN,
Secretary Cook County (P.T.)
EDGAR OWENS,
Secretary Down State (P.T.)

By J. B. Gilmes

Our room is perfect with so many books,
And music, and the paintings on the wall,
My fiddle, and the piano, and your song.
The night si fragrant, and the moon is out
To guide the steps of lovers through the parks;
And while you lean your head against my breast,
And life is more than living, and our love
So warm and holy, one black thought has come
To mock our freedom and our happiness:
Gene Debs, our friend, our leader,
Still in jail!

the struggling proletariat of Russia and Europe and manuevered things so as to put you in the tacit position of kicking the Bolsheviks in the face.

In building the Socialist party of America under the domination of those who have brought about the present state of affairs I am positive that you are building a similar Kerensky-Scheidemann regime in America that will one day prove as disastrous to proletarian triumph in the day of trial here as it did in Europe and Russian.

Fraternally submitted,
EDWIN FIRTH.

WASHINGTON AFFILIATES

At a meeting of the state executive committee of Washington, the following motion was carried: "That we concur in the report of our delegates, approving their action, and endorse the Communist Labor Party of the United States; and we instruct our state secretary to transact all necessary business with the national office of the Communist Labor Party until sanctioned or rejected by the rank and file of state."

THE RHODE ISLAND CONVENTION

At a special convention held in Rhode Island, the comrades voted 81 to 13 to affiliate with the Communist Labor Party, after hearing a report from Coldwell and Reid, the Rhode Island delegates to the national convention.

A representative of the reactionary Socialist Party was present, and a motion made, by this advice, to postpone affiliation for six months, was voted down overwhelmingly.

Jas. P. Reid was elected temporary state secretary.

KANSAS AND MISSOURI HOLD CONVENTIONS

Communist Labor Party convention held in Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., on September 21st.

The Kansas convention was attended by delegates from all really alive locals in the state and the only alive locals in the state are the left wing locals. Ernest F. McNutt was elected state secretary for Kansas. It is estimated that three fourths of the Kansas membership will affiliate with the C. L. P. The Missouri convention was also well attended. A majority of the well attended. A majority of the Missouri membership is left wing, and now that the split is definite, big inroads have been made into the St. Louis organization by the C. L. P. J. P. Cannon has been elected state secretary for Missouri, and he w also act as district organizer-secretary for the states of Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri.

BEDACHT DEBATES FERGUSON.

Max Bedacht, national executive committeeman of the Communist Labor Party and I. E. Ferguson, national executive committeeman of the Communist Party met each other in debate in St. Louis, Mo., on September 26th. Bedacht followed the tactics of the C. L. P., namely argued the question of unity from an impersonal and fair standpoint, claiming that there should be unity between the two parties because they are alike in principle and that personal differences between leaders should not longer seperate them.

Ferguson launched an attack upon the comrades prominent in the Communist Labor Party, called the delegates to the C. L. P. convention misled ignoramuses, and as seems to be the method of those in high offices in the Communist Party, did everything he could to engender further division by uncalled for bitterness. Bedacht, in a clear manner, stated the history of the two parties before the conventions, cited the decision of the Left Wing National Conference, and proved that the C. L. P. delegates lived up to that decision while Fraina, Ferguson and others violated it.

The result of the debate was a complete victory for Bedacht and Communist Labor Party. The Left Wing section of St. Louis voted to affiliate with the C. L. P.

CHICAGO C. L. P. CONVENTION

Organization work is progressing splendidly in Chicago. Edwin Firth has been selected as organizer for Chicago by the national office, and Arthur Proctor, 204 North Clark street, is the new Cook County Secretary.

The preliminary organization meeting took place Sunday, Sept. 28. A good attendance was had. Chas. Baker of Ohio was on hand as special organizer. Delegates were elected to the Illinois state convention. The work in Chicago and Illinois will go forward with added impetus, now that the work of organizing the State machinery of the C. L. P. is about finished.

YOUNGSTOWN UNITY RESOLUTIONS.

The City Central Committee, a delegate body composed of representatives from language branches who belong to the Communist Party and representatives from branches (English and others) who are affiliated with the Communist Labor Party, passed the following resolution: That the C. C. C of Youngstown protests against the split in the left wing ranks and urge that the Communist Labor Party and the Communist Party find some way to unite.

(Signed) WALLACE METCALF,
Sec'y.

NEW YORK NEWS

"By January 1st we are sure to have local organization of over 2,000. As was exepected, the Communist Party elements here are already fighting it out among themselves as to who shall control the controllers. All the active revolutionary elements have joined the C. L. P.

Russian Federation branch 4, of Kings, by a vote of 37 to 13, voted to withdraw from the Russian Federation, and this branch, together with four other Russian branches in New York have decided, at a recent joint meeting, to affiliate with the C. L. P. As regards the S. P., it is practically lifeless, an organization of "leaders" without a rank and file. The future is bright for the C. L. P." Morris Zuker.

The rumor, circulated by Communist Party adherants, that Alexander Bilan Cleveland and H. S. Warren of Oregon have joined and are organizing for the Communist Party, is without foundation. Both of them have joined and are actively working for the Communist Labor Party.

We want to warn all comrades against extravagant statements made by enthusiasts for the C. P. Speakers and organizers for the C. L. P. stand instructed not to employ personal attack and invectives in their field work. The C. L. P. will continue the policy of demanding unity and refuses to contribute even one epithet which would make for further enstrangement and bitter feeling. Just why the Communist Party officials persist in their tactics of personal abuse, is a mystery, for in the end they will disgust their own membership.

Debs Goes To Prison

We walked down the hall with Debs, and he assured us that he had had three good meals, and, that "everything was all right," his usual expression in cases of extreme adversity. The Warden made it plain to us that he did not wish our visit to be of length. We tarried a moment while Debs said that he had received a number of telegrams from his Comrades in all parts of the country.

All day Monday two Negro convicts were at work in Debs' little room, scrubbing the floors, washing the windows and fumigating it so as to put it in order to receive the most celebrated prisoner this country has ever known.

As we passed the door of the room that Debs will occupy during his stay, Debs looked in at the Negro convicts at work.

"The Warden won't let me help you," said 'Gene, "but I shan't forget your kind favors."

"Das all right, Mr. Debs," replied the shorter of the two Negroes, "we mighta had a worse job dan dis."

The Moundsville prison had just recovered from an epidemic of Spanish influenza. One hundred convicts were ill and there were two deaths. The Warden seemed particularly concerned abouth 'Gene's health, and admonished him to take it easy and rest.

"Remember that I am responsible for your health, Debs", said the Warden, "and I want you to leave here in as good shape as you came."

"I will leave here in better shape than when I arrived," said Debs. He smiled and joked a little and told us that he had been treated "excellently."

Debs would say the same thing were he bound to the stake and burned. He would kiss the hand of the man who would light the pyre under his feet.

Just before we entered the prison we met three messenger boys, and all of them owned they had just delivered messages for Debs. The Warden insisted that Engdahl, Wagenknecht and myself take dinner with him. We did so. The Warden was interested to learn something of Deb's history.

Warden Terrell told us that 25 years ago he was a telegraph operator on the B. & O. railroad when Debs was organizing the railroad men in the American Railway Union. "I remember when Debs went to prison at that time," he said. The Warden admitted that he had never seen Debs before, but added, "He has a wonderful mind, a fine brain and bubbles over with kindness."

As we talked with the keeper of the great liberator in his private apartments on the top floor of the prison overlooking the Ohio valley and the river that flows at its feet, Terrell's little girl romped and played on the floor.

The name of Debs was mentioned frequently, and finally the little brown-eyed baby looked up in her father's eyes and asked:

"Daddy, who is Debs?"

The Warden blushed. "Ask these gentlemen here, my dear They seem to know better than I!"

The little girl, her name was Barbalee I think ran over to me and climbed up and my lap. I had just been playing "Patty-cake, patty-cake baker's man" with her.

"Who is Debs?" lisped Barbalee.

"Debs is a good man, kind man," I told her, "who loves all little boys and girls. And all little boys and girls love him, too. If he were up here now he would get right down on the floor there and play with you." The little girl danced off my lap, and ran over to the Warden clapping her hands with glee.

"Oh, Daddy, Mr. Debs is a kind man who loves little children and he plays with them, too; do you thing he will ever come upstairs and play with me?" There was anxious hope in the sweet voice of the Warden's daughter as she put her question.

The Warden was nonplussed. He did not know how to answer this innocent question of his little girl whose imagination had been gripped by the simple description I had given her of Debs.

"No, my dear," replied the Warden, "I don't think Mr. Debs will ever have time to come up and play with you, but you shall see him some day." Barbalee ran back to me as though I sould rescue her possible playmate.

"Some day," I told her, "some day, Barbalee, when you have grown to be a big girl you will be glad and proud that you lived in the same house with 'Gene Debs. Lots of his friends would wish they might say they had lived in the same house with Debs." She looked at me wonderingly. Her big brown eyes were sad and I felt that I had given Barbalee just a little pain.

"I don't know what you gentlemen may think" said the Warden at one point, "but I want you all to know that I have had no instruction from any one—none from the Governor nor from Washington — to show Debs any special favors or consideration. What I am doing is purely my own affair."

The Warden seemed to want to impress us with that view of the matter. We all had hazarded the guess that in the case of Debs unusual consideration would be the policy, and that this consideration very likely came from high authority. The Warden denied it. The reader may judge for himself. The fact is, however, that 'Gene Debs was being shown every consideration. His breakfast and his dinner had been brought to him Monday morning and he ate them in his cell. The Warden said he wanted to save Debs the first humiliation of walking in the lockstep to and from the mess hall. Debs would have felt no humiliation in that regard. He felt a little bit peeved that all the other 895 convicts were not receiving the same treatment.

While we were all talking in Debs' room the Warden spoke about 'Gene's new job as hospital attendant.

"I am going to do whatever you thing is best," said Debs. "I want to earn my board here, at any rate," he added. and the tall classic frame of the great Socialist humanist bent almost double with silvery laughter.

The book that Debs had been reading was John Reed's "Ten Days That Shook the World." I had presented Debs with my own copy of that book.

"If you ever need a painter," said Debs, "call on me. That was my first trade. I may be a little slow at it now, but I can learn it in a jiffy." The Warden smiled and said: "Good, I may call on you for that some day, Debs, but, in the meanwhile, you take good care of your health. I want you to leave here as well as when you came."

Tuesday afternoon we journeyed to Moundsville, taking the Warden at his word that we would be permitted to see Debs whenever we came. The Warden seemed stiffer than usual. We asked for pictures of the prison, which were given to us. The Warden's manner indicated that he would refuse to let us agein see Debs, so we did not press the matter. He merely said: "The matter is a closed book now, gentlemen," evidently meaning that Debs was Convict No. 2253. Debs is the quiest prisoner at Moundsville. He is spending his days learning his work under the direction of the prison physician, and in a little while he will have full charge of all the hospital records. Debs has asked Warden Terrell that he be permitted to do some manual labor.

Before we left the Warden permitted us to leave with Debs a box of cigars, a cake of chocolate and a bag of apples and oranges. In the corridor we passed several convicts painting the banisters. Debs patted each on the back. It was a spontaneous outburst of affection which he could not refrain from. The Warden smiled.

In spite of this kindness, in spite of this manifestation of official consideration for Our 'Gene, let the workers not relax one iota in their efforts to get Debs out of prison. He is a prisoner behind bars. He cannot come out of jail for 10 years, unless the organized power of the working class forcess the capitalist class to swing the lever of that automatic turntable through which Debs passed Sunday night, April 13, 1919.

Debs knows this as much as any. It is liberty that Debs wants, and in seching liberty for himself he demands it for every breathing being. As I write this I am reminded of Debs' classic statement, printed and stated so many hundreds of times. Shall we write it again?

"WHILE THERE IS A LOWER CLASS I AM IN IT. WHILE THERE IS A CRIMINAL CLASS I AM OF IT. WHILE THERE IS A SOUL IN PRISON I AM NOT FREE."

Beatrice M. Sedgewick, state secretary of Delaware, has placed her first order for dues stamps.

CLEVELAND GERMAN BRANCH DEMANDS UNITY.

A resolution pased by the German Branch, Cleveland, reads in part as follows: "We pledge ourselves and urge all members of the Communist Party to refrain from any and every tactic that may create emnity between the workers and to do our utmost bring about unity between all revolutionary factions, especially between the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party."

The part of this resolution which reads "we urge the Communist Party ti refrain from any and every tactic that may create emnity" is well directed. Tactics which are being pursued by the Communist Party at present are not such as will lead to a unity between all revolutionary factions in this country.

13,500 STAMPS ORDERED.

The machinery of the Communist Labor Party, only a month old, is just beginning to move yet already 13,500 stamps have been ordered. Only two western states have so far been supplied. Due to the distance of these states from the national office, orders for stamps and supplies will be received a week or so later than those received from locals and states in the east and middle west. By the First of November the national office hopes to report 30,000 dues stamps ordered, as well as an affiliated membership equalling that number.

LOCAL CUYAHOGA COUNTY JOINS C. P.

A delegate convention of Local Cuyahoga County was held Sept., 28th. By a large majority, the delegates, most of them from federation branches, decided to join the C. P. Action of many of the delegates was predetermined by the wish not to split the local movement and so they voted for the C. P. together with the federation delegates who controlled the convention.

The German branch which had 40 delegates, handed in a resolution for unity between the C. P. and C. L. P. most of the Hungarian branch delegates refused to vote, the Finnish and Jewish branch delegates decided to stay with the Socialist Party.

A feature of the convention was a resolution introduced by Ruthenberg which calls for a state convention to decide upon the disposition of the state office and its property. Just why such a resolution was proposed, considering the fact that Local Cuyahoga County has not contributed to the upbuilding of the Ohio Socialist or any the many other state activities, is hard to understand.

On Oct. 3 the preliminary organization meeting of the Communist Labor Party of Cuyahoga County took place. Most of the active English speaking party members, comrades who have given years to the movement in Cleveland, were present. Organization work for the C. L. P. in Cleveland was planned and it is expected that the C. L. P. local of Cleveland will soon become a strong revolutionary force in Ohio's largest city.

Shall Prison be Debs' Tomb?

The Organized Power of Workers can prevent it

Prisons have always been notorious for cruelty and unspeakable injustice. Established upon the concept that the prevention of crime could be brought about by unusual cruelties practiced upon the inmates, prisons have continued thru the centuries down to the present day as schools for crime instead of institutions of reform and betterment. While claiming to be the most advanced of all nations the penal institutions of this country continue the practices and the punishments that have made European bastiles famous for inhumanity and injustice.

The dungeon, ball and chain, manacling of the wrists; days, weeks, even months on a bread and water diet; the suspension in mid air by the wrists with iron chains are only a few of the inhumanities practiced with very, very few exceptions in all our prisons. They are practiced in the federal prison at Atlanta, Ga., where Eugene V. Debs is condemned to spend ten years of his life if he shall live that long in a place where such inhumanity occurs daily. Many political prisoners have died under such treatment. Many more have contracted diseases which will shorten their lives. Many have gone insane. Political prisoners are, as a rule, treated with less consideration than any other class of prisoners. A murderer is treated with respect compared to the treatment that is accorded those of our comrades who have been jailed for their opinions which did not happen to jibe with those of the official family of the present administration at Washington.

That the United States Government, meaning the administration as represented by Woodrow Wilson is determined to kill Debs is but a logical deducation to be drawn from the facts. Debs is a source of danger to the Wilson administration; dangerous to the economic masters it serves. This fact the administration is well aware of. But it believes he is less dangerous to it in prison than outside. He is still less dangerous in his grave than alive, tho behind prison bars. Therefore, Debs will remain where he is, he will die where he is unless the workers by their organized might force open the prison doors.

Debs might have had his freedom, if he had cared more for himself than for his class. If he had been less sensible of his own welfare, less thoughtful of the thousands of other political prisoners. But Debs chose a life sentence in jail rather than to seek freedom for himself only, while his comrades were condemned to years in prison.

And is Debs bearng up under the strain of prison life? Debs is different from most of us. He thinks in flowers and souls; he feels and cries and suffers with those in pain. Prison is all pain and so Debs suffers daily the tortures inflicted upon the lowliest of inmates.

A letter has just been received from Liberator Attorney Castleton. It's another call to action. Read it. Then sit down for five minutes and THINK IT OVER. And then get up and DO SOMETHING. AND right now the best thing you can do is to gather Liberation Funds so that we will have the where-withall to do something with.

GET INTO ACTION—and you will if you READ THE FOLLOWING LETTER.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 4th, 1919.

To All Comrades:—

My heart is sad to-day, for the slim and slender Gene is but the shadow, the mere ghost of his former self. Wednesday I arranged to have him bid Alex. Berkman "Good-bye", and when he came into the warden's offce I was frightened for I saw before me our beloved Gene looking gravely ill. He had a gray stubble of two days growth upon his sallow face. His eyes seemed to have lost their flashing sparkle of life, his face was taught and worn and his throat bagged. The physical Debs looked almost dead — and all our hearts were sad — in spite of Gene's inspiring, fighting spirit which he will keep until the very end. Debs will die fighting for the proletariat, with words of love for the workers on his lips. If Debs is not released from here at once the federal penetentiary at Atlanta Ga., will be his tomb. It is a physical impossibility for him to hold out much longer.

Debs senses that his end is near. But he is consoled with his faith in the rank and file of his comrades now triumphantly winning the world, so that emancipated proletarians may work out their destiny together.

How Debs wishes he could met his comrades face to face — talk to them once more before he leaves this world! How he loves life, his comrades, the Great Cause.

No matter what happens — Gene will remain true red to the very end. And it is the spirit of Debs that will conquer the world. Gene feels that there are millions of comrades the world over working for the new day, where there were but thousands before and he is happy because our great cause is meeting with victory.

The personality of Debs has created a spiritual and mental revolution at the Atlanta prison. Not only have the political prisoners learned to love him mor than ever before, but there are men who are braving the "HOLE" and other prison punishment to show him a little kindness, a token of good will and comradeship. There are prisoners there who would gladly serve Debs' ten years term in prison if that were possible.

I shall see Gene in the next few days and write again.

He sends his love to all the comrades. He still repeats "tell the boys I am all right".

Sincerely yours
SAMUEL M. CASTLETON.

Berkman charges Murder, Dungeons, Chains and lesser Brutalities Rule in Treatment of Prisoners at Atlanta Federal Prison

Alexander Berkman, philosophical anarchist and noted labor leader, was released from Atlanta Penetentiary, Wed. Oct. 11st., having served two years for alleged opposition to the war-time draft laws. Berkman has served many years of his life in American prisons. Following the Homestead strikes of 1892 he served fourteen years in a Penn. prison on account of strike activities. The following post-prison statement by him is a vivid portrayal of conditions as they now exist in the federal prison at Atlanta, Ga., the prison that holds within its sombre walls the body of Eugene V. Debs and many other political and class-war prisoners. Read Berkman's statement of the horrors of Atlanta prison and then resolve that not another hour shall pass without you doing all in your power to bring these crimes against your comrades to an end.

Berkman's Statement.

"This country is at the present time going through the same throes of social and industrial rebirth that are convulsing England, France and other European countries. The steel workers' strike is merely one of the symptoms of the social-evolutionary process that may in the near future culminate in revolution. The sources of labor discontent in this country are idential with those in every other land of our so-called civilization. The working masses are not satisfied any more with empty political democracy: they demand a share in the products of their industry and the opportunity to live, to enjoy life. Industrial slavery, perhaps more acute in the United States than anywhere else, is on its death bed. The next step in the social life of the world is the taking over of all industry by the workers, both manual and mental, to be managed and operated by themselves, for the benefit of the producers instead of for the profit of our industrial and commercial kaisers.

"The present steel strike vividly calls back to my memory the great steel strike of Homestead, in 1892, when the Pinkertons hired by Carnegie and Frick shot the strikers down wholesale for demanding living conditions. In connection with the Homestead strike I served fourteen years in the western penitentiary of Pennsylvania. We have made some progress since then. The workers, especially, have learned a good deal since the days of the Homestead strike. They have learned the most important lesson of all, and that is that labor has an invincible wespon in solidarity. That is also the lesson that is being impressed on American labor today by the workers of England. Soon the American Federation of Labor will realise that it is folly to call a strike of steel workers, without at the same time securing the solidaric support of all the other key industries—the railway men and the miners. While the workers in these industries strike separately, at different times, they run the risk of defeat. But a simultaneous strike of all the three key industries would quickly bring our Garys, Morgans and Fricks to their senses.

Future of Proletariat.

"But whatever the immediate outcome of the steel strike, it is but a question of a short time before American labor will make solidaric cause throughout all industries and assert the right of the toilers to the ownership of the full product of their toil. The day of capitalistic autocracy is gone. The future belongs to the proletariat of hand and brain.

"The present situation in the United States is full of promise for the future. The war and its results have proven a great education for the peoples of the world. They are sick of the high-sounding phrases about political democracy and self-determination that are, in actual practice, so many scraps of paper. It is industrial autocracy that the workers of the world seek to destroy. This country, the alleged champion of democracy, is being daily changed more and more into the regime of Prussian militarism. The government of the United States has taken advantage of the alleged necessities of the war to crush the spirit of libetry and to deprive the people of the last vestige of freedom. It has now become dangerous, in this free country of ours, to express an independent opinion upon any subject, except perhaps about the weather. Free speech and press are a thing of the past. The American junkers and plutocrats are swamping the country with propaganda for a strong militarism. Our industrial autocrats see the hand-writing on the wall and hope to crush the gathering forces of labor by the bayonet and the machine gun. The voice of liberty is being stifled in the prisons. Our jails and penitentiaries are full of political and industrial prisoners who have dared to hold an opinion of their own and to express it. Men like Debs and others are immured behind iron bars because they love liberty more than patrioteering. It is the eternal disgrace of this country that conscientious objectors political and industrial prisoners, have not yet been given an amnesty, though even the most reactionary countries of Europe have long since restored their social protestants to liberty. If there is any manhood left in the people of America, they should immediately voice the most compelling demand for a general amnesty for all political and industrial prisoners.

"Rebels against industrial autocracy such as Debs and others, should be the pride of the United States instead of being kept in dungeons. Woe to a country that has no Debses, Kate O'Hares or Emma Goldmans! They are the voices that cry out the best aspirations of humanity, even in the face of the gravest dangers to themselves.

Spoke With Debs.

"Speaking of Debs. I was happy to have the opportunity this morning, before leaving the federal prison at Atlanta, to shake hands with the Grand Old Man of the New Day. If there ever was a martyr to liberty, Debs is that man. How stupid it is of the government to jail men of his type. Prisons cannot crush their spirit, nor iron bars and brutality change their consciences. Their love of humanity transcends the fear of punishment or death. There are times when the scaffold is the most elevated position for an honest man. Ideals cannot be imprisoned nor can the eternal spirit of liberty be exterminated by shutting up its champions in dungeons or deporting men and women out of the United States. I feel, I am convinced, that the future belongs to use to us that strive to regenerate society, to abolish poverty, misery, war and crime, by doing away with the causes of these evils. And even in prison, where we cannot fight for liberty, we can ayways struggle for principle.

"It is this attitude of the political prisoners in all prisons that makes their lot even harder than that or the average prisoner. It is time the United States government should take its head out of the bushes and recognize the existence of political prisoners in this country. Even in czarist Russia the political prisoner was recognized as a man suffering for his ideals. Benighted America still considers the political the same as the so-called common criminal. In the Atlanta federal prison the politicals fare even worse than the average prisoner. A banker who got away with the savings of poor widows and orphans receives the highest consideration in the prison, while the man who loves humanity more than his own safety is subjected to special persecution and discrimination.

Brutality in Prisons.

"I find that very few essential changes have taken place in the administration of our prisons within the last twenty-five years. The same system of brutalizing and degrading the prisoner still prevails. Only the forms differ slightly. The dungeon (known as "the hole"), chaining up by the wrists, clubbing and shooting, are the dominant methods of 'reformation' in Atlanta. Men are chained to the cell doors for eight to ten hours consecutively, without even the opportunity of answering the most pressing demands of nature. I have known men in the federal prison to be kept twenty-one to thirty days at a stretch in the hole, which is a filthy, dark kennel not fit for a respectable dog, and fed on two small slices of bread twice a day. Men are clubbed frequently, on the least provocation, and recently a young colored boy, 'Kid Smith,' was shot dead for not walking fast enough while being taken to 'the hole.'

Guards Are Vulgar.

"The average type of the guard in the federal prison is far below that of the average prisoner, both mentally and morally. Excepting a few decent officers, of a humane spirit, the majority of the guards are vulgar, brutal and dissipated men. Some are degenerates of the worst type. At their heads is Deputy Warden Girardeau, formely in charge of a chaingang. He is a man of very low mentality who believes in the old-time methods of brutality and suppression. His tactics look towards the breaking of the prisoner's spirit and to the degradation of the inmates. A prison, even at its best, is the last place in the world to improve a man. But the Atlanta prison tends chiefly to dehumanize the prisoners and to crush the last vestige of their manhod and self-respect. It is the deputy warden who is mainly responsible for the inhumanities and outrages practiced in the federal prison. He encourages the most brutal tendencies of the guards and frequently protests and nullifies the warden's more humane attitude. The deputy warden is the most hated man in the prison. The inmates regard him as a religious hypocrite, narrow-minded and mean-spirited. It is his custom, after leading Sunday service, to go down to the dungeon and chain men up to the doors. He tantalizes the hungry victims in the hole with the recital of the fine breakfast he had enjoyed that morning and in various ways seeks to provoke them into some unguarded remark in order to increase their punishment. In protest against the murderous clubbing and shooting of defenseless prisoners I circulated a petition in the tailor shop (where I was employed at the time) to call the attention of the warden to the terrible situation. The deputy warden, hearing about it, sent for me

The American Freedom Convention

(Held in Chicago, Ill., Sept. 25—29th)

The American Freedom Convention which just concluded its sessions at Chicago did not, beyond passing some very good and well meaning resolutions, do much toward effecting the release of our class war prisoners. Evidently the men now in the Ft. Leavenworth prison had some faith in the convention as they had a delegate there, H. Austin Simons a former C. O., who had been confined at the "Wire-City" stockade. Seymour Stedman made the opening address urged the delegates to cause congress to be flooded with appeals for the release of the Class war prisoners. Irwin St. John Tucker, the next speaker refused to have his name included in an appeal or a petition for release or commutation of sentence. He urged labor to get together and organize and then DEMAND and back up the demand.

As a whole there were many well meaning people present, but they have no means of gaining any kind of results as they belonged to no particular group that, by its industrial power could accomplish anything. The Delegates were made up of representatives of Organized Labor (110), Socialist bodies had 45 delegates. Besides these there were Amnesty leagues of many cities represented, the Civil Liberties Bureau was represented by Mr. De Silver, the American Union against Militarism by Mr. Chas. T. Hallinan, the friends of India by Mr. Roger N. Baldwin recently released from prison as a conscientious objector. Many State Federations of Labor and City Centrals had delegates. In all there were approximately 300 and they came from all points between Seattle and New York. The regular retinue of piecard artists and professional convention attenders was also present. A resolution endorsing the One Big Union caused an all afternoon's talkfest and was finally referred for revision, as the charge was made that the One Big Union Propagarda killed the Mooney affair and was certain to kill the Amnesty Convention. Mrs. Meta Berger spoke on the Wilwaukee Leader and the Chicago Trial.

Mr. Chas. T. Hallinan presented to the convention some valuable information regarding the present courtmatrial system and its victims, stating that they numbered well into the thousands. The Convention was held in the Machinists Hall which has seen so many memorable conventions within its walls during the last few weeks.

Had organized labor been in charge of that convention rather than the silkstocking element of reformers, something worth while could have been done for here was a convention where the International officers had no influence and once rid of that element, labor will do some big things. If the purpose of the convention was a failure, if it was merely to acquaint the delegates with the facts then it is a success. A demonstration in one of the Mid-western cities (Toledo, O.) early in the spring, taught many workers how to release political prisoners when 17,000 angry citizens marched to the jail and in 10 minutes had 75 of them freed.

The Municipal Elections

Numerous locals in Ohio are courageously waging municipal campaigns.

These campaigns are being conducted upon a uniform Communist-Socialist municipal platform, adopted by the state membership.

These are the first political campaigns ever waged in this country along the lines of the NEW Socialism, the Socialism which seeks, not to reform the capitalist state, but which demands its abolition, demands workers' control and workers' supremacy.

Thousands upon thousands of these platforms have been printed for the locals by the state office and they are being conscientiously distributed broadcast, laying the foundation for the NEW political action and teaching the workers, for the first time, the direct road to emancipation.

These campaigns, must of necessity in this election, be made under the name of the Socialist Party. The signatures to the nomination petitions were gathered under that name and in many instances the tickets were filed under that name. The new party designation, in many of these locals, can not go into effect until after the elections.

But carrying on the campaign under the name of the Socialist Party does not make these campaigns reactionary in character. It is not the party name which makes a party reactionary or revolutionary. It is the principles of the party which decides this question.

While these municipal campaigns have been on, the Ohio Socialist has been compelled to severely criticize that Socialist Party nationally because of its reactionary national officialdom. These criticisms do not in any way apply to the party in this state, nor to any local which is making its campaign upon the official municipal platform.

Readers of the Ohio Socialist should keep this in mind. The Socialist Party in this state, (now the Communist Labor Party) is not affiliated with the Socialist Party of the United States. It is not so affiliated because the Socialist Party of the United States is a Scheidemann party, a party which, at the crucial moment, will turn upon the workers and compromise with the capitalist class.

The criticisms made, many of which may have confused our readers, were against the national party. We call upon you therefore to give the comrades, who are waging the municipal campaign in your city your immediate and full support. These comrades are in harmony with the Third International and in their valiantly conducted municipal campaigns, are fighting abreast of our victorious comrades of Russia.

ON WITH THE CAMPAIGNS, COMRADES!

Rally the workers around the standard of the Third International.

HELP TO MAKE THE WORKERS' VOICES HEARD IN THE LEGISLATIVE HALLS FOR WORKERS' CONTROL.

Tactical Problems

An Answer to an Attack upon Ohio and its Municipal Elections.

(By A. BILAN.)

The first issue of "Communist" is trying its best to find tactical differences between the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party. It seems that they have found one 'difference'' already, which "shows the utmost confusion concerning fundamental principles and tactics'' in the C. L. P. They promise that others will devolep.

Bear in your mind, the difference they say is a "fundamental'' one:

"The state office requested locals to proceed as follows—

Ohio locals should continue their municipal campaigns under the name of "Socialist Party''. The adoption of the new name can date from time immediately following the November elections.

For this reason the C. L. P. is branded as Menshevik. Contrary to this The Communist Party calls itself Bolshevik, because they are not participating in the present Municipal elections. Secondly they are boycotting the elections as the Bolsheviks did in 1906 Duma elections. You see: they are doing the same thing the Bolsheviks did thirteen years ago, and therefore there can be no doubt about their being Bolsheviks. What is our answer? Are we Communists or do we not understand Communist fundamentals?

Let us analyze. Where is the violation of the Ohio C. L. P. against the fundamental principles of Communism by participating in the Municipal elections under the name of Socialist Party?

It is a widely known fact that the Socialist party of Ohio was expelled by the Germer gang. The Socialist Party of Ohio adopted the Left Wing program at its State Convention in Cincinnati and its Municipal Platform was adopted along the lines of the Left Wing Program. The Municipal Platform was mostly written by the present Executive Committeeman and National Executive Secretary of the Communist Party, C. E. Ruthenberg, whom I supose you would not accuse of being a Menshevik. In the present emergency case where the whole state organization is in reorganization the name of the Party does not count, but only the platform on which the propaganda is carried. If we can utilize this Municipal campaign on a strict revolutionary platform to educate the masses why not do so? It is a mere technical question, which does not involve any compromise of principle.

I have to inform the Communists who claim that they are copying the Bolshevik tactics, that the Bolsheviks themselves in the election campaign used similar methods, they had to put their candidates on nonpartisan tickets and not under their real name. Regardless of that, there was no confusion amongst the voters, as to how to cast their ballots at the election booths. In emergency cases the name of the party does not count, but only the plat-

Liberators Lend a Hand To Persecuted Workers

Seven Miners Arrested at Adena Charged with Violating Freeman Act Because they Demanded Coal Operators Stop Stealing.

The Army of Liberators has again come to the rescue. It has sent attorney Jos. W. Sharts to the coal fields of eastern Ohio, to rescue seven miners from the clutches of capitalism. Not content with the BIG steal, that is, exploiting the workers as wage slaves, the coal operators have been caught stealing from the miners by not giving them full weight for the coal they mine.

The miners, as soon as they found out that they were being robbed, quit work. And that was treason. Immediately a charge of violating the Freeman act was placed against the committee which attempted to secure action from other miners for a strike against this robbery. These miners, seven of them, all members of the party except one, are now lodged in the Harrison county jail.

A delegation was sent to Cleveland to secure the help of the Army of Liberators. We immediately sent Attorney Sharts to Adena and Cadiz. Here is his report. Read it. Every reader of the Ohio Socialist, every member of the United Mine Workers in Ohio, is asked to come to the aid of these comrades. Send contributions to the Army of Liberators, 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

SHARTS' REPORT.

Your telegram brought me here esterday evening all unprepared for what confronted me today. These men were not, as you seem to have got the word, being held without charge in the Harrison County jail. They had been indicted September 27 under the Freeman Act for Criminal Syndicalism; and when I got in touch with the Sheriff shortly after 8 o'clock this morning, he informed me that in half an hour they would be brought before the Court on arraignment. I ran up to the Clerk's office and spent the next half hour doing a marathon with pen and ink writing out motions to quash and also demurrers. I got the motions filed, alleging such grounds of objection to the indictments as the hastiest scanning suggested. However, the arraignment did not occur. The Prosecuting Attorney, who seems a nice young chap, named Barclay Moore, asked for time in which to prepare his argument against my motion, and it was set for Friday evening, at 7:30 P. M.

That gave me an interval in which to breathe and look into the situation.

I can knock out these indictments on motions and demurrers. But the Prosecutor stated very positively the men will in that event be immediately re-arrested and bound over to the next grand jury. The Sheriff also seems to be very bitter, altho after our first encounter he was very accomodating

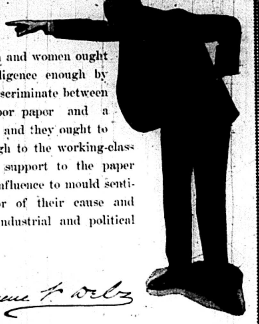
Debs says to You



Workingmen and women ought to have intelligence enough by this time to discriminate between an honest labor paper and a grafting sheet and they ought to be loyal enough to the working-class to give their support to the paper that uses its influence to mould sentiment in favor of their cause and fights their industrial and political battles.

About Rumors

Rumors are funny things. They travel at lightening speed, especially when the rumor is false.

Just at present Ohio has its share or rumors. We have located them here and there. There are rumors about the state office and rumors about the state secretary; rumors about the Communist Labor Party and rumors about the Communist Party.

We've a request to make. Before believing rumors you hear make sure that they are true. We speak now for both the C. P. and the C. L. P. We comrades of the Communist Labor Party refuse to spread rumors. We do spread facts. We know that the Communist Party can not be killed by spreading false rumors about it, even tho some think that the Communist Labor Party can be buried under an avalanche of them.

We ask this—before believing what anyone says about any one else or any other party, INVESTIGATE TO MAKE SURE THE TRUTH WAS TOLD YOU.

We also ask this—If YOU, who are reading this, know of any comrade who delights in spreading rumors irrespective of knowledge of their genuineness, please have him write them all upon paper, using one side only, and send them to this office. We want to print them in the Ohio Socialist. This will give them a large circulation.

This offer is made knowing that the larger circulation false rumors get the more strength that party secures which is lied about.

Debs' Photos are still selling. 12x17, splendid for framing and only 25c each in lots of 25 or more 10c. each.

Long evenings are coming. How about your reading? Look over our list of books and pamphlets and select some with which to keep company during the hours between work and bed time.

YOUNGSTOWN CALLS FOR UNITY

Youngstown, Ohio,
Oct. 4th, 1919, 10 A. M.

Dear Comrades:—

LOCAL YOUNGSTOWN asks YOUR Local, wether you are interested enough in the CAUSE, to meet with us in a NORTH-EASTERN OHIO convention held in our city, in the sole aim of trying to get our forces together again, regardless of who you have lined up, or what party you intend to line up with. This invitation excludes of course the RIGHT WING."

In reply to this invitation, state what day would be most convenient, etc. A date will be set later at your convenience.

LOCAL YOUNGSTOWN asks you to attend either by delegates, or by mass convention. If the later the majority of locals represented at the meeting will carry the day. You are requested to attend in a broadminded spirit, the kind of spirit that spells CLASS SOLIDARITY in face of the common enemy.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU AT ONCE.

The quicker your local decides to attend, the better for all of our ranks.

All arrangements will be looked after by our committees.

COME AND LET OTHER LOCALS HEAR OF YOUR VIEWPOINT.

LET US GET TOGETHER.

DON'T FORGET THE N. E. OHIO UNITY CONFERENCE.

Yours for Unity
F. J. Catkin, Sec'y.
Local Youngstown.

Comrade Sec.—As our old directory is not up to date, will you make a copy of this letter and send it to any branch in your city not included in the 1917 Ohio Socialist Addresses. . . .

The Legions of Truth

By Ed. Shallue.

Slowly but steadily they are coming
  Along the trails of Progress, one by one,
With no music, bugle calls nor drumming,
  Impervious to bayonette, gas or gun;
Flaunting no gaudy, varicolored banners,
  Dressed in no purple, red nor gold,
With no more than Nature's simple manners
  Breaking down the barriers of old.

The advance against vile Wrong is ever slow,
  By Hypocracy and Ignorance outnumbered,
Meeting the mighty, well fed foe
  With the weight of needs and cares encumbered.
A dense barrage of Lies they always face,
  And charge against stenching, gaseous slander,
But in Heaven, Hell nor Earth—there is no place
  Where Truth is not victorious Commander.

Do Penal Institutions Reform

By Ammon A. Hennacy, Political Prisoner, County Jail, Delavare, Ohio.

"The merchant calls it profit
And he winks the other eye:
The banker calls it interest
And he heaves a cheerful sigh:
The lanlord calls it rent
As he tucks it in his bag:
But the honest old burglar
He simply calls it swag."

This is a verse Ammon A. Hennacy found scratched on the wall of his cell.

"It is just if a problem had been set to find the best, the surest means, of depraving the greatest number of people."

From my experience during the last 27 months in Columbus and Atlanta prisons I agree with the above quotation from Tolstoi.

Penal institutions do not reform prisoners because:

The officials are first class politicians; of second class intelligence; with no human sympathy or knowledg of psychology.

Everything is done to deprive the prisoner of his self-respect and initiative.

Through special favors officials encourage prisoners to spy upon their fellows and become "rats" and "stool-pigeons."

"Prison justice" takes the word of a guard or "stool-pigeon" against that of a prisoner every time.

Officials wink at all kinds of sexual degeneracy; oftentimes being perverts themselves.

No attempt is made to classify prisoners according to age, crime, or general character; thus making any penal institution a school for the inexperienced criminal.

Guards are not paid enough to enable a decent, humane and honest man to accept a position as guard.

Prison chaplains are afraid to try to better conditions for fear of losing their jobs.

When released, prisoners are not given decent clothes, or enough money to keep them for more than a day or two; in very few cases are jobs procured for them.

The average prisoner doing time for a minor offense knows of hundreds of cases of bankers, profiteers and politicians who are able to "buy" justice.

But the final test as to whether penal institutions reform is to be found in the of fact that 75 per cent of those who enter jail become confirmed criminals.

So long as there exists the present system of society which breeds poverty and crime no "prison reform" will prevent crime.

WHY?

President Wilson's reception on the Pacific Coast appears not to have been the unmixed ovation that many American newspapers would have their readers believe. Of course he drew large auriences and, with the exception of one meeting in San Francisco, was received with the respect to which his office entitled him. There was, however, a distinct disposition, not in evidence earlier in the trip, to ask questions and demand facts. The demand of San Francisco laboring men for a statement on Ireland was only one instance. A copy of The Seattle Union Record, a spokesman of organized labor in the Northwest, has reached this office, showing that on the day of the President's arrival that newspaper printed the question "Why?" in letters three inches high across four columns of the first page, and followed it with a series of questions, among which were the following:

Why do you not ask the immediate repeal of the espionage law and urge a thorough discussion of the problems confronting America, to the end that we can democratically arrive at proper conclusions?

Why do you not release political prisoners in this country when they are being rapidly released in other countries?

Why is it that under the espionage law working men and women mainly were convicted and not one German spy was prosecuted?

Whey do you preach self-determination in Russia by backing one faction in an internal conflict?

Why is there no demand in the Large of nations pact for a democratization of the kingdoms of Japan, Belgium, Rumania, and other backward countries?

Why is there no provision for a reduction of armaments in the treaty, if the League of Nations is to prevent future wars?

Why do you not fire Burleson' plan for the solution of the railroad problem?

Why do you not fire Burleson?

These questions are not new, but the failure to meet them is rapidly weakening Mr. Wilson's hold on the people.

The Nation.

St. Louis Unity Resolutions

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 22, 1919

National Executive Committee,
Communist Labor Party,
Cleveland, Ohio.
Comrades:

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party of local St. Louis, September, 20 1919, the writer, as secretary, was instructed to communicate with the National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party and the National Executive Committee of the Communist Party, urging the immediate unification of these parties that the rank and file may be unhampered in their struggle to attain economic freedom and to usher in the Communist society of production.

We well realize that the formative period of a Communist movement in America must inevitably encounter friction and division of opinion as to the formulation of methods, tactes and the form of organzaton. We also realize that the exhibited tendencies of "confusionism" as well as of "centrism", is natural, i. e., a movement that passes through a shifting process brings forth misunderstandings. We are firm in our conviction that the destinies of a Communist movement in America mainly depends upon our unwavering, consistent stand in the formulation of policies, methods and tactics within the realm of Marxian Communist principles. However, the experience of our brother Communists of the European countries brings forth the fact that very often we can avoid unnecessary friction when we consider that oftimes comrades who stand firm working for class-conscious Communist unity; whose training and knowledge of the needs of the movement divides them, mainly due to the exhibited tendencies on the part of some well informed Communists who aim to dominate the movement by their capricious and pretentious contentions for leadership, thus exploiting the sentiment of the membership that stands by the class character of Communism retarding the fundamental unity of the movement. The Communist movement of America must labor to free itself from such elements, no matter how well informed the comrades may be who exhibit these tendencies.

The progress of the Communist movement; the unity of the real Communist element can be made possible through the realization that in the main the newly formed Communist and Communist Labor Parties do not differ much. The variation of the platforms and programs of both parties may differ, one or the other may be considered clearer in the formulation and expression of Communist principles, methods, tactics and policies of organization, both parties may still have within its ranks some comrades who are confused or centrists, notwithstanding they stand for a program or platform which would comply with and respond to the demands of American conditions and the principles of Communism.

Viewing the status of facts as we know it we urge the membership of both parties, through its authorize organs, the Executive Committees, to take into consideration the imperative necessity of a unified Communist movement, making the necessary steps conducive to a possible unity between the Communist Labor Party and the Communist Party.

The Communist Labor Party has officially declared:

"Be it resolved, That the Communist Labor Party extends a standing invitation to the Communist Party to meet, on a basis of equality, in a Unity Conference, and

"That we hereby instruct our National officials and committees to accept such invitation from the Communist Party, or any other revolutionary working class organization."

Local St. Louis, Mo., of the Communist Labor Party heartily endorses the foregoing, and urges the rank and file of both the Communist Labor Party and the Communist Party to demand unity upon the basis of equality, and that the Executive Committees of these parties bend their every effort to this end.

Yours for a united Communist movement

MARY N. TICHENOR.

o Church Statements to Steel Workers

Two significant statements embodying totaly opposite viewpoints and divergent counsel to steel workers have been issued by two clergymen of the Catholic church. Workers will do well to give these two statements careful thought and consideration. The Church may become a greater element for human progress, or it may become a weapon for reaction; it is for the workers who are affiliated with it to decide what its stand shall be upon the questions of the day.

The Pittsburgh Statement.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 27.— A bitter excoriation of the leaders of the steel strike and a stern warning to his parishoners that if they follow these leaders they will be cut off from the Catholic faith was delivered today by the Rev. Thomas Devlin, pastor of the Holy Cross church in South Pittsburgh. In Father Devlin's parish there are hundreds of employes of the steel mills, a majority of whom are of feregn birth and Catholic in faith.

"I give warning," said Father Devlin in an open letter, "that if any should follow the leadership of Foster it would be equivalent to endorsing his doctrine that I should regard them as apostates from the Catholic faith, traitors to their country and enemies of authority.

"The American Federation of Labor seems to have fallen into the hands of the Bolsheviki and the reds.

"The kaiser, Hindenburg and Von Tirpitz have nothing on Foster. He is in a class with Lenine, Trotzky and the Bolsheviki."

Statement by Father Kirby.

Rev. Father E. A. Kirby pastor of St. Rose's church Girard, Ohio, in answer to Rev. Father Devlin of the Holy Cross church, South Pittsburgh, who in an open letter to his parishioners condemned their affiliation with the steel strike movement, gave out the following statement:

"The steel strike is a continuation of the struggle of the masses of the common people against autocracy. The world war decided the people's rights to political democracy but the people have yet to win the economic victory.

"There is no doubt that the underlying causes of militarism in Europe are existing in large corporations today, namely repression of popular expression. The strike proves what the world war has proved, that men will not submit to blood and iron policy.

"Petty tyrants in the steel corporation are in self-constituted authority over the working classes. They are real Kaisers and Hindenburgs and hold themselves superior to the government of the people.

"These tyrants cannot play fast and loose with the lives and conditions of men. We are standing today on the threshold of economic revolution, or the bloodless revolution."

(Signed)
"Rev. Father Kirby."

JOIN NOW
The Communist
Proganda League

The first thing every live, class-conscious worker does after joining the Socialist Movement is to Roll up his sleeves—

Spit on his hands —

And—ask for a job that will push the work along.

Such comrades are the ones who DO THINGS, they are the Jimmie Higginses in our movement, the ones upon whom our papers rely for support in getting subs. Who are relied upon in circulating our propaganda, in doing all the thousand and one things necessary to further the education and organization of the workers.

It is for them, for the ones who have proved their faith, and also for thousands that heretofore have not been active in such necessary and useful work that The Communist Propaganda League extends an earnest invitation to join.

Its purpose is:

To organize a Bundle Brigade of hundreds of Locals of thousands of workers,

In order that:

The propaganda of Revolutionary Socialism may be extend into every section of the country

By

Placing weekly in the hands of thousands upon thousands of workers copies of the Ohio Socialist; by getting a larger list of readers—

So that:

The Ohio Socialist may be made into a twice a week paper; that our power for good in our movement may be doubled; that our comrades in prison may be freed the sooner; that our new press may be kept busy every day turning out its message to the workers.

THAT'S THE REASON FOR IT.
AND YOUR PLACE IS IN IT.

Every worker can distribute ten copies a week.

Every worker can afford to spend ten cents a week for Socialism.

Now is the time when workers are reading most. Now is the time to act.

THE BLACK SHEEP

By Long and Lanky.

EDITOR'S NOTE.

Here is, a serial story of to-day written by one of the best known writers and lecturers of the American Socialist Movement. If we should print his name our readers would at once recognize it as one of renown from coast to coast. The author prefers to write this particular story under a non de plume because it is largely a story of his own life and experiences.

As the story develops and the author unfolds to his readers the basic principles of the socialist philosophy and the class struggle as exemplified in his own experiences as a wage-worker, student and teacher, it becomes ever more interesting. In short, it is just such a proletarian story as every socialist will take a keen interest in; a story which no capitalist paper or magazine would dare to publish... Be sure that you miss no chapters of this splendid study of America as it is to-day.

CHARTR 1.

Every day there are born into this world individuals whose brains contain wonderful powers, which may be used for good or evil, according to the conditions under which they develop. Then there are certain individuals who are so organized that no matter what the environment under which they develop may be, they grow up and work out something of definite value to themselves or mankind at large; these are the exceptions we call geniuses. They may be likened unto rare flowers that by the brilliance of their color or their fragrance especially distinguish themselves in a garden of blossoms.

Jack Thruston was one of these. He was unlike any of his fellows. A variation from the true type or as he was known during his childhood "A black sheep."

His mother told us when we questioned her about him that he had been an odd child; unlike other children. He loved to be alone. He seldom spoke and when he did speak it was only to question the older folks. His questions were generally about things that no one could answer. At least no one could answer them in the neighborhood in which he lived. Sometimes he world ask questions like these. "How did the calm shells get in the rocks in the tops of hills." "Were negroes and white men both created in the image of God?" "Does God like the jack rabbit better than the cotton tail?" This remark was caused by his father's explanation that the jack rabbit became white in winter so as better to hide from his enemies. It was an evidence of God's care over the jack rabbit; but as the cotton tail remains grey in the snowy season it was an evidence to the child's mind of Heaven's partiality to the Jack. "Why do all animals (with whom he was acquainted) have just seven bones in their necks. Did God make them all on the same plan because he could think of no other? It was questions such as these that convinced his pious parents that he was in league with the devil. They reasoned that if he were a normal child he would not dare to pry into what they considered divine mysteries. "My poor Jack" his mother would say: "I do not understand why he is different from my other children, but he is."

When we pressed her for further particulars regarding his boyhood, she recited an amazing list of incidents that to her mind proved the doctrine of total depravity, but which to us simply proved that the path of genius is not strewn with roses. The boy's ideas seemed to have been at all times in conflict with their accepted standard of right and wrong, as well as with the dictates of their accepted creed. The mother concluded her rehearsel of the boys mental irregularities with the to her awful information, that at the age of eleven he had been brot home by one of their neighbors who had found him in a country grave yard exhuming a corpse. This of course was considered terrible and it was the consensus of learned opinion in the neighborhood that the boy should be sent to the reform school. This however was not carried out.

I asked the mother what in her opinion urged the boy to do so strange a deed to which she replied. "He just has an ungovernable curiosity to find out now human inards are fixed" He had a passion for first hand information on all things animate and inanimate. He spared no effort in his quest for knowledge. She told us that somehow he would never believe what he was told, he wanted to find out. He doubted everything, even the preacher.

It was evident from what his mother told us that, even as a child he had been a psychological anomaly that refused to conform to the mental environment in which he was born. Hence, he was compelled either to rise above it or be crushed by it.

Leaving out of consideration his mental peculiarities we were told that as child he had been a quiet, dreamy, fair haired urchin with large unkempt head and clear blue eyes; physically he had been well and strong but not excessively active. They had called him "The little old man." In school he had been the favorite of the teacher; he gave them but little trouble. He had but one ugly phrase in his apparently slight vocabulary, and that was, "Prove it." This did not often annoy the school ma-ma but it drove the parson nearly to distraction, with the result that the dominie developed a full sized grudge against this innate question mark. "The boy is stupid" the preacher would exclaim. "He is constitutionally incapable of grasping the most self evident religious truths.

To illustrate: when the parson told the class that, in the beginning, God had made heaven and eorth, the children intrusted to his guidance generally took it for granted. Not so with Jack. He was almost sure to ask a question somewhat like this: "What time was it twenty minutes before time began, or as it sometimes happened that the good man maintained that God had created all things out of nothing the boy would ask "Where did God get the nothing with which to make himself." When it was explained that God is a spirit he would look as tho he comprehended the proposition, yet he would ask: "Are spirit and nothing the same thing then?"

It was a custom of the people that adhered to the creed under which Jack was rasised to read a chapter of the scripture at each meal with the result that the children at an early age had a general knowledge of the Bible. Then they were being drilled on Sunday and at least once during the week in the catechism. This explains the fact that as a child he could refer to different parts of the scripture with apparent ease. In this he was not unique. Every child of average intelligence, born and raised in Westfield, North Dakota did this as a matter of second nature. They believed what they were taught. In that they different from JACK and he from them. They believed as a matter of course. Jack wanted to believe as a matter of logic; but logic was a scarce article in Westfield. They insisted on a literal interpretation; and unqualified acceptance; and unconditional surrender of reason to the church. Jack could not surrender to anything that he did not understand. He wanted to be convinced of truth rather than convicted of sin. It was this attitude of mind so unusual in a child that fastened upon him the appelation of the "Black Sheep."

We may get a better understanding of how the boy's mental attitude diverged from that of the people among whom he lived by reciting some of the mental conflicts in which he became entangled. Not that we wish to describe him as mentally bellicose or argumentative; that would not be true. The truth is he seldom argued. There is only one word that will adequately describe him, perhaps two, inquisitive and observing. It was in the field of observation that his genius was most apparent.

It was during a catechism class that the children were told that the good Lord had made all things, and that he saw, that it was good. Jack innocently inquired, if when God looked upon his work and pronounced it good, if the tiger was in sight? When he was told that the tiger was good in his place; that God had made him for a special purpose, he asked: "If the tiger was good, why did God drown them all but two, simply because the people didn't do right?" Thus it was that the parson concluded that the boy was unable to perceive the spiritual significance of the scriptures and advised him to stay at home. The truth was that the parson being unable to satisfactorily answer the boy's questions, noticed the effect such questions had on the class as a whole.

One Sunday morning he listened with wrapped attention to a sermon on the crucifixion of Christ. The discourse impressed him deeply. At home that afternoon he sat at the window, his chin pillowed in his hands, his eyes fixed upon great masses of thunderclouds that lay like huge mountains of living silver on the eastern horizon. Starting as it suddenly awakened from a dream he asked his mother—"Did God really make the world?"

"Why certainly, who else would?"

"Made the butterflies, the fireflies, the flowers, the clouds, the stars, everything?"

"Yes God made everything."

"Made us too, didn't he?"

"Of course."

"Did he make us good?"

"Certainly!" Now hush up and don't bother me; don't you see there will be a crowd here for dinner?"

This quieted the little questioner for a few moments. Then he broke out again "Mamma — if God made us good, and he made everything, then what made us bad?"

"The devil."

"Is the Devil stronger than God?"

"No, of course not."

"Mamma, if the Devil made us bad, why did not God drown us all in the flood and make some new people out of nothing, like he did at first?"

"Will you shut up." This with menacing gesture.

Again a few moments silence. But the statements of the morning sermon were too strong within the boy's brain to keep it. Again he asked —

"Was Noah a good man?"

"Yes, he was the only good man in the world at that time."

"Then why did he get drunk when he came out of the ark?"

"O God knows" his mother shouted in complete despair.

"Does God know everything?"

"Certainly."

"He knew that if he saved Noah, Jesus would have to die?"

"That was the Devil's work. Now will you be quiet—I'll thrash you if I hear another yip."

Slowly he turned his gaze upon the clouds as if to inquire from them the secrets which he longed to know. Then he ventured once more—

"Mamma, who made the Devil?"

"God, I suppose."

"And the Devil caused us to die, and to hate one another, and to lie, and to kill Jesus, and to steal?"

"Yes, didn't the domine tell you so this morning?"

"Why did God make the Devil?"

At this point silence was inforced by a liberal application of the ointment of correction.

It was his passion for logic and truth that made him a mark of attack at home, at Sunday school and in the catechism class. His community was ultra-orthodox and orthodoxy fears questions and hates questioners. It is questioning the old that gives birth to the new, even tho the questioner be but a child. Questioning can never destroy the truth, but under its action the false cannot endure. Jack did not ask questions in order to destroy the old and the established, in fact he was not aware that the things he was being taught were old and established. His brain processes demanded sequence and consectivity, and to attain this consectivity he asked questions which shook the very foundation of ideas which his parents and people held as sacred and un-alterable.

Seizing The Capitalist State

"The most important means of capturing state power for the workers is the action of the masses, proceeding from the place where the workers are gathered together—in the shops and factories. The use of the political machinery of the capitalist state for this purpose is only secondary."

—Paragraph 6 of Party and Labor Program of the Communist Labor Party.

The entire hope of labor lies in the rank and file movement. Officials and leaders have a tendency to grow conservative and by the power which officialdom gives them to build up a machine for the perpetuation of conservatism in the labor movement.

The slogan of the Communist Labor Party is "ALL POWER TO THE WORKERS." But the acquirement of power by the rank and file can arise only thru action by the rank and file. An active, agressive and vigilant rank and file can gather and hold the power necessary for its emancipation and the rebuilding of civilization upon the lines of Communist Socialism.

The Communist Labor Party is a party of ACTION. Not only of action in theory but in fact. The ringing note thruout its platform and program is a call to action by the masses. The development of a rank and file movement has progressed in spite of and against the counsel of the officialdom of labor unions. It has culminated in this country and in Canada in the organization of Shop Committee and Shop Stewards movements. These are organizations of workers on the job in the places where the evidence of the indenty of the interests of the workers is indisputible.

The advocacy of Industrial Unionism by the Communist Labor Party is based upon the fact that the workers, in their political attempts to capture the capitalist state find themselves unable to use the machinery of the capitalist state for their purpose, and must therefore create a new machinery whereby to attain their end.

Every social system develops the necessary political machinery for its own perpetuation. This machinery consequently can not serve the interests of the class which is seeking the overthrow of that system for the purpose of erecting another in its stead. It is forced to create its own machinery as a vehicle with which to acquire political power.

The ballot when used by labor for its own purposes has not proved effective as a means of gaining the ends sought. Numerous instances might be recalled wherein the expressed wish of majorities representing labor had been rendered inocuous by the courts of capitalism. Victories for labor at the ballot box have many times proved to be crushing defeats. Capitalism will not live according to its own laws but at any moment when by some fortuitous circumstances, labor threatens the power of capital, recourse is taken to "direct action", the police are called upon and the whole armed power of the capitalist state is set in motion against the workers.

Yet every such defeat teaches a tremendous lesson. The hollownes of copitalist justice and fairplay are then seen it in their true light. The educational and propaganda value of such a phenomena of the capitalist state is of great value and should be used as such. Such ballot box victories as are won by labor give unparralled opportunities for agitation and propaganda, but their actual and specific value as a means of grasping the capitalist state and making it function as a workingclass industrial democracy exists only in imagination.

The Communst Labor Party is a party of action which functions not every two or four years upon election day, but every day in the year stands pledged to the use of every resource at its command for the economic organization of the workers in revolutionary industrial unions. It will support morally, financially and with its press every activity of the rank and file of labor toward this end.

To the workers we say, join an industrial union. Form a Shop Committee in the place where you work for the purpose of elevating the conditions of employment, of handling greviances, of teaching mass action; of concentrating the that of the workers upon industrial democracy in the shops and replacing craft consciousness with class-consciosuness.

Form a Shop Committee with the slogan "ALL POWER TO THE WORKERS."

Paying The Cost.

Not all the costs of the nation's participation in the world war were paid when you settled for your liberty bonds; not all its costs are included in taxes and high prices of beans and flour and bacon and shoes.

High as was the cost in lives of the nation's best young manhood, a still higher cost was paid in the epidemic of Spanish Influenza that followed the cessation of hostilities. That the epidemic was a by-product of the war, arising from mal-nutrition, bad housing, devitalization of the people as a result of war conditions, is the general opinion of investigators.

During the last year conditions have not improved. Rents have gone higher, building has nowhere come up to the requirements, as a result the evils of bad housing are still extant. The essential foods are as dear if not dearer than a year ago. The result is a further devitalization of the poorer classes. The high prices of shoes and woolens create an inviting condition for pneumonia. Again it is the worker who pays. Always he pays the cost of war. He paid the death toll on the battle field. He paid the economic cost. His labor produced all that was destroyed, all that was wasted. He is paying the cost in evil living conditions which have already reaped a tremendous harvest of death.

After a year's experience in the battle with Spanish Influenza, physicians are sounding the alarm of the presence of the dread ravage in our midst. In the city of Cleveland, O., the health officials offer figures that prove how justified are these warnings. A few days ago the number of cases of influenze in the city numbered 10 campared to only 1 of the same date of a year ago. These cases, the authorities submitted, were almost entirely in the poorer sections of the city, where bad housing, malnutrition and evil living conditions were most general. So we have the evidence of who is paying the cost, Could the workers have forseen how the cost would be paid perhaps—the war would not have begun. Perhaps, but not likely. It is only when an accumulation of misery beyond the strength of man to bear crushes him to the very dust that the arises and destroys the causes of his misery. Man acts, not by reason but thru economic motives.

AKRON WORKERS DEFENSE LEAGUE PICNICS

The International Labor picnic given on Sept. 1st by the Workers Defense League of Akron, O., was a splendid success both socially and financially.

Abner E. Woodruff of Chicago was the speaker of the day. Fellow worker Woodruff gave an excellent talk on Industrial unionism and his message will remain a permanent lesson in the minds of his audience, the other speakers were James B. O'Brien, Secretary-Treasurer of the league, and Fellow worker Evjikows of the Union of Russian Workers, Detroit, Mich. Fellow worker Evjikows spoke in the Russian language and made a strong appeal to the workers.

Peo Monoldi presided as chairman. Singing, dancing and racing were the other attractions of the day. It is the intention of the league to hold an annual outing on September 1st.

The league cleared about $250.00 on the picnic.

The Constitution, Courts and Espionage Act

After serving 3 months of an 18 months sentence for free speech, I have been pardoned on account of broken health. The conditions of my incarceration were nothing like as bad as those Debs endures. I was not locked in a cell 14 hours a day, nor was I required to do any but the lightest out door work.

"Congress shall pass no law abridging freedom of speech." All the legal lights of the Supreme Court have declared the Espionage Act Constitutional; that is they have solemnly stated that the Espionage Act has not abridged freedom of speech! The Espionage Act has sent Debs to jail for free speech, and the Espionage Act has suppressed a large part of the Socialist press, yet these presumably sane members of the Supreme Court say that the Espionage Act has not abridged freedom of speech or of the press. Is it any wonder that American Courts are coming into contempt ever to the confines of Siberia!

As I understand it the Courts in Debs' case gave no explanation of how they arrived at the conclusion that the Espionage Act has not abridged freedom of speech. No wonder the courts avoid giving any explanation of such a palpably false opinion. Of course the Espionage Act has abridged freedom of speech and of the press.

The Courts in my case showed the same desire to avoid any argument as to our rights to free speech under the Constitution. When my lawyer appealed to the jury to protect my constitutional right of free speech, the judge made it a point to tell the jury that there was no question but what Congress had the right to pass the Espionage Act. But the judge carefully avoided informing the jury by what legal quibbling the Courts have arrived at such an autocratic decision. On my appeal to the Circuit Court also, they declined to answer my lawyer's argument that my freedom of speech was being abridged in violation of the Constitution. All the statement we could get from the Court was that the right of Congress to make such laws was "too well established" to need any argument or explanation.

The simple fact is that when the Supreme Court, or any other branch of our government, wants to abridge free speech they do so without regard to laws or Constitutions. Debs has been imprisoned in violation of law. To set him and other free speech victims free would be simply to restore "low and order" which our government has ruthlessly trodden under foot. A government which breaks the law cannot expect to be respected. In condemning Debs to a living death, the Wilson administration has brutally broken the Constitution, the supreme law of the land. Let the workers restore "law and order" with all haste.

Perley Doe.

THE POWER OF DEBS
(D. A. Hastings).

History is repeating itself. Eugene Debs in prison is a greater menace to capitalism than he would be out. Out enjoing his freedom he used his wonderful powers of persuasion and eloquence to stay the anarchistic forces within society, pleading for organization and education. Inside his majestic voice is stilled and anarchy impends. The powers of repression will learn when it is too late. Nero just fiddled when Rome illuminated the heavens with the fires of destruction. Somebody is doing a lot of fiddling in this country just now when it would be best to call the fire department. Stupidity occupies all of the front seats. Will it prevail? Unless it speedely awakens from its slumbers, H—ll will break loose and there will be nobody to control it.

Ohio Locals and Members Attention

Article 1, Section 1 of the newly adopted state constitution reads as follows: "The name of this organization shall be the Socialist Party of Ohio and IT SHALL BE AFFILIATED WITH THAT SECTION of the Socialist Party of the United States, WHICH ENDORSES THE LEFT WING PROGRAM."

Your delegates went to Chicago to attend the Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party. That part of the Socialist Party which endorsed the Left Wing program, as represented by delegates, 72 in number, were thrown out of the convention hall by the Chicago police in direct command of Adolph Germer. These Left Wing delgates then called the LEGAL Socialist Party convention to order and subsequently adopted the name Communist Labor Party, for that section of the Socialist Party which endorsed the Left Wing program.

The membership in Ohio has spoken. By referendum vote it decided that the party in this state shall be affiliated with THAT SECTION of the Socialist Party of the United Stateswhich endorses the Left Wing program. That section of the Socialist Party nationally is now known as the Communist Labor Party, and the party in this state is therefore affiliated with the Communist Labor Party.

A few branches and members may not desire to abide by this decision of the party membership of Ohio. These members have the right, of course, to affiliate with the Socialist Party or any other organization they please. But any local or branch which affiliates with another organization by that act secedes from the state organization, and having seceded, can not continue to act as a unit of the party in Ohio.

Fraternally,

A. WAGENKNECHT, State Secretary.

Majority Report of Delegates to the National Emergency Convention

Elected From the 20, 21, 22 District.

The fight for Left Wing principles in the Socialist Party eventually culminated in a National Left Wing Conference, held in New York City June 21 to 24, which was attended by delegates from all parts of the United States. Bilan, Zitt, Brahtin and Ruthenberg attended this convention as delegates from Local Cuyahoga County.

At this National Left Wing Conference the following motion was passed. Read it carefully.—"That the national council of the National Left Wing Conference call a conference in Chicago September 1st of all revolutionary elements willing to unite with a revolutionized Socialist Party or with a Communist Party that may be organized by Left Wing delegates seceding from the convention of the Socialist Party to be held August 30th.

This motion constitutes a CLEAR MANDATE to the delegates seceding from the Socialist Party convention TO ORGANIZE the Communist Party. This motion also constitutes an order to the National Council to call a conference of ALL REVOLUTIONARY ELEMENTS on September 1st, and to have these elements JOIN WITH THE NEW PARTY which the seceding delegat from the Socialist Party convention were to organize.

The Left Wing delegates seceding from the Socialist Party convention OBEYED these instructions. The Left Wing delegates who were not admitted to the Socialist Party convention also obeyed there instructions The National Council DISOBEYED these instructions for it failed to call a conference of all revolutionary elements to meet in Chicago on Sept. 1st, nor did it attempt to bring the revolutionary elements meeting in Chicago to the convention held by the seceding Socialist Party delegation.

Shortly after the National Left Wing Conference the newly elected National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party met. It emphasized the action taken by the National Left Wing Conference, called upon all Left Wing delegates to attend the Socialist Party convention and instructed its executive secretary to rent a hall in Chicago in which the seceding Socialist Party convention delegates could meet, or in which the legal Emergency Convention could meet.

The Socialist Party convention convened Left Wing delegates were not admitted to the convention hall. Many others seceded. These delegates then met as the legal convention of the Socialist Party and organized the Communist Labor Party. Due to the failure of the National Council to call a conference of revolutionary elements to meet in Chicago on September 1st, the Communist Labor Party called for unity of all revolutionary elements then then meeting in Chicago. We were unable to bring these elements together.

The majority of Ohio delegates OBEYED their instruction to the letter. Only Ruthenberg violated these instructions. Instead of assisting the seceding delegates in organizma a communist party as was agreed at the National Left Wing Conference, he joined the deserters, the bolting minority group which left the National Left Wing Conference to form a dual communist party, the convention for which was called by that curious combination, the Russian Federation—Michigan group. Nothing Ruthenberg or any of his adherants can say in support of their traitorous acts can obliterate the clear intent of the motion as passed by the National Left Wing Conference, above quoted.

The trouble lies with a few leaders in the Left Wing movement who seem to think that all they need do is to give orders and we will turn somersaults. These leaders jump from one position to another week after week. We are tired of keeping tab upon their twists and turns. The Communist Labor Party is not a party based upon conflicting and dictatorial edicts from leaders but upon a clear understanding and clear action by the rank and file. To the Communist Labor Party we will give our loyal support from this on

Emerson on Tyranny

"The martyr cannot be dishonored. Eevery lash inflicted is a tongue of fame; every prison a more illustrious abode; every burned book enlightens the world; every suppressed word reverberates thru the earth from side to side. The minds of men are at last aroused; reason looks out and justifies her own, and malice finds all her work vain. It is the whipper who is whipped, and the tyrant who is undone."

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

THE DEATH OF A RED REGIMENT

The strongly anti-Bolshevist Jewish daily Der Tag, in its issue of September 7, publishes a letter from its Copenhagen correspondent, Mr. N. Shiffrin, in which the latter reports his interview with the editor of the mlitary paper of the Russian counter-revolutionary Northen army, who came to Copenhagen from the front. The editor began with stories about Red "atrocities," but he admitted that all these stories were based on what he had heard from others and not on his own observations. The correspondent then asked him to relate his personal experience and observations at the front. This request was met at first with suprise and suspicion: "But I could only see how we treated the Reds!" Mr. Shiffrin was, nevertheless, interested in the actual experience of the editor, and the latter's reluctance was overcome by the correspondent's introductory card from an anti-Bolshevist friend of the editor. Mr. Shiffrin assures the readers that he quotes the gruesome story that followed literally, word by word, as it was told by the editor.

"As you know, the Bolsheviki changed the names of the old regiments. The Moscow troops have on their shoulder-straps the initials of the martyr Karl Liebknecht. We captured one of the Karl Liebknecht regiments, and they were tried. The trial at the White front is brief: every soldier is examined, and if he admits that he is communist he is immediately sentenced to death by hanging or shooting (we could not be better than the Reds!) And the Reds are well aware of this.

"Lieutenant K. approached the regiment and addressed them in a stern and cold manner: "Those of you who are true Communists, show yourselves to be courageous and step forward."

"A painfully oppressive interval.... The captives know what this means. And... slowly, in closed ranks, over half of the regiment steps forward.

"I had never before had the opportunity to witness the ceremony of passing such a death sentence. O, no! I forgot. I saw a captured Communist some time before this. He was granted the privilege to be shot in the back. With his back toward the rifles, he was shot and fell into the high growing grass.

"One more episode is impressed upon my mind: the death of General Nikolayev, one of the army commandants of Lew Davidovich Trotsky (the editor meaningly emphasizes the name Lev Davidovich). He was captured and confessed that he was a Communist. He was sentenced to hang himself. We prepared gallows for him at Yamburg, near the Karl Marx statue (a copy of the Moscow statue). Nikolayev was forced to end his life himself."

The conversation changed into a general discussion. The editor was carried away by the conversation and forgot the unfinished story about the captured regiment. I had to remind him.

"Well, then, about the regiment," continued the editor. "They were sentenced to be shot. But before being shot they had to dig their own graves.

"The execution of Communists usually takes place during sunset, on a field near a church. It is twilight. The air is full of the odor of fragrant northern flowers. The green dome of the village church is seen, surrounded by sleepy poplars, whose leaves are always restless in the daytime. But in the twilight, when there is not the slightest breeze, the poplars seem sorrowful, and stand motionless around the wooden crosses.

"A large number of onlookers have assembled on the field; peasants, women, children, soldiers. They stand close together, as sheep during a storm. The condemned are first of all ordered to take off their clothes. (The front is poor, and their uniforms are badly needed. They are used by the White soldiers. In order to save the clothes from getting soiled with blood or torn by bullets, the Communists are ordered to undress before they are shot.)

"Slowly the condemned take off their shirts, and tying their clothes together into a bundle, they put them aside. It is very queer, one might think that they were getting ready to bathe!

"They stand there in the field, freezing, and in the moonlight their skin appears extremely white, almost transparent Each of them is given a pick-axe, and they begin digging large, common graves.

"I remember the first thought that came to my mind: it must be painful to press the cold iron of the pickaxe with one's naked feet. It must cut into flesh.

"It took some time before the Communists had dug out their own graves. After digging for a quarter of an hour the depth of only half a meter was reached.

"My fingers accidentally touch my suit. I feel that my clothes are thoroughly wet from the dew which is falling like a mild drizzle. The grass is covered with heavy drops. The field looks like a carpet of very small pansies with the colors of the pupil of the human eye. There is a tear in every eye. And the naked Communists keep on digging. And I was curious: how does the dew affect them?

"After half an hour had passed Lieutenant K. ordered his soldiers to help dig the graves. He is very nervous and seems to be pained. The digging, the waiting, the whole atmosphere is so painful! The soldiers take their places side by side with the condemned. It is getting darker and darker. Gradually it gets harder to distinguish the naked from the dressed, there is a chaos of restlessly moving limbs. Lieutenant K. and myself approach nearer to them. Only now am I enabled to observe them individually. Here are three or four digging a common grave. I can see only their shoulders, their bodies are hidden in the ditch.

"At last the graves have already the necessary depth. The condemned sigh from weariness. Many of them throw themselves on the soft, wet ground, and rest. It is their last repose. Only now I notice that many of them have their feet bandaged. They have already been wounded in the struggle.

"Nervously and incoherently, as if he were stuttering Lieutenant K. asks them to state their last wish. Two take thin rings off their fingers and give them to the Lieutenant. He takes their addresses. Both of them are from Petrograd. One of them has a family residing on the Aptekarsky Island, the other leaves a wife, residing on Gorokhovaya. The others have no wishes to make, although every one of them has a home, a wife, children, relatives. They feel as if they had been dead long ago. I cannot explain otherwise their absolute calmness and indifference, a typically Russian indifference.

"I ask one of them what made a Communist of you? In a peculiarly cold and stiff manner he replies: 'The accursed life! The world needs happiness!'

"The soldiers are holding their rifles, ready to shoot. The naked communists take their positions close to one another, forming a white wall in the moonlight.... A command is heard, followed by a flash and the sound of shooting...... The Communists are still standing erect.

"A second volley is heard. The bullets strike some in their hearts. Thick blood steams leap into space. But most are only slightly wounded. And in the fraction of a second, before the soldiers shoot again. I hear deep sickly sighs. Volleys follow one after another. They become less and less. Now those who are still alive cry out: 'Hey, there, take better aim!' Some point to their heart: aim here.... And blood is flowing.

"Finally, all are dead. Some are dying near the edges of the graves, the others have already fallen into the ditches. It is all over. Nothing disturbs the quiet."

The Steel Workers

Have the steel workers learned their lesson? It has been a slow one, and a bitter one, but its moral is plain.

Nearly thirty years ago, the steel workers were amoung the best organized in the United States. After years of struggle they had won wages and working conditions that were the envy of the labor world. Then came the crushing defeat at Homestead; the loss of union prestige, and the transformation of the steel industry into one of the great non-union trades of which there have been so many in the United States. Hours were lengthened, wages were reduced; the conditions of labor became almost intolerable. There was a line always waiting at the gate, and the men suspected of "unionism" found his place filled by another. A remnant among the highly skilled men retained their union, but the great mass of semi-skilled and unskilled workers employed in the steel mills—most of them of foreign birth—received little or no attention. They were as the scum of the earth.

Labor scarcity during the war wrought the crisis. High prices forced the issue. Today hundreds of thousands of the steel workers are organizing to demand their share of the bounties of life. Have they learned their lesson?

Through the bitter years that followed 1892 the steel industry was one of the most highly protected industries in the country. In 1909 the Pittsburgh Survey revealed the intolerable conditions surrounding the lives of the steel workers in Pittsburg and the neighboring towns. The tariff did not asve them.

During the past ten years a grist of accident, compensation, and insurance laws have been ground out in the legislative halls of the different states. These laws have not made the position of the steel workers any more endurable.

The workers and the workers alone, can save themselves. They can save themselves through organization. They can save themselves through an organization that embraces all of the men and women employed in the steel industry. They can save themselves by controlling and directing the shops in which they are employed. There is no other way. Have the steel workers learned the lesson?

They Call it Peace

Strikers and lockouts to the number of 3.285 occured in the United States during 1918. The Armistice was signed in November. For December the numbers of strikes and lockouts was 247.

The year before the United States entered the war, 1916, there were 3.786 strikes and lockouts. The first year of the war, 1917, there were 4.359. The second year, 1918, the number was lower than in either of the two preceding years. Nevertheless, with a record of 250 strikes and lockouts per month—ten for every working day—it is hardly fair to use the term "Peace" in describing industrial relations. The industrial war—the unending war between exploiters and exploited—was on before the United States entered the great world conflict. It remained active during the participation of this country in the European struggle and it continues now that the Armistice is signed and international peace is about to be proclaimed.

The masters of American life may call it peace but the standing armies of private guards, police, constables and soldiers belie thir words. It is war—brutal, ruthless, recentless; war on women and babies: war of attrition by starvation, destructive, savage war—brutal, ruthless, relentless; war as one human being is able to say to another, "You work and toil and earn bread and I'll eat it."

Boston

Recent investigations by the United States Department of Labor have as their object the determination of a living wage for a family. The reports from Boston covering 160 families with incomes between $1.200 and $1.500 dollars show that the average amount spent for food is $578.73 or a little over $10 a week. For clothing these families spend on an average of $196.44. The annual expenditure for rent was $180.24. Fuel and light counted for $73.96; furniture and furnishings for $41.16; and all other expenses, namely: those for health, recreation, insurance, saving, education, ect., $223.52. One hudred of these families had a balance at the end of the year. The balance averaged $80.64.

These families were ordinary families. They averaged five persons which is the normal American family. They lived on the veriest minimum that makes decency possible. This living cost them practically their entire income.

Suppose that the hundred families with an average surplus of $80 always had an equally good year. Suppose they saved this $80 every 12 months. At the end of 25 years (without reckoning interests) each family would have saved in the neighborhood of $2,000. Nothing could more effectively portray the pitiable character of the wages paid to American working people than a contrast between these figures and the figures showing the incomes and expenditures of the American property owners who are living luxuriously without labor on the work performed by their fellow men.

The Old Order and the New

Tolstoy, in one of his essays, remarks that the members of the leisure class, after taking upon themselves the responsibility of educating the workers proceed to "discuss, and teach and amuse one another, and have entirely forgotten them," (the workers.)

That was the situation in the old world. It is very different in the new.

The present ruling class never forgets. It has a thousand ears, ten thousand eyes, and a million voices with which it listens, watches and speaks continually to the people. Sunday supplements, movies, popular magazines, and spellbinders from pulpit and rostrum preach in season and out of season.

"Let well enough alone." "Be satisfied with things as they are."

"You are better off here than the people in any other country."

"Obey your masters."

"Beware of the perils that await those who leap into the unknown."

The modern master class never forgets. It has its paid agents who speak continually to the people reminding them of the security of their position and of the glory and distinction that have accrued to those before them.

Shall Prison be Debs' Tomb?

Debs is being slowly tortured to death at Atlanta. His health is giving way under the life destroying prison existence. Unless the workers act quickly, there will be no reason to act, for there will be but a memory of our great comrade left us.

But while Debs breaks under prison rules, he is fighting for the principle upon which our emancipation must be secured. Debs has said "altogether or none". And upon that principle we can win. Upon that principle we can and must win freedom for all political prisoners.

Every wage worker is urged to join in this fight for freedom. Take up the case of Debs in your union meetings.

Talk of it to EVERY ONE. PREPARE FOR SUCH ACTION AS A UNITED WORKING CLASS CAN AND WILL TAKE, ONCE IT UNDERSTANDS ITS MISSION.

But as years rolled by the fair haired questioning child grew up into a robust youth whose physical resources were as ample as his mental pecularities, whose mind shown like a ruby on a field of black velvet. Whose life would have been beautful to the eyes of civilized man but which hurt the atrophied sight of the spiritual cave dwellers among whom he lived. They accused him of being an atheist. He was not. They, being ignorant of the power that was within him for good forced him at the age of seventeen to leave the community in which he was raised and to make his way alone in the world.

Notice!

For months we have been selling the Ohio Socialist in bundles at a financial loss. While this policy was justified in the past, present conditions will not so justify it. Recent increases in the cost of getting out the paper caused by higher printer's wages, higher prices of paper and the scarcity of newspaper makes a raise in bundle rates necessary. The price in future will be one cent per copy in any quantities.

We trust this increased price will not influence comrades to cut off their bundle orders. Rather, it should spur every comrade on to greater activity in introducing The Ohio Socialist to all workers.

and asked me what my purpose was. I explained to him the general indignation regarding the abuse of the prisoners, whereupon he asked me my opinion of his methods. I told him frankly that his actions did not square with his religious professions I said that he was cruel to the men, that he lacked all sense of justice and fair play, and that I thought (as well as the majority of the prisoners) that he was a hypocrite. For this I was put on bread and water in the hole, a dark and filthy cell hardly big enough to stretch out in. After my time in the hole had expired, I was sentenced to solitary confinement for the rest of my time. I spent the last seven and a half months there.

Warden Is Humane.

"The federal prison would profit a great deal both in discipline and morale by the immediate discharge of Deputy Warden Girardeau. Warden Fred G. Zerbst is a man far above the deputy in every sense. He is a man of modern ideals and of much experience in handling prison inmates. He believes in the more humane methods of prison management, as against the deputy's system of brutal repression. Unfortunately, the warden is almost entirely, occupied with the outside affairs of the prison, so that the inside management is practically all in the hands of the deputy. There is considerable friction between the two, with deplorable results to the prisoners. Very frequently the best intentions of the warden are nuliified by the manner of their application at the hands of the deputy.

"It is high time that the public got a look into the inside workings of our penal institutions. The amount of brutality practiced in them as a matter of daily routine is almost unbelievable. When will people realize that the criminal is a man more sinned against than sinning, a victim of our unjust social and economic arrangement. But after all prisoners and their methods are reflexes of the conditions in the world outside. With so much injustice, strife and brutality in the world at large, it is no wonder that prison life mirrors the same spirit. When we become civilized enough to abolish human slaughter in the larger prison called society, when we reorganize life on the basis of human brotherhood and co-operation, we will have no use for prisons."

form upon which they stand.

Secondly, it is suggested that the boycott of the present elections will clearly emphasize the class character and promote our revolutionary purposes." What is the political situation, which will promote the revolutionary porposes of the Communist Party by boycotting only the present elections? They are considering the initiated mass strikes by the workers as the cardinal motive for boycotting the present elections. Are these mass strikes political in aim; are they creating at the present, with those mass strikes, any superior weapon for the propaganda and agitation in the Municipal campaigns? Or does the imposibility of using the name create any unusual political situation?

The Communist editors are pointing out to us that the bolsheviks in 1906 boycotted elections to the second duma, and to be a true Bolshevik, we have to use similar tactics. To use them they want to prove to us that we have at the present time similar conditions, as those that prevailed at 1906 in Russia.

Under what conditions did the Bolsheviki boycott the Duma elections in 1906? Do the Communists tell us that? And are similar conditions in existance here, now?

The Bolsheviki in 1906 boycotted the elections to the second Duma under the impression that the revolutionary tide was not over, and that Russia was still in permanent process of revolution. For these reasons, to participate in elections for the Duma, would be to create illusions in the masses against the revolution and for the parliament. This was a historical situation—a tactical problem with two fundamental differences in the political situation of Russia, in 1906.

Regardless of what we say about the Mensheviks generally, we have to admit that they conceived the political situation at that particular time. The revolutionary tide was broken by the stronger forces of reaction and there could not be created any illusions about the participation in elections of the Duma, because there were left no other way for propaganda among the masses except the tribune of the duma. At the elections of the third Duma the Bolsheviks admitted that they overcalculated the political situation at that time and participated in the elections. The stand made for boycotting the present elections by your National Secretary C. E. Ruthenberg in Cleveland by introducing a resolution to that effect was not made on a stand of principal, but was purely opportunistic. His main argument was, that as we were thrown out when elected, and as nomination petitions were not filed, for that reason we should boycott the elections. The same stand was taken by one republican candidate whose petitions were not filed by the board of elections. That gentleman must be a bolshevik too!

Now, let us see the main accusation from the "Communist" against us. "To participate in all elections for all offices of the capitalist state is to rob Communistic parliamentary action of its class and revolutionary significance."

This argument is kind of a belated one from the old European discussion about "ministerialism". In the times when the Second International strongly believed in constructive work in parliamentary bodies we had to decide how far we shall go not to be absorbed by the bourgeois parties. But in the present epoch of capitalist imperialism where we have to cast aside all dreams of any constructive work in the parliaments or through the Capitalist state institutions for the benefit of the workers, we are using parliamentary elections "to show up capitalist democracy, educating the workers to a realisation of their class position, and of demonstrating the necessity of the overthrow of the capitalist system." There can be no difference how far we participate in elections, but there can be a great question on what platform we participate. If elected, our duty will be, not to assume the responsibility for the capitalist state, but against it. We know that the governing power does not reside in the hands of regularly elected officials, but in fact it rests in the hands of the capitalist class. We know if we are elected on our platform we may be kicked out as soon as elected. This way we will be able to demonstrate to the working class the necessity of destroying the capitalist state machinery as useless for the transformation to Communism. When the revolutionary situation arives we will not hesitate to use the boycott as a tactical means if it will prove a necessity.

This is not a question of fundamental principles comrades of the "Communist"; it is not even a question of tactics at the present time, it is an artificial, unfortunate creation of arguments to have an excuse to call the C. L. P. non-Communist. It is easier to call names then to prove a case.

To prove that the same position as the C. L. P. is taking, is taken by some comrades of the C. P. in regards to election of executive officers we want to mention the position C. E. Ruthenberg, who stated publicly in Cleveland after the Chicago convention, that he still holds that mayors, governors and presidents ought be nominated and elected but being in obedience to the majority will he is for the time not pushing his views to the foreground.

There can be no stumbling block created for unity on this specific issue, becaues there is no fundamental Communist principle involved.

Sharts' Report

and treats me personally with courtesy and kindness. It is evident his mind has been poisoned against these men from some source.

And as I gather in the facts I begin to see what that source is.

Here is the story; it is gathered chiefly from the minute book of the Blairmont Local of the United Mine Workers. I wish to God I could get this story to every United Mine Worker and to every labor union men! For these poor devils need support and funds, and they need them badly. I have just returned from Adena, the scene of the events.

In July, this year, Steve Bogo, who had been elected check weighman by his local, at the two mines of the company concerned, the Short Creek Mines, reported that the pan where the weighing was done at the tipple was so constructed that when the pit car of coal was weighed, the pan got the weight of only part, the remainder being choked up in the slide. Nevertheless when the pan was removed, of course the whole carload passed thru the chute. He and a committee tested some 600 carloads and reported a loss of from 100 lbs to 1100 lbs. on each pit car.

This report coming before the U. M. W. local at a special meeting, the subdistrict officials were at once notified and the miners decided to demand a platform scale that would weigh the pit cars without dumping. The subdistrict officials sent back word they would investigate later, and meantime the miners were to continue at work. The report from the subdistrict officials was not made until at the pitmouth Monday following. The miners had had unpleasant experiences before with these subdistrict officials who were much quicker to promise than to perform. So they refused to go to work that morning, saying they would wait until the subdistrict officials had adjusted the matter with the company. They went home. That was the head and front of their offending, so far as I can until now discover.

They called a delegate meeting with the surrounding Locals, which endorsed their stand. But it seems the higher-ups of the U. M. W. did not recognize the strike. Joe Vegh, the Recording Secretary of the Blairmont Local, a clean, intelligent Hungarian, naturalized, with a wife and babies, went with a Russian, the president of the Local, and an Italian who was a committeeman of the Local, to visit the surrounding locals and axplain the situation and enlist their support. These three were arrested August 1st while returning from a visit of that sort. The others were arrested Sept. 21.

One and all, this is their story. There is no I. W. W. local here. There was an organizer who came down from Cleveland last June or earlier and left a donation-list with Joe Vegh to raise funds for the political prisoners. Joe put this in his pocket and forgot it. It was seized when he was arrested and searched. There were no names on it. That seems about the extent to which "Syndicalism" enters into the case.

The defendants are fine, clean, intelligent men. All but one are Socialists, members of the Hungarian branch here. Joe Vegh, as I stated, is a naturalized citizen; he knows enough English to keep the United Mine Workers' minutes in English, in very credible shape. The others all speak English intelligibly. They have taken out their first papers.

Comrade, I have told you the facts as straight as I could. I am glad you hooked me into this fight, altho I am going to lose money heavily on it—coming clear across the State, a day's jolting from 6:30 A. M. to 5:10 P. M. and quarantined in this little hole in the wall. But it is going to be a grand fight, and I am going to see these boys thru it right. If there is anything you can do to rouse the United Mine Workers to come to their aid, or the workers generally, I know you will do it.

Yours for Industrial Democracy

ALLISON, KATTERFELD, BRONSTRUP, BAKER and WAGENKNECHT ARRESTED

Charged with Violating Syndicalist Law

Loyal American League Continues Its Campaign of Intimidation - Attempts to Sweep Back the Tide of Revolt Against Criminal Capitalism with a Broom

The Czar is dead, but his spirit lives in America.

His spirit has found an abiding place in America's ruling class and its henchmen.

In Pittburgh the labor unions have been denied the right to meet in halls to protest against criminal capitalism.

In Gary, Lorain and other cities the steel strikers have been forbidden to freely assembly to voice their grievances. Their homes have been raided. The military rule.

In the Ohio mining region, miners are being thrown into jail, charged with violating the syndicalist law, because they had the audacity to demand that they be paid for the full weight of the coal they mined.

* * * *

At the special organization meeting called by the Communist Labor Party of Cleveland, L. E. Katterfeld, organization director and national executive committeeman of the Communist Labor Party; Welter Bronstrup, Cleveland secretary; Chas. Baker, organizer for the party; A. Wagenknecht, its national secretary and E. T. Allison, editor, were taken into custody by an army of police and operatives for the Loyal American League, hustled to the jail and charged with violating the Freeman act, which makes it an offense to "advocate reforms by the use of crime, violence, sabotage or terrorism."

Acme hall was filled Thursday evening, Oct. 16, with Cleveland comrades who came especially to inform themselves upon the party situation and to hear a personal message from Debs. The walls of the hall were decorated with blue-coats. The meeting was allowed to proceed without interuption. Katterfeld made an impressive speech.

He traced the development of the Left Wing movement within the party and cited reasons why affiliation with the Communist Labor Party should be preferred by those present. A call was made for applications for membership. A surprisingly large number of applications were made. Many in the audience also subscribed for the Ohio Socialist. Marguerite Prevey gave the audience a personal message from Debs. The meeting was adjourned. And that was the signal.

Immediately the army of police together with the a score of operatives of the Loyal American League surrounded all those who took an active part in the meeting, confiscated the applications for membership, the signed subscription cards, the literature, and carted it all, together with the five comrades, to jail.

By the use of crime, violence, sabotage and terrorism, the Loyal American League, agents for the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, are attempting to intimidate workers who gather in meeting to discuss their organization affairs. Branch meetings in Cleveland have been broken up. Hall owners have been threatened. Comrades have been lodged in jail without charges. All means, ruthless in the extreme, have been used in an attempt to make impotent the organization machinery of the revolutionary workers of Cleveland.

There are none so blind as the capitalist class. Russian history seems to be a closed book to them. What the Czar started in Russia, and could not finish the master class is now starting in the United States. It means their finish. Senator Pomerene's "patient and long-suffering" American workers are even now showing their teeth. The strike of the steel workers; the hundreds of strikes thru-out the country; the strike of the dock workers; the threatened strike of the miners — all this attests to the growing spirit of revolt against criminal capitalism. And there shall be no rest to the unrest until the great working class has come into its own.

So the call ges forth to you again, comrades.

Solidify your ranks. Permit no inconsequential differences to divide you. Where there is unity or purpose there must be unity in organization. Sweep aside those who would barter unity for personal advantage. As a solid mass, come to the rescue of your persecuted comrades.

Terrorism and intimidation will cease when we assert our power as a mass.

And this WE WILL DO—FOR WE MUST.

Seven Mine Workers in Cadiz Jail Look to You for Help

Seven members of the United Mine Workers Union are languishing in the Harrison County jail, at Cadiz, Ohio. The are charged with violating the criminal syndicalist law.

This charge was placed against them because they demanded from the operators at Adena full weight for the coal mined by the members of their union.

The answer of the operators to the appeal for full weight, to the demand that this double robbery cease — was jail.

The officials of the Miners' Union were called upon for assistance before the arrests took place. These officials asked to intercede for the miners to secure full weight for all coal mined.

When the union officials learned that the fight for full weight was led by radicals in the union, they turned their backs upon the men. Arrest of the committee of seven, which toured the surrounding mines to ask for a general strike of miners, followed almost immediately.

Encouraged by the success of the Espionage Act in jailing members of the working class, State legislatures have been passing special laws under the title of "Criminal Syndicalist Bills," ostensibly to be used against the workers. In California active members of unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor were arrested, jailed and charged with "criminal syndicalism" for their strike activities. The same tactics are being used against the organizers of the steel industry in Pennsylvania.

Unable to cope with the growing power of labor and the developing spirit of solidarity, the employing classes have cunningly devised this new means of fighting organized labor by passing laws with the avowed purpose of checking the activities of radicals, but virtually these laws are so construed as to enable them to arrest the active workers in the union.

The courts can make a strike illegal and break it by calling the strike "sabotage," and under such legislation can send workers to jail for long terms.

For self-protection the men and women of organized labor must see that so far as the great economic struggle is concerned, any one that threatens the regime of the bosses is the enemy of the capitalist class and is dealt with accordingly.

The American workers does not yet realize that he is as likely to go to prison for twenty years because of his participation in a strike as any of the radicals who proclaim the strike the most powerful economic weapon that labor has. In the years to come the political and labor prisoners will no longer be counted by the hundreds but by the thousands—the jails will be filled by men and women of some social vision—unless labor, recognizing its own power, refuses to allow it.

In Wichita, Kansas, thirty-two workers were confined since November, 1917 until a few days ago in a jail so filthy and unsanitary that we cannot tell about it and pass the censor! One of these men went insane, one attempted suicide and one has died on account of the filthy condition of the jail. Every man has lost from ten to forty pounds in weight. They are not charged with anything but the open expression of their views. These thrty-two men have been kept in jail twenty-three months without a trial. Twice indictments have been quashed for insufficiency, but the men are immediately reindicted.

There is scarcely a prison in all these United States but contains some tortured man who is there because he believed in labor's cause. Many of these are cases where the employing class have merely found a convenient chance during the war situation to the strike a venomous blow at working men who have been a thorn in their side at other times.

There are over fifteen hundred such prisoners in the American jails today. It is not only labor's absolute right, but if labor is to maintain its self-respect, it MUST stand stand back of every man who is now in prison because of labor's struggle.

We must stand back of the seven jailed miners at Cadiz.

The majority of these are members of the Hungarian Federation of the party. Secretary Leo Frankl of the federation has issued a call to all federation members to give financial aid, which is badly needed and at once. Jos. Erdei organizer for the federation in Ohio and Pennsylvania reports that the Hungarian branch of Cleveland has already taken a collection among its members and has covered the initial expenses of sending Jos. Sharts, attorney, to Cadiz for the preliminary hearing.

Let us repeat—AN INJURY TO ONE WORKER IS AN INJURY TO ALL. There is not another word to say. You know your duty in the matter.

Marguarite Prevey and Ella Reeve Bloor Take Field for Liberators

You will grant that we have not been idle.

Comrades have sent us hundreds of dollars and we have printed thousands upon thousands of leaflets for distribution, propagandizing our call to free them all — to free every last one of our comrades now penned up in vile jails at the mercy of guards brutalized by capitalism.

Leaflets have been distributed—as high as ten thousand in a single city by the effort of a single comrade. We have more of these leaflets for you — ENTIRELY FREE — paid for by the Liberators' Army. You can help materially toward the freedom of all political prisoners if you will help place these leaflets into the hands of the workers.

Yet, what's immediately important is to arouse the working class to a realization of the class character of this battle to free our comrades. We must awaken their class instincts for united action in a class demand. We must secure unity of thought—then unity of action will follow.

We must UNITE the workers in this thought—that all political prisoners can be freed if the workers will unite to free them. And to help to UNITE the workers in this thought we have secured the services of Ella Reeve Bloor and Marguerite Prevey. These two comrades will take the field as soon as routings can be arranged, and their special mission will be to visit labor unions to deliver the message of class action.

More organizers will be toured as they can be secured. If you can arrange a public meeting in your city, write for one of these speakers. Ella Reeve Bloor wil be available in the New England states and Marguarite Prevey in Pennsylvania and states west from there.

Mainly however, help to secure an audience for these speakers before the labor unions in your city. If you can, send us the names of the labor unions, their meeting nights, and state which are most revolutionary in tendency.

Locals of the party should take action at once. Write to this office and state how many days you can keep an Army of Liberators' organizer busy in your city.

AND NOW LOOK HERE—You have financed this campaign to free all political prisoners. This is not the end of your duties. The fund on hand must now be used for the purpose for which it was gathered. The purpose for which it was gathered was to ORGANIZE the workers to SECURE FREEDOM for all imprisoned comrades.

Without you as our field agent for our field organizers we are impotent. Will you now do what is immediately necessary to organize the workers for UNITED ACTION?

WE AWAIT YOUR ANSWER!

May Not Be Sentenced

CINCINNATI, O.—"Will the thirteen Cicinnati Socialists, convicted of conspiracy to defeat the conscription act, escape punishment through the sudden death of United States Judge Hollister?"

This question was asked frequently last week in court and legal circles, and the answers of leading judges and attorneys disclosed a divided opinion. The facts in the case are these:

The thirteen defendants were found guilty by a jury at a trial over which Judge Hollister presided.

The law provides that the trial judge must pronounce the sentence, basing it upon the evidence which he heard during the progress of the case.

Judge Hollister delayed the pronouncement of the sentence until he had heard the arguments of the motion for a new trial. He was to have heard these last week.

One group contends that only Judge Hollister could pronounce sentence because be alone was familiar with the evidence and all the details of the case. The other side holds that the judge who succeeds to the bench will have the record to study and will therefore be just as able to acquaint himself with the history of the whole matter. Judge Sater was expected to come to Cincinnati Monday to hear arguments on the motion for a new trial. The general opinion exists that if the trial of the Socialists is rendered nil by the death of Judge Hollister they will never again be taken before the court. Over two and a half years have already elapsed since their arrest, in June, 1917.

A Very Sick Man at Atlanta.

Atlanta, Ga., October 15, 1919.

The Ohio Socialist,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Comrades:

I have been visiting Debs regularly since his incarceration in the Federal Prison at Atlanta, Ga. I have observed him in his different moods, and it is my humble opinion that unless something is done for him immediately he will be shipped to Terre Haute, Indiana in a coffin. I picture the associated press, at any moment, flashing this news over the country: "EUGENE V. DEBS DIES AT THE FEDERAL PRISON, ATLANTA, GEORGIA."

If we want to see our beloved comrade, together with the other political prisoners, out of the penitentiary we must get busier than ever before in developing the power of the workers to protect their own.

While Eugene Debs is a sick man, his morale, his spirit, his faith in the revolution was never stronger, never more inspiring. In reading the rapid changes in the political, social and economic forces the world over, he sees the close approach of the workers regime.

Debs has inspired all the political prisoners down here. He has brought about a spiritual revolution among them, and from his hospital room he is radiating immeasurable influence for good.

While he will gladly die here as an uncompromising revolutionist, we owe it to ourselves to demand the immediate release of the political prisoners more vigorously than ever. If we fail to to this it will be too late to greet comrade Debs in life. Debs sends his love to all the comrades. He visualizes more than ever before an international league of the peoples—the proletariat of the world.

There is a sick man at the White House whose ideal is a league of nations—a capitalistic league of nations—for the governments of the world. Daily bulletins are being issued regarding his health. There is another sick man, a sick comrade, at the Atlanta Federal Prison, who advocates a league of peoples—a league of the proletariat—for the people of the world. Although there are no daily bulletins being issued about him, millions of comrades who have an undying admiration for the man's courage and for his life work in behalf of the proletariat, are increasing his influence so rapidly that it is only a question of time until the power of the prisoner overshadows not only the White House but the whole nation.

Yours very sincerely,
SAMUEL M. CASTLEON.

COOPERATE for LIBERTY

Liberty Bonds held by socialists and I. W. W. members of Ft. Wayne, Ind., to the extent of $5,000 were put up as bonds for the release of fellow worker Roland Stevens, when he was arrested in that city charged with violation of the syndicalist law in having I. W. W. literature in his possession.

After six hours spent in jail the previous days, he was released on his own recognizance. In court on the 30th, he was bound over to the circuit court on $5,000. bail.

National Organizer Chas. Baker, of the Communist Labor Party spoke in Ft. Wayne that evening and at his meeting made a stirring appeal to the comrades to come to the rescue of their comrade with their liberty bonds. It was only a few minutes until sufficient bonds were pledged as bail and comrade Stevens released.

Indiana comrades are requested to take an interest in this case and to make it their business to lend all assistance possible. This is the first case in the state where a violation of the syndicalist law has been charged. The united power of the workers can make it the last. Comrade Stevens stands high in the estimation of his comrades and his character is such as to win and retain the trust of all radicals.

Goodbye America

(From The Voice of Labor)

Well, good bye, fellows! Yes, I am leaving, going home, going back to the first workingman's country in the world — Soviet Russia.

For seventeen long years you and I have been toiling side by side.

Together we cussed and swore about the lousy bunks and punk grub in the rain-soaked logging camps of Washington and Oregon; together we "humped" lumber and railroad ties in the California seaports; together we "mucked" in the tunnels and grading camps of Nevada and Utah; together we hayed in Colorado and harvested in Kansas and the Dakotas; together we smelled the stink of Chicago stock-yards, hustled in the machine-shops of Cleveland and the steel mills of Pittsburgh, sailed on the Lakes; together we worked in half a dozen ship-yards, all along the Eastern Coast.

We know each other, you and I. And now let me tell you why I want to go back.

Somehow you fellows have got it into your heads that this is the best country in the world for a workingman to live in, and that it will remain the best. More than that. You say that this country, as it is now, is good enough for you — and you'd just as soon have it as it is for ever and ever. Anybody who disagrees with you is unpatriotic, or an ungrateful knocker.

"If You Don't Like Your Uncle Sammy" —

It is a hundred to one bet that an American-born worker's answer to a dissatisfied foreigner will always be: "If you don't like this country, get to hell out of it. Nobody invited you to come here; who's keeping you now?"

Many American-born workinmen think that this is a very smart answer — a regular knock-out; in reality, it is the silliest sentence in the world to be spoken by a working man.

Let me show you why.

Who owns this country — the great shops, the railroads, the big banks; the forests, rich mines and fertile soil? Do the workingmen own them, or a handful of millionaries with their comfortable and well-paid managers, foremen, superintendents, guards and private detectives?

Who make the laws, who enforce them, who appoint the judges, police and jail-keepers? The workers or the bosses?

True enough, every little while the politicians — paid and controlled by these same bosses and millionarires — come around asking for your votes. And you swallow all their bunk, vote for them, and think you're ruling the country. Then you go on strike. A Judge (the one you voted for) issues an injunction forbidding you from picketting. A Sheriff (you voted for him) gives deputy badges to scabs and private detectives. A Governor (you helped to elect him) calls in the militia to break the strike.

A band of thugs hired by John D. Rockefeller shoot down striking coal-miners in Colorado, and burn their women and children to death—nobody's punished. A band of thugs hired by the Phelps-Dodge Company at Bisbee deport five hundred striking copper miners into the desert at the point of a gun—nobody's punished. A servant of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, a District Attorney named Fickert (you helped elect him, too) sends Tom Mooney to jail for life on a frame-up — nobody's punished except Mooney.

Yes, you rule the country — like Hell!

Millions of you don't know yet that it doesn't make a particle of difference whether Republicans, Democrats, Progressives or "Independents" win the election. It's nothing to you whether this or that "friend of labor," whether this "good" man or that "great" man gets a soft political job.

How many more times must you be fooled before you begin to see it?

The great industrial and financial barons of this country hold every politician in the hollow of their hands. If the politicians do as they are told to, they get promoted; if they do what they promised you to do, they are down and out.

As for us working men — you American-born and we foreign-born — we get work if they can make money out of us; if they can't, we can go hang ourselves. When we have jobs, we get barely enough to feed, clothe and shelter ourselves. When we have jobs, we get barely enough to feed, clothe and shelter ourselves and our families. When we are out of work we face starvation. And when starvation comes, they tell us: "Don't make trouble, or you'll get your head cracked by a cop's club. Stand in line. Patronize the soup-houses. Charity will take care of your family — if there's enough to go around. Shut up, and be thankful for the slops!"

America, at this moment, is the biggest gold-mine for the capitalists that ever existed in all history. The capitalists of America have made so many millions of dollars (yes, they skinned it out of you and me), that they are searching all over the world for places to invest it; for countries in which to build new shops, mills and railroads, to dig new mines, and skin more millions out of the workingmen of other countries — Mexico, China, Siberia...

But when it comes to pay the war-debts, these hundreds of millions of profits are scarcely touched. Instead, the wise men in Washington, D. C. (your Government), have the nerve to tax the workingman, to take it out of the children of the poor.

One cent tax on each ice-cream cone! One cent on each nickel ticket to a moving-picture show! Twenty cents on the poor man's dollar! A blind man ought to see by whom and for whose benefit the laws are made!

Of course the capitalists are satisfied with this country as it is now. Of course they want to "kick to hell out of this country" every foreign workingman who sees and doesn't like the great skin-game that is going on.

And the American-born worker who slings the same words against his fellow-worker born in another country, is simply echoing the sentiments of the boss who robs him, beats him and breaks him.

For seventeen long years—the best years of my life—I have slaved for the American money-bags. All I got for it was a bare living, like a farmer's mule or a contractor's team-horse.

So did you, my American friends and fellow-workers—Yankee of New England and Native Son of the Golden West. The only difference between you and me is, that I understood it and felt it every day and every hour, while most of you don't understand it and don't feel it even now.

When wages were $15 a week, we bought pork chops for 10 or 12 cents a pound. Now we get $30 a week, and the same kind of pork chops cost us 45 cents a pound. Wages have doubled; pork chops cost almost four times as much. Where do we gain when in the face of the unheard-of cost of living, our wages don't increase in proportion, but fall more and more behind the price of necessities?

Our jobs are getting more uncertain every day — you know that as well as I do. If we are too old, if we can't work fast enough, if they can get cheaper men, if we give back-talk to a cranky straw-boss, if we open our mouths in Union meetings, if we kick for better conditions — then we get fired. Isn't that right?

But the most pitiful figures are those workingmen who think they are well-off; by scraping, saving, working themselves to the bone, have managed to get a two-by-four house and lot on a ten-year installment plan. Being afraid to lose their jobs in that vicinity, they cease to be men, and turn into worms. They are afraid to kick, afraid to protest, afraid to strike; they do not dare to open their mouths.

On top of all this, when, on account of the speeding up of production, or unsettled industrial or financial conditions, the millionaire bosses have on hand too many unsold products, or they can't sell them at a big enough profit — then they shut down mills and whole industries, and millions of workers are turned out on the street.

By all the signs it looks as if the workers of America will get one of those vacations in the near future — not only a good long one, but a lean one.

Is there any help for it? Is there any way out?

Yes, there is! And not a theory, either, but a practical scheme that is now working.

Every one of you has been reading for the past two years the fake newspaper stories about Russia, and the hair-raising tales of the "terrible Bolsheviki." The bigger the lie, the better it is paid for by the capitalist papers, who are owned and controlled by the same millionaire bosses who own the industries.

Why?

Because the working men and soldiers of Russia, hand in hand with the farm-hands and the poorest farmers, overthrew, not only the bloody Tsar and his slave-drivers, but also the shyster Kerensky, behind whose coat-tails the millionaire bosses of Russia expected to keep on skinning the workers.

Because these same workers organized their own Workers' Government.

Because the Bolsheviki Soviet Government took away the factories, mills, mines, banks and land from their millionaire owners — did not pay a cent for them — and turned them over to the workers, farm-hands and poor farmers.

Because in spite of all difficulties, the workers of Russia are learning how to manage and run the industries for the benefit of all who work.

Because the workers of Russia are succeeding, and are defending their own Soviet Government against all attacks from the capitalist Governments of Japan, England, France, Italy and America, who are assisting the old millionaires and the Tsarist generals in their attempt to restore the Russian workers to slavery.

Because the American millionaire bosses are shaking in their stolen shoes for fear you American-born workers learn something about the real conditions in Soviet Russia. They are afraid that you might begin to think that the way of the Russian workers is a good way out of the present capitalist swamp toward industrial freedom.

They fondly hope that you American-born workers will believe all the lies they tell you, that you will forget your own conditions and join in the hunt for Bolsheviks in America.

They are trying to split the workers into an American-born and a foreign-born section, set them fighting each other, and thus skin both of them.

They are not afraid of the foreign-born workers. They know that the few foreign-born rebels cannot harm their looted money-bags. But they fear worse than fire that you American-born workers will become revolutionists. And they are right. The future of America, the future of the working class of America, rests in the hands of the American-born workers. If you turn revolutionists, the American millionaries and their flunkeys are doomed.

As for me, I am getting weary of slaving for any millioaire; I am sick and tired of being at the mercy of a bone-headed straw-boss for a job; I am disgusted with lots of things that you are still proud of.

I want to live and work among free workers. I want to spend the rest of my life working for a better future for mankind, liberated from all the parasites. Yes, I would prefer to die fighting against the enemies of the New Social Order in Workingmen's Russia, than to spend the rest of my strength working for American millionaires, and then, worn out, die like a stray dog by the road-side here in America, leaving behind me sons and daughters to go through the mill that I went through.

But I believe that time and experience will change your minds, fellow-workers born in America. Then you will act—as the working class of Russia acted.

And when you do perhaps some of you remember that the "damned Polak" or the "crazy Russian," as you so often called me, wasn't so "damned" or so "crazy" after all!

Yours for a free world for the workers,

IVAN IVANOVITCH.

Capitalism's New Weapon

The "criminal syndicalism" bill which has been passed by more than a dozen states and which was enacted by the Ohio legislature last April and signed by the governor in May, places a new weapon in the hands of those who are oppressing and exploiting the workers.

Following we print this law in complete form:

AN ACT

Defining the crime of criminal syndicalism and prescribing punishment therefor.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

Sec. 13421—23 Section 1. That criminal syndicalism is the doctrine which advocates crime, sabotage, which is defined as the malicious injury or destruction of the property of another, violence, or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reform. The advocacy of such doctrine, whether by word of mouth or writing, is a felony, punishable as in this act provided.

Sec. 13421—24 Section 2. Any person who by word of mouth or writing, advocates or teaches the duty, necessity or propriety of crime, sabotage, violence or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reform; or prints, publishes, edits, issues or knowingly circulates, sells, distributes, or publicly displays any book, paper, document, or written matter in any form, containing or advocating, advising or teaching the doctrine that industrial or political reform should be brought about by crime, sabotage, violence or unlawful methods of terrorism; or openly, wilfully, and deliberately justifies, by word of mouth or writing, the commission or the attempt to commit crime, sabotage, violence or unlawful methods of terrorism with intent to exemplify, spread or advocate the propriety of the doctrines of criminal syndicalism; or organizes or help to organize or becomes a member of, or voluntarily assembles with any society, group or assemblage of persons formed to teach or advocate the doctrine of criminal syndicalism; is guilty of a felony and punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not more than ten years, or by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars, or both.

Sec. 13421—25 Section 3. Whenever two or more persons assemble for the purpose of advocating or teaching the doctrines of criminal syndicalism as defined in this act, such an assemblage is unlawful, and every person voluntarily participating therein by his presence, aid or instigation is guilty of a felony and punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not more than ten years, or by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars, or both.

Sec. 13421—26 Section 4. The owner, agent, superintendent, janitor, caretaker or occupant of any place, building or room, who wilfully and knowingly permits therein any assemblage of persons prohibited by the provisions of section 3 of this act, or who, after notification that the premises are so used, knowingly permits such use to be continued, is guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, or both.

Section. 5. This act is hereby declared to be an emergency act necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace and safety. The emergency necessitating the enactment of this act arises out of the fact that there are persons in, and also persons threatening to enter, the state for the purpose of teaching the doctrine of criminal syndicalism as defined in this act, and advocating such doctrine and the commission of the other acts and practices declared by this act to be unlawful, the tendecy of which will be to destroy our institutions and government, and put the people into a condition of unrest and terror.

The danger to the working class is not in what this law seemingly says but in what it may be twisted into saying.

The Communist Labor Party does not teach or advocate "crime, sabotage..., violance or unlawful methods of terrorism", but this law has already been used as the basis for the arrests of five of its officials at Cleveland last week.

Under this law it becomes a crime to tell the story of the Russian revolution and how the workers achieved power in that country, for that would by to "exemplify" what is forbidden by the terms of this law.

While not even mentioning strikes the law will prove a very handy weapon against pickets for the activities of pickets may very easily be interpreted to be "unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reforms."

While the law forbids "unawful methods of terrorism" it does not tell us what unlawful methods of terrorism are, possibly because we can learn that from the operation of the law itself.

Notice To Readers

The paper shortage has been very acute for months, more so than during the war. Recently the paper mills quit making newspaper for flat bed presses and it is on a flat bed press that the Ohio Socialist is being printed. Last week we were campelled to use book paper costing twice as much as newspaper. To avoid this big increase in cost we are compelled to print this week and possibly next a six instead of a seven column paper.

THE BULLETIN BOARD

To say that the newspaper press represents public opinion is to administer insult to intelligent men. It is the property of speculators, political leaders, large contractors and railway directors. Can we expect the truth through channels of falsehood, light from regions of darkness or fairness from those whose business is to calumniate, pervert and deceive? Certainly not. Hence the need of an organ that should be beyond stain of corruption, invulnerable against attacks and inspired by men who feel it their mission to teach the truth they have acquired by hard toil and bitter sufferings. —

CHAPTER II.

THE HARVEST FIELD

Westfield, the place of his nativity, seemed to pride itself on its antiquated methods and ideas in all things. They lived as much as they possibly could in the mental atmosphere of the sixteenth century. Crudeness was every where in evidence. Jack hated crudeness. Not only in the mental world, but also in the realm of practical affairs. Ever since he had become interested in biology, he had endeavored to persuade his parents and neighbors that farming should be conducted in harmony with the laws discovered in biological and chemical laboratories. It was in science that he found an answer to many of the questions that had vexed his childhood brain and he believed that only applied science could emancipate mankind from the thraldom of contradiction. But as Westfield resented his questions concerning their creed, so they resented his suggestions for improved methods. At every turn the brain of today was confronted with the tombstones of the past. Westfielders worshipped at the grave of Calvin and Knox, and refused to come out into the light of the twentieth century. There was nothing for him to do but to go out into the world and carve a path for himself.

He wanted to become a scientific farmer, not an easy task for a penniless boy, who by nature is more of an investigator and thinker that a worker, and financier. It pre-supposes high tuition in the school of hard knocks before a man with such a mind type such as Jack's can win a place in the sun.

Ever since his eleventh year he had been on the look out for reading matter of a scientific nature and for phenomena in nature that would justify or contradict the statements made in the books of science. He had accumulated notes on all the natural phenomena that came under his unaided observation. He had evolved definite ideas of evolutionary processes in the inorganic as well as the organic world. In fact he might have been considered well read in the biologic and physical sciences as far as their popular and current literature is concerned at the time that he left his home to begin his battle with the world. On the other hand aside from farming he was hopelessly ignorant of historical data and man's social and economic relations as they exist in the modern industrial world.

All that he knew he had learned from a few scattered books and from his immediate environment and that environment employed labor, hence with reference he had developed the employer's psychology. Now he was thrust out into the world, not as an imployer but an employee. He found himself in a situation where the facts of life directly contradicted the requirements of his logical mind.

His father raised wheat and hired what he called tramps through out the harvest season. He needed them in the fall-he would have been sadly dissapointed if for some reason they had not turned up at harvest time. Yet for the rest of the year he cursed them soundly and saw to it that his vote was cast for a capable sheriff, one who made it his business to see to it that these undesirables were driven out of the country as soon as threshing was over.

Jack who by nature questioned all things, had never questioned these phenomena. They appeared enevitable. This may be explained by the fact that he studied things as they are, and had given but little attention to things as they might or ought to be. As long as he was a member of his father's house, his and his father's interests were one and as a rule a person will defend his mode of existence without analyzing it too carefully. Exploiters do not like to discuss the moral phases of their economic life. So it happened that he who questioned all things that came under his observation had never investigated the cause of this phenomeon of migratory labor.

But such is the irony of existence. The farm youth who the fall before had applauded the election of a particularly viseious sheriff, who was expected to deal vigorously with the tramp problem, was this fall himself a tramp, carrying his blankets and heavy suitcase along the dusty highway.

To his amazement farmers at the cross roads looked at him exactly as he had looked at the workers the year before. He overheard them making remarks such as—"hoboes are coming early this year—" Well, the sheriff has got a good big rock pile for them, that will keep them out of mischief till harvest starts" — "I have got a good dog at my house, he will keep 'em out of the barn and chicken coop." Needless to say that these remarks stung him to the quick; he explained to the man that he was not a tramp and was surprised that they laughed at him. His quick wit however, showed him that what these men were throwing at him, he had thrown he had changed relations to the facts at others and it dawned on him that of life. From a buyer of labor power he had become a seller. He realised even before he had found work that there was a feeling of natural antagonism between him and his prospective employers. He realized that he was looked upon as at best a necessary evil, tolerated only in the fields during harvest times. The class that yesterday looked upon him as a friend, today viewed him as a thief, a fire bug and a beast of burden.

On his first job in the harvest field he was thrown into the company of an element that maybe fitly called the Si-wash of the white; the lowest strata of the migratory worker. It was a dessolute crowd such as he had never met among the tramps that came to work on his father's farm. They were the spawn of the slums-evil blossoms from the back yard of civilization. He felt bitter toward them. He thought that it was because they were what they were that he was ostracized; that he was unpopular simply because workers as a class were vicious. He thot that the old saying "that a man is known by the company he keeps" explained the farmer's attitude toward him. He felt within him more than ever a burning desire to climb to nobler and better things. But in a few days he went to another job and there he met other men. Men of quite different characteristics. Men from good homes and with education superior to his own and they too were considered by the farmers as tramps and bums, hoboes and outcasts; who it was right to pay little and work hard and to rob whenever possible.

Once he complained to a man who was working with him at shocking wheat. He said that it was his opinion that if the workers that came to the harvest fields would use better language and live cleaner lives that the farmers would treat them better; to which his companion replied "I tell you bo, this antagonism of which you talk is not a question of ethics but of economics." And as Jack was unfamiliar with the meaning of the words ethics and economics he asked no further questions but resolved to find out the meaning of these two words.

When the harvest was over the threshing season began. He secured a job with an outfit as fireman and here he came in contact with still another type of men. Men who were highly skilled in their respective lines and who had a wider knowledge of human affairs than any farmer Jack had ever met, and they too were considered as tramps and bums by the property owning pygmies that controlled the wheat fields of North Dakota. That state which was once the most backward is now considered the most forward of all states. It was not so in Jack's day. The men he met in the threshing ever were veterans of the class struggle and seers of a greater social vision. They were prophets of natural law in the social world. George Sigmiller, the engineer, a big man in every sense of the word took a special delight in showing Jack the error of his economic ways. He was by nature fitted to do just this very thing having been a worker and student from childhood. And Jack made an ideal pupil, for his mind ever ready to absord information, greedily devoured all that the engineer could teach.

There is an affinity between kindred minds. This explains the close friendship that grew up between the engineer and the boy. He teaching Jack the mechanism of society, Jack teaching him the flora and fauna of Dakota. By the law of compensation each gave and received, while both grew to a greater knowledge.

Then there was Herman in charge of the business end of the outfit. He too was a class conscious socialist, more brilliant than George but less kindly and profound. The radicalism with which he sometimes assailed the established order of things was to Jack at times quite appalling. His favorite expression was "Get the cob webs off your brain." Jack could not help but notice that these men were mentally far above the people who snubbed them; even as the Greek slaves were intellectually superior to their Roama masters.

One evening when the trio were lying in the straw behind the engine the conversation drifted to the subject of race antagonism. It was during the Russo-Japanese war. Herman remared that the antagonism of races was a mere matter of education; while the antagonism of classes was a matter of economics. "Race antagonism" he continued, "only manifests itself in a child that has heard his parents cuss niggers or chinks, japs or wops. That shows it to be a process of education, if it were natural then the babies of the southern codfish aristocracy would refuse to be nursed by black mamies. The trouble is that thru the medium of church and school we pour the poison into the ear of the young at such a tender age that they grow up believing that the hatred they feel for a different race is really a part of their being; while the fact is it is only a part of their education. There is a slight difference between that and the class antagonism of which the kid complains" said he pointing to Jack. "Class antagonism is not taught as such. The farmers do not teach hatred of the working class, in fact they consider themselves part of the working class. They only berate those they have to pay for service rendered and the workers hate the farmers, because the farmers hate to pay. The farmers need the money for taxes, the workers need the money for bread. The class struggle has an economic base. Race hatred grows out of education. And the education grows out of fear lest the hated race should become dominant instead of servile. The class struggle is based in the struggle for possession of the products of labor. Each class trying to give as little and get as much as possible.

"Yes" said George, "our race antagonisms have deep laid economic roots but you have overlooked an important factor in your discussion and that is the necessity of the ruling groups in society keeping race hatred alive, especially in a country where the working masses are made up of different races. To fan the flame of race hatred defeats our work for solidarity among all the laboring masses. You cannot get a poison filled white man into the same union with the negro. Altho they have to work on the same job and when they strike go to the same jail. If we refuse to organise with the negro or the chinamen or jap then one of two things is inevitable either they scab on us or organise against us. Race antagonisms are used to fan fights among the worping masses for the purpose of keeping them a part in such a way as to be unable to concentrate their collectipe power on a common object.

This race hatred is a substantial stumbling block in the path of our progress. A negro looks at a white woman and white men burn them at the

Symbols of Capitalism

Social systems seek to develop the forces calculated to sustain and protect them from decay, revolutions and such disintegration as time and evolution may bring about.

The armed forces of the capitalist state reveal themselves as symobls which personify the character of such a state. Take the police force of any large city. There is reflected in its personnell, in its character as an organised body, in its methods of carrying on its functions the chief characteristics of its parent, the social and industrial system. As the parent system is arrogant, ruthless, distinguished by a class character of slave and master, so are its armed forces, (the foundation of present organised government), of a like character.

Capitalism is ruthless, inhuman, brutal. So are the police who are its right hand. So are its jails which are even more brutal, with the brutality of inanimity, the crushing brutality of steel bars and cells and cold stone pavements and dark, shadowed corridors; of confinement and filth and disease.

The psychology of the police is a psychology of force, of compulsion. They are trained in its use. The necessities of capitalism demand such a training. Capitalism has reached that stage of development whereby its dependence upon its armed forces grows ever greater.

In this stage of decay such a state composed of master and slave, the sole sustaining support becomes such armed powers as it can command. Upon such support every decaying social system comes at last to lean when its function of ministering to the welfare of mankind have ceased.

It is now that the glaring mockery of the so-called justice of capitalism is revealed. It is being revealed to-day in many instances of the class war. The sole fuction of the police and army now is to protect the capitalist class in their exploitation of the workers. Gary is an example and there are a hundred others. The moment the workers seek to wrest even the smallest amount of control from the ruling class, the armed forces of the state are thrown against the workers in the interest of their exploiters and the capitalist state which is their instrument. The dictatorship of the capitalist class is established over the workers.

Under a social system wherein all were workers and the profit system abolished for one of production for use only, under such a system class conflicts would disapear and the character of the social system would likewise be reflected in such corrective institutions as would become necessary. The psychology of force would give way to one based upon sympathy, understanding of human nature and a knowledge of the science of sociology. Under such a system where economic antagonisms did not exist brutality in all its manifestations would disappear and the human race would develop its potential powers for nobility and leave the brute behind forever.

It is for such a social system that all revolutionary socialist are striving; it is the dream of poets and seers and it is the hope of the working-class.

The status of Admiral Kolchak's "government" has recently been a subject for much speculation, and very little light has been shed upon the subject from official sources. Enough however, has leaked out to justify the assumption that the allies have transferred their affections and hopes from Kolchak to Dennikin. Kolchak failed to deliver the goods, that is, failed to break the strength of the Russian worker's government and deliver Russia over to capitalistic imperialism. Dennikin is now the great hope of allied "democracy" in its undeclared war against the soviet power.

Interesting data upon Kolchak's waning power is supplied by Miss Florence Hoffman of Honulula, who just returned from service in the American Red Cross at Omsk, the seat of Kolchak's reactionary government. Omsk, according to Miss Hoffman, capitulated to the bolsheviki during the merry month of May and is still held by the reds. She asserts that there is no authentic information that the city has been recaptured by Kolchak forces. Kolchak's sinking ship is now making but very small rippless upon the rising tide of workingclass power in Russia.

The Jewish race in the Ukraine are being wiped out by the thousands thru programs instituted by anti-bolshevik forces according to information received by the Zionist Organization of America. In those sections where the bolsheviki have control everything possible is done to suppress programs and to assist survivors. Where the anti-bolshevist forces of Gen. Petlura have power over 30,000 Jews have been mercilessly slaughtered by the white terror of the reactionaries. It looks as tho the Jewish race might be forced to take a stand for the bolsheviks as a matter of race salvation.

ONCE MORE WE DEMAND UNITY

The following motion, made by Max Bedacht, is now before the national executive committee of the Communist Labor Party for its vote. Already a majority of this committee has voted in the affirmative upon it. As soon as voting upon this motion closes, the communication it embodies will be sent to the national office of the Communist Party.

National Executive Committee motion 3, made by Max Bedacht: That the Executive Secretary of the Communist Labor Party be instruced to send the following invitation to the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party:

To he Central Executive Committee,
Communist Party.

Dear Comrades:—

The National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party invites the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party to meet with it on November 1, 1919, or as near to that date possible, in Chicago or some other place agreed upon—

First—For an informal discussion of a basis for a formal unity conference and a mode of procedure for such a conference.

Second—If a basis is agreed upon, to then and there hold a unity conference.

In all sincerity we await your immediate and favorable answer, and remain,

For a United Communist Movement,
National Executive Committee—Communist Labor Party.

Will the Communist Party officials deign to answer? Will the rank and file of the Communist Party permit their national officials to continue to ignore the demand for unity?

FORWARD, MARCH

From Tampa to Chicago, from California to Rhode Island—the Communist Labor Party is gathering power in numbers to a degree entirely unexpected.

Entire state organizations are joining our ranks.

State conventions are being held in states where the party machinery is in control of the reactionaries.

Orders for dues stamps are reaching the 20,000 mark and the beginning has only been made.

OUR SUCCESS WILL BE PHENOMENAL WHEN ONCE WE HAVE ESTABLISHED THE PARTY'S MAHINERY AND OUR CONTEMPLATED ARMY OF ORGANIZERS TAKES THE FIELD.

We are winning and the victory against reactionary Socialism is just as important as any victorious tussle with the capitalist class.

We have cleaned the weapon wherewith we intend to battle. The rust of moderate Socialism the dullness of pure parliamentarism has been washed away and we now stand forth bright and keen for the fray.

Comrades from all parts of the country are lending a hand in the initial work of establishing avenues of activity.

No time and energy is spared by these self-sacrificing revolutionists. New York is being welded into an intact and efficient battalion. New Jersey has leaped to the front in the last week and will be a stronghold of the Communist Labor Party. Oregon and Washington have officially affiliated. California has placed its dues stamp order. Ohio is lining up. Illinois has held its state convention. Kansas and Missouri are organized for the party. And so we might go on to tell you the GOOD NEWS, but space forbids.

The Communist Labor Party is now an ESTABLISHED organization. Let those who hate to see us grow die in their hate. Let the insipid criticism, the rag-tail arguments of all who find joy in childishly calling names go on and on. We are strengthened by it all, for only that which is feared is fought.

We shall BUILD. We are in fact building. In a month the Communist Labor Party will be recognized as the virile, forceful party of Communism in the United States.

Join us in our MARCH FORWARD and EVER ONWARD!!

WORKERS WANTED

The Communist Labor Party needs immediately the active service of hundreds of Party workers. It aims as nearly as possible to utilize the talents of EVERY Party member in the service of our Cause.

No matter what you are now doing, if you are willing to quit working for capitalism and go to work for Communism, please let us hear from you at once.

Tell what you are willing and able to do. If you've had experience as lecturer, organizer, salesman or canvasser, editor or writer, stenographer, office worker, bookkeeper, collector, manager or teacher, specify it. Also your time of affiliation with the revolutionary movement, and what positions you have held in it.

Don't hesitate about this. Your letter will not be published but will be kept confidential.

So far, the blame for recent race riots has not been laid to either the I. W. W., Reds, Syndicalists, or Socialists. Capitalism must therefore, be responsible.

Emma Goldman Tells About Missouri Penitentiary

Speaking of the conditions in the Missouri state penitentiary, from which she was recently released, Emma Goldman has stated that in no other prison in the world could such horrors be found. In addition, she pointed out, prison labor was being used there in competition with free labor throughout the United States.

After acknowledging kindness shown her and Mrs. Kate Richards O'Hare by W. R. Painter, president of the State Parole Board, Miss Goldman said:

"Two months are allowed for the mastering of a task, that is, a trade, yet the persecution begins at once. The foreman in charge is a boy of 21, who took up the art of slave driving at the age of 16. He bullies and terrorizes the women, holding the threat of the blind cell and the bread and water diet over them.

Vile Language Used.

"The vilest language is none too bad for the women, some of them old enough to be the boy's mother. Of course, he is paid to bring results. The only way he can get results is first through slave driving methods, then by actually stealing part of the women's output, especially from the more ignorant, who are unable to do their own counting.

"I want it clearly understood that it is utterly impossible to keep up the required speed day after day. The working hours are nine a day, but in order to complete the task the women are driven to the old-time sweatshop methods of taking work evenings to their cells. In view of the fact that the cells are vermin infected and the overalls and jackets and suspenders the prisoners make are sold broadcast and have already been handled by consumptive and venereally infected male prisoners, who prepare the work, the results can readly be imagined.

"The contract system is supposed to have been abolished in the state of Missouri. The state is now the employer of 2.600 prisoners. I have evidence to prove that the convict labor of the state of Missouri supplies private business concerns in every state in the Union with overalls, jackets and suspenders. Of this I have personal knowledge.

Will Move for Remedies.

"It is my intention," Miss Goldman added, "to turn over this evidence to the Department of Labor and to organized bodies of labor throughout the United States, who are in the position to remedy this evil.

"Civilization claims to have advanced, and in no country do we hear so much about prison reform as in our own," she began. "Yet what can we say for the state of Missouri when at the head of their female department is a woman in charge of 90 women prisoners who has discretion over their life and death?

"This woman, Lilah Smith," she charged, "has been employed in penal institutions since her 15th year, and has, therefore, little education or training. She is believer in rigid discipline and punishment. She is really a neurotic, who has no control over her temper.

Often Uses Violence.

"She uses physical violence on the slightest pretext, especially when a particular prisoner is not in her good graces. Not once in 20 months did I hear her address one single encouraging or kind word to a prisoner. Flogging in the state of Missouri has been officially abolished, but Lilah Smith's vigorous slapping goes on.

"There are three methods of punishment. First, the women are deprived of their recreation; second, they are locked up in their own cells for 48 hours, from Saturday to Monday, on a diet of bread and water and then expected to begin their task Monday in their weakened condition; third, they are sent to a blind cell, a cell 53 inches by 104 inches, with an aperture of 7 inches by 1½ inches, suplied with one blanket, two pieces of bread and two cups of water a day. In this tomb they are kept from three to 22 days.

"For example, one woman, who is ill, has been sent to the blind cell eight times for various periods because she can not make the required task. Another woman, a foreigner, who speaks very poor English, is subject to temporary fits of insanity. Only lately they confined her to her cell, which was stripped bare, on a diet of bread and water, while she was seized with one of her insanse spells. In these United States we seem still to sanction medieval practices on the irresponsible and insane.

Heavy Meal Killed Prisoner.

"The most horrible tragedy which occured while I was in the Missouri penitentiary was that of a woman who had been ill two weaks," Miss Goldman related. "She was unable to make the task, was locked up in her cell on bread and water for 19 days.

"Thanksgiving Day this woman was brought up and given Thanksgiving dinner of pork and the other stuff, which poisoned here after her long starvation. She became violently ill in her cell and, as we later learned, perforated her intestines.

"I made a vigorous personal protest to Painter. Then the woman was removed at his order to what is known as the hospital, through it is a room with no sanitary appliances whatever.

"She died there in two days, after they had tried to forcibly feed her, though she was already unconscious when they removed her to her own cell. Her death was officially given out as due to influenza.

"Since the death of this woman they do not keep a prisoner longer than three days in the blind cell now. The criticism of Kate Richards O'Hare and myself have also bettered the conditions somewhat, although I am now convinced that they will fall back into their evil ways the moment Kate O'Hare is released.

Shamming or Lazy.

"There are two criterions on the part of the officials in dealing with the prisoners. If they are sick they are told that they are shamming; if they cannot make the task, they are told they are lazy.

"Often and often the women have been sent back to the shop by the physician when they are barely able to drag themselves along. This is more remarkable because he is not an unkindly man and was especially decent to me. The reason for the indifference to the other women there I discovered during my last days at the prison. He is at daggers' points with the board therefore he is unable to do what he would like.

In concluding Miss Goldman declared that she had been treated well and that in order to keep the confidence of the prisoners she did as much work as possible.

'ANARCHY' CASES ARE DISMISSED

On motion of Attorney Pierce, Judge Frater, on Saturday, Sept. 27th, dismissed the charges of Criminal Anarchy against T. F. G. Dougherty, J. J. Extel, Walker C. Smith, F. J. Cassidy and Harvey O'Connor.

This is the finale of the aftermath of the famous "Ole's Revolution."

Immediately after the Seattle general strike, every I. W. W. office was raided and those who happened to be there at the time were taken to jail with others who happened to be known and could be found.

Several others who were active in the strike were also arrested. These men were to be railroaded as an example to other workingmen, who might some day become discontented. After a time some were released, but 28 were held and charged with "Criminal Anarchy."

Fellow Workers James Bruce was the first to be tried and after a long trial, wherein soldiers, sailors, government officials, college professors and workingmen went to his defense he was finally acquitted by the jury, which remained out but a short time. Seventeen of those held were released, though Prosecutor Brown persisted in holding the other five.

With the dismissal of the remaining cases, Seattle's general strike becomes a matter of history.

stake, with the idea of striking terror into the heart of the negro population. In reality the terrified negro instead of becoming class conscious becomes race conscious. Instead of developing his economic position so as to protect himself from capitalist exploitation, the tendency is to organize themselves into race groups to protect himself from white mob violence. When white and black are organized to kill one another you'll not get them to sit down at the love feast of labor.

What is true of the negro in the South is true of the Jap in the West; is true of the foreigner in the east, we as Americans hate them because we have been told to hate them, by the news papers. Damned parrots that we are.

(Cont. next week)

A CALL TO YOU TO "UP AND DO"

We've laid away our Sunday suit and donned overalls.

We're going to forget about our Sunday suit until Industrial Democracy is with us. We're going to stay in overalls until we've made a clean-up.

We're going to clean-up capitalism, not by reforming it. "Cleaning it up" to us means CLEANING IT OUT.

It's got to go. It's going to go, But it probably never would have gone had we continued our bi-annual, half-hearted spasmodic, childish election day jabs at the monster.

Election day jabs will continue, of course. But that's not all nor half. We shall now be on the job every day of the year, schooling, training, assembling our forces, in the mine, mill, shop and field, and political and industrial action henceforth is to be everyday's work. The class struggle is an EVERY DAY struggle and a revolutionary party must be ACTIVE every day if it is to function as the workers' weapon in the struggle.

True enough, we have been rather culpable in the past. We thought that a handful of elected comrades could win us the NEW DAY by making a motion for it in the legislative halls. Most of these comrades never got as far as even a contemplation of a notion of such a motion. Many of them, the minute capitalism's retainers, found out that they could not be assimilated, were kicked out of the legislative halls. And now shall they stay "kicked out" until another election day rolls around? Shall the forward march of the workers be halted because the capitalist class has flung back into the faces of the workers comrades elected to political office?

We've had real pleasant moments in our election days' experiences. The slogan was—"Vote and it shall be given you". That was a little better than praying for it, but not much. We voted and then we waited. And we're waiting yet. We're still going to vote, but we're not going to wait any longer. There's a job for every one of us every day of the year and every Communist-Socialist will be found on the job from this time on.

Study the platform and program of the Communist Labor Party. It tells you what to do. And if we do what it commands us to do ALL TOGETHER—then world is ours.

The Three Parties

I.

All over the world the old Socialist movement is breaking in two over a fundamental difference of principle.

First there are those that look upon the capitalist political State as a fit instrument through which the workingclass can gradually bring about reforms that will ultimately result in the Co-operative Commonwealth. These look upon municipal and government ownership as "steps toward Socialism." They emphasize "immediate demands" in political platforms. Their best known world spokesman is Scheideman. They control the Second International.

Then there are those that consider the capitalist political State with its sham democracies as but an instrument of the ruling class to keep the workingclass in subjection. They hold that no reforms can be achieved through this instrument that will seriously endanger the power of the ruling class, and that to emancipate themselves the workers must organise their own power, abolish the existing capitalist political state, and under their own dictatorship develop the instruments with which to build the Industrial Republic. Their best known world spokesman is Lenine. They are organised in the Third International.

These two viewpoints are fundamentally opposed to each other. Now that their adherents are shooting at each other with machine guns in Europe, they can no longer remain together even here. Those that believe in prolonging the existing political state and those that want to abolish it do not belong in the same Party. One or the other has to get out.

Every member must now make his choice between petty bourgeois reform Socialism, as exemplified in the offialdom of the old Socialist Party, and the revolutionary principles of proletarian International Communism.

II.

Early this year it became apparent that the revolutionary element of the Party in this country had become the majority. The very logic of world events had changed the views of tens of thousands of Comrades. The overwhelming mass of the membership endorsed the principles of the "Left Wing" and elected their candidates for party offices by tremendous majorities.

In order to retain control of the Party organization machinery for the moderates, the reactionary officialdom of the Socialist Party suppressed these election returns, expelled nearly forty thousand members, suppressed the membership motions to reverse their acts, suppressed the referendum by which the membership had voted ten to one to join the Third International, and mobilized the Chicago police against their Comrades, in the Emergency Convention in Chicago.

Over fifty regularly elected delegates were kept out of the Germer convention by the Chicago police under Germers personal orders. Every possible effort was made by these delegates to secure seats in that convention, and win the official control of the Party's organization machinery for the Party's revolutionary majority. But when the Germer convention proceeded to do business without even waiting for a report from their Contest Committee every Left Wing Delegate that had already been seated withdrew, and joined with his excluded Comrades.

These delegates, representing a majority of the Party membership then met at the call of the N. F. C. that had been elected by referendum held the legal Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party; and transacted the business for which the membership had sent them.

Then and there was discarded the outgrown shell of old reactionary officialdom and compromising tactics that had been hampering the revolutionary development of the Party. Then and there was the Party transformed into a Party of Communist Socialism in accord with the mandates of the Party's revolutionary membership. As an outward token of this inward transformation that had already taken place, the name of the Party was changed to Communist Labor Party, and the hammer and sickle of the Bolsheviks was adopted as the Party's official emblem.

Let now the dead old Party bury its dead. Let us leave the opportunist reform elements in the old Socialist Party and the International of Scheideman. Let us gather the revolutionary proletarian elements in the Communist Labor Party, and set our faces toward the new day, toward the rising sun of the Communist International.

III.

Why are TWO parties of Communist Socialism now emerging out of this glorious hour? Why is there a schism in the Communist ranks?

The germ was planted by the old N. E. C. when they expelled PART of the Left Wing elements and left others in the Party. Sensing the danger in this situation a conference was held in Chicago between representatives of the expelled units and the Left Wing forces still in the Party, and it was agreed to carry on the fight WITHIN the Party for Party control by the revolutionary membership, until it had reached its logical climax in Party convention. The expelled units were to keep themselves intact, ignore their expulsions and reenter the Party at the first opportunity.

Within two weeks the Michigan—Russian Federation coalition violated this joint agreement and began boosting for a separate Party.

The question was again debated at the National Left Wing Conference in New York, and again the majority decided to carry on the struggle WITHIN the Party until the natural climax in convention. The Michigan-Russian convention call was turned down, and a motion by Fraina adopted instructing the Left Wing Council to "call a conference in Chicago for September 1st of all revolutionary elements willing to unite with a revolutionized Socialist Party or with a Communist Party organized by the LEFT WING DELEGATES SECEDING FROM THE CONVENTION OF THE SOCIALIST PARTY TO BE HELD AUGUST 30-TH."

The issue arose for a third time at the new N. E. C. meeting held in Chicago July 26th. Fraina and Ruthenberg were again present, and again opposed the Russian-Michigan convention call. Again they agreed to carry on the fight WITHIN the Party until the Emergency convention. They voted specifically to instruct A. Wagenknecht, the Executive Secretary, to rent a separate hall for the Emergency Convention to convene on August 30th.

Within a week they flopped. The Left Wing National Council which had bitterly fought the Michigan-Russian coalition split, and by majority vote abjectly capitulated before the organized power of the central Executive Committee of the Russian Federation.

As late as August 2nd the following statement, signed by Ruthenberg and Fraina, appeared in the Revolutionary Age:

> "Should the Emergency Convention rule in favor of the shameful acts of the present autocratic national Executive Committee, then the Left Wing Delegates to this Convention shall IMMEDIATELY ORGANIZE A NEW COMMUNIST PARTY, representing the vast majority of the PRESENT Socialist Party."

Nothing there about going to the convention called by the "organization Committee" of the Communist Party, but a provision was adopted to "include such Federation groups as might want to join with the Left Wing on September 1st." (Rev. Age. Aug. 2nd, page 6.)

Then The Revolutionary Age turned a sommersault, and began to play its financial masters' tune by abusing as "centrists" all those that did not join it in its flop.

IV.

Those Left Wing delegates that were not keeled over the Russian Federation Machine carried the original program, three times agreed to in Conference by Ruthenberg and Fraina, through to its logical conclusion at the Emergency Convention and did all in their power to bring amout unity between the two Communist groups.

We sent a Committee of five to meet with the Communist Party Organization committee even before the Communist Party Convention began, but were merely told to wait.

Later the Communist Convention under the absolute control of the Russian Federation machine refused even to elect a Committee to confer with us on Unity. Then their English speaking delegates went on strike and threatened to bolt, and the second day they condescended to elect a Conference Committee.

But they did not even CONSIDER uniting the two organizations. Their only answer to our invitation was that we might apply for admission to their convention as individuals, that their credentials committee would seat those that it approved as delegates, and that the rest of us would be permitted to occupy a special section in their convention hall, to look on!

We did not demand that ALL our delegates should be seated. But we did insist that if we met in joint convention it should be on an EQUAL BASIS OF COMMUNIST COMRADESHIP. We suggested that the two conference committees should act as a joint credential committee to go over the rosters of BOTH conventions and see whether there were irreconcilable elements, leaving these open for discussion. This FAIR offer was turned down by the Communist Party, and we were told again that we could only come to them as individuals giving them the absolute power to select only those that they pleased.

Our Convention then elected a different Committee, who personally invited the Communist Convention to meet us informally in a joint session, where the rank and file of the two bodies could talk over the heads of their officials, discuss with each other the problem of getting together and avoid the crime of organizing TWO parties of Communism. This offer met with the same answer as the others.

When it became apparent that the officialdom of the Communist Party would succeed in preventing Unity during the conventions, the Communist Labor Party Convention adopted the following resolution:—

"Be it resolved, that the Communist Labor Party issues a standing invitation to the Communist Party to meet, on a basis of equality, in Unity Conference, and

"That we instruct our national officials and committees to accept every such invitation from the Communist Party or from any other revolutionary workingclass organization."

This motion was adopted without one dissenting voice. It expresses the official position of the Communist Labor Party on the question of Unity today. We stand ready at ANY TIME, ANYWHERE to meet on an equal basis of Comradeship. ALL that agree with us on the principles of Communism, ALL that desire to affiliate with the Third International, for the purpose of uniting ALL Communist elements here in the United States into ONE powerful workingclass party.

V.

If there was any fundamental difference of principle between the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party, then we would not favor Unity of the two, for a lasting unity can be achieved ONLY on the basis of agreement on fundamental principles.

That such agreement on principles is a fact will be evident to any one that compares the platforms, programs and manifestos of the two parties. Both conventions based their pronouncements squarely upon that of the Third International. Both are in accord with the Left Wing Program of New York. Both are worthy expressions of the principles of International Communism.

Because of this fundamental agreement some Comrades make the mistake of assuming that the issues between them are MERELY questions of personality and ambitions of "leaders". If that were true, it would make but little difference which Party wins the Communist Comrades to its ranks.

But there is a very serious difference between the two Parties in their FORM OF ORGANIZATION, a difference that must be threshed out if the Parties meet in Unity Conference, a difference that should be noted by every Comrade before he joins either Party.

The Communist Party is being organized as a FEDERATION OF UNITS that are almost entirely independent of each other. The Communist Labor Party is being organized as ONE HOMOGENEOUS MASS.

The Communist Party has copied from the old Socialist Party its form of autonomous foreign federations. Each federation is a practically independent unit. Federation branches pay dues direct to Translators in Chicago. Once a month these translators turn over the Party's share. They and their Central Executive Committee have power at any time, by simply withholding the dues, to split their entire organization away from the Party, and smash the Party to pieces. The Communist Party has within its very form of organization the seeds of its own destruction.

The Communist Labor Party has solved this problem by simply having the foreign speaking branches pay their dues through the same channels as the English speaking branches. They will thus learn to consider themselves as inseparable parts of the Local and State organization instead of mere foreigners in a strange land. Our language federations will be encouraged in their work with a far more generous share of the dues than in the Communist Party, but their Secretaries and Executive Committees will have no power to split them away from the Party unless the membership itself demands it.

The Communist Party is developing an organization divided against itself on nationalistic lines. The Communist Labor Party is putting all, foreing as well as American born, on an egual footing of Comradeship within its ranks, on a basis of true Internationalism.

A Party organized like the Communist Party could holdtogether easily as long as it fought the reactionary Socialist Party officialdom. It may last while it contests with the Communist Labor Party for the affiliation of the Communist elements of the old Party. But when its campaign settles down to the steady grind of literature distribution and the humdrum task of winning members. One at a time, then the discordant elements within its ranks must inevitably assert themselves, and bring about more splits perhaps a final smashup.

Why build a Party on such a basis that a few leaders have the power at any time to tear down what you build? Especially when you know that some of these leaders frankly state that they believe the proper tactic is to bring about situation within the Party that will result in split after split, so as to preserve a simon pure nucleous of "leaders" to rally the proletarian hosts on the morn of the revolution?

The Communist Labor Party does not follow this policy of "exclusion". It adopts a policy of INCLUSION, and holds that ALL that agree on fundamental principles should be kept united in ONE Party. It places its reliance not so much on a nucleous of leaders, as upon the development of clear vision among the great mass of its membership. It will exert itself to educate ALL its members, and to hold and make proletarian warriors out of all that join it, unless they actually prove traitor to the working class.

The existence of TWO Communist Parties is a crime. But it is far better to have two parties, one of which is being built upon a sound basis so that it can live and grow, than to have only one Party built on such a basis that it must surely die. Already signs of disintegration can be discerned in the Communist Party. They will become more evident as the weeks go by, unless the officials of the Communist Party see their error, come into Unity Conference with the Communist Labor Party and adopt the form of organization that experience teaches to be necessary for a revolutionary workingclass Party.

VI.

It is futile to try "boring from within" the Communist Party. Any member that joins that Party with the idea of thereby forcing Unity, merely strengthens the position of the officialdom that is opposed to unity by paying his dues to them.

Only by REFUSING TO PAY DUES UNTIL THEY AGREE TO A UNITY CONFERENCE can the membership of the Communist Party force their officials to act. Refuse to pay dues to the Communist Party officials. Adopt resolutions instructing them to unite with the Communist Labor Party. Threaten that you will bolt the Communist Party unless they accept the Unity invitation before November 1st. That is the way to get action. That is the road to unity.

Comrades not yet affiliated with either Party can help to bring unity by joining at once the Communist Labor Party which demands unity and is doing all it can, without turning traitor to the membership, to make unity a fact.

If you agree with our platform and program, if you endorse the fundamental principles of Communism, if you desire to clasp hands in Communist Comradeship with the Bolsheviks and the Spartacans in the Third International, and if you believe that ALL Comrades in this country that stand on these fundamental should be in ONE Party, then join the Communist Labor Party AT ONCE.

Join NOW, and help with the tremendous task that confronts us. Help develop the organization, help fashion the instruments with which to reach America's thirty million wageworkers with the message of Emancipation, and rally them to the banners of International Communism to establish the world wide Workers Republic.

TO THIS TASK THE COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY CALLS YOU.
ANSWER TODAY, COMRAD E!

DOING BUSINESS FOR SOVIET RUSSIA

The Real Job of the Soviet Bureau in New York

By Anise

In the midst of raids by the Department of Justice and rumers of Bolshevik propaganda, the real work going on in the Soviet Bureau in New York is apt to be overlooked. And a very important work it is which Mr. Maartens, business representative of the Soviet Republic of Russia is carrying on in his rather large offices.

He isn't spending his time in any stirring up of troubles in this country, as the scared newspapers would have us believe. He is making contracts with business men; and signing up technical experts who wish to give service in Russia.

Thirty Millions on Contracts

He showed me a list of contracts already made — purchases of $30.000-000 worth of goods from American business men.

Here was $3.000.000 worth of shoes ordered from one firm and $3.000.000 worth of underwear from another. Another million went into renovated army shoes, bought from the contractor who had secured them from the U. S. government. Three millions for machinery, and more millions for farm implements.

Condensed milk and canned meats, shoes and shoes over again! Trucks and truck chassis, large tractors!

How Are They Going to Deliver?

Quite a nice little bit of business. Mr. Maartens told me that the American business men were much interested and very glad to get the business.

"We have been offered business from 1.500 firms," he said. "In fact, only one or two firms of all we have approached have turned us down. The contracts are made direct with the Soviet Government, which has a monopoly of all foreign trade. We are ready to pay either in gold or in raw materials."

"This is amazing," I said. "How do you expect to get these goods delivered into Soviet Russia?"

"Oh, well, there is that little difficulty," smiled Mr. Maartens. "Technically, of course, there is no war and no blockade. There is nothing illegal in doing business with Soviet Russia. These contracts are all signed, subject to two conditions:

"We promise to pay as soon as they procure (1) an export license from the State Department, and (2) permission for us to place funds from Moscow in the United States banks. We have the gold in Moscow, but the banking facilities here are yet to be arranged!

Business Men Besiege State Department.

"However, the business men are besieging the State Department to ask for their export license. Then there follows long delay. Sometimes they receive no answer at all. If they are too prominent to be ignored they receive evasive answers."

"Do you have offices like this in other countries?" I asked.

"Only in America and Sweden. The Swedish people want to do business with us, but the English government won't let them.

"We have 216.000 tons of flax, 100.000 tons of hemp, unlimited lumber, and many hides, furs, bristles and other raw materials, all awaiting export. We think the flax situation may help break down the blockade. Belfast needs flax badly; her mills are running part time for lack of it. Her employers are between the devil and the deep sea; they do not dare close down any further, for the workers are full of unrest and know just where flax is to be obtained.

"The housing plan in England is also halted for lack of lumber, and we have plenty. Mr. Hoover states that the ports of northern Europe are full of food ships, and the food is rotting there because Germany cannot afford to buy it. We can afford to buy it; we have plenty of raw materials to offer."

"What excuse," I asked, "can the Secretary of State give for not allowing American business men to take advantage of such good opportunity? Does Secretary Lansing take his orders from England and the international bankers?"

Mr. Maartens most discreetly refused to answer.

Getting Technical Experts for Russia

Are you an expert in any technical line, wanting to go to Russia? The Soviet Bureau has a technical department and is signing up applicants. It is true they cannot send you over yet, but they will help you prepare yourself.

Machinists, tool designers, engineers, trained chemists — all these are wanted. Six hudred in New York alone have registered and are training themselves for special jobs. Some of them are learning Russian; others are perfecting themselves in higher branches of their specialty.

"Many inventors are offering us inventions, which they don't want to give to the capitalistic world, but wish used in Russia to help the workers," I was told. "Our technical department investigates them. It is also preparing textbooks in Russian on technical subjects which will be printed in this country, because of the lack of paper in Russia.

Learning American Processes

"This technical department is securing information on the methods and processes of American industry. We have engaged men who have worked in American industry. They prepare instruction for Russia. How to make chilled-iron car wheels, various kinds of steel, vanadium, manganese, the equipment of rolling mills for seamless steel tubing — these are some of the matters we must know. The technical department also furnishes us with the specifications for our purchases here in America.

"What message have you for American labor?" I asked in leaving. But Mr. Maartens refused to be drawn into our affairs. He is the soul of discretion when it comes to interfering with the internal workings of another country.

"They should learn all they can of the precise conditions in Russia," he said, "economic, political and social — and then take such action as seems good to them."

High Lights on Mexico

Collected by Anise from an Address by Louis Lochner at the Fellowship Conference.

Eighty forts and barracks now line our Mexican border. Most of these have been erected since the armistice. Six or seven in Arizona, an equal number in California, the rest in Texas.

"The Yankee Peril" is a common phrase in South America. The reputation we are geting in other parts of this hemisphere is one to make good Americans pause.

Mexico has become the "Switzerland of America" — the place to which political refugees go to escape tyranny. Our United States used to be the asylum for political prisoners, but since we have taken on the job of rounding up all rebels and returning them to their masters, Mexico is now the refuge. She is inviting the Hindu nationalists, the German anti-militarists, the down-and-outers of the world, and is allotting lands to them. Incidentally she is getting intelligent new citizens who will help train and educate her Indian population.

This is one of the reason the autocrats of all countries have it in for Mexico.

For many years the anti-militarists of all nations have wished to establish the precedent that men who go from one country to make investments in another should abide by the laws of their new abode and should not invoke the armies of their native land to follow and defend them.

Mexico was the first country to act on this. One of the quarrels which foreign capitalists have with her is the law she passed. No foreigner may now acquire property in Mexico without going before the Foreign Affairs Department and signing a statement that he is taking this property on the same conditions as a Mexican citizen and renounces all right of the protection of his own government as far as his property affairs are concerned.

A fine law! But do the big oil interests like it? Not a little bit!

The Labor Charter of Mexico is written into the Constitution itself. It fixes a maximum eight-hour day, with even hours on night shifts. Women and children under 16 are not allowed to engage in night work or dangerous occupations.

A mother must stop gainful occupation three months before and after childbirth; but she must be paid her wages during this time, and her job must be held for her. A nursing mother is entitled to two periods off of half an hour each during the working day.

The congressional committee investigating alleged outrages in Mexico makes no attempt at fairness. It assumes guilt at once and only considers how to punish.

Senator Fall, who heads it, has still a lot of explaniing to do about letters he sent to Villla.

Catchwords and devices of all kinds are employed to incite war against Mexico. "Pro-Germanism" used to be the word; but now "Bolshevism" is a more up-to-date accusation. The "yellow perill" is coming in by way of Mexico.

Victims of outrages in Mexico are imported and exhibited. Strange that they never import and exhibit the victims of outrages in Paterson, Bisbee and Butte.

A Message from G. Bernard Shaw.

The Church Socialist League having asked G. Bernard Shaw for a message on their work, receiving from the sanest man in the world the following:

Dear Sir:

Your invitation to me to address an Encyclical to the Protestant Episcopal Church of America would, if I complied with it, expose us to the retort that you are not the Primate and I am not the Pope.

Besides, if the blood of millions of their fellow creatures did not move the Protestant churches to protest, nor the Catholic churches to proclaim that in the kingdom of heaven there are no frontiers, can you suppose that a few drops from my ink bottle would have any effect on them? I am duly flattered by your assumption that the men who would not listen to Christ would listen to Bernard Shaw; but the churches have come out of the war so badly that if they did listen to me now I should ask, like the Greek orator, 'What foolish thing have I said?'

All the men and women in America to whom anything I could say would be likely to appeal seem to be in prison, where my words cannot reach them. If any of the few who were faitful to a religion which I, being only a connoisseur and not a devotee, do not profess, are still at large, I can only congratulate them. I can hardly congratulate the churches on having missed a supreme opportunity, for I am afraid that supreme opportunity may prove to have been their last chance.

As I am by family tradition and baptism an Irish Protestant, perhaps I had better add that of all the ecclesiastics in our pseudo-Christendom, the Pope and the late Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick set an example which only a few British and American bishops had the grace to follow.

Faithfully,
G. BERNARD SHAW.

Soviet Bureau Warns of Capitalist Press Lies on Russ "Defeats"

New York.

In connection with press reports on Russia, the Russian Soviet Bureau here issued the following statement yesterday:

In the interest of truth we find it necessary once again to warn the American public against placing too much faith in the present sensational press campaign depicting alleged anti-Soviet victories.

The total absence in the alleged news dispatches of official communications from the Soviet government is an additional reason for not taking the printed stories at their face value. It is admitted by every informed person that the Soviet government, with absolute frankness, keeps the world informed as to events in Russia, regardless of whether the news is favorable or unfavorable to the Soviet government.

The foreign office of Soviet Russia sends every day wireless communications containing such information. These communications daily reach the United States as well as other countries.

In most cases the news is never given out to the public except when it contains admission of some reverses. The fact that no such information is given out now clearly shows that alleged dispatches from London, Copenhagen, Stockholm and other notorious centers of lying propaganda against Soviet Russia do not state the facts of the situation.

Denikin's Straits Admitted.

But, even on the face of such reports, which emanate from sources hostile to the Soviet government, i is obvious that there is not an irresistible advance of the counter-revolutionary forces. While it may be true that Orel has been taken by Denikin's forces, it is admitted in the same dispatches that Denikin's army is hard pressed on its right flank, having been compelled to abandon vast territories to the southeast of Orel, and it is known that Denikin's rear is menaced by revolts.

It is also admitted by opponents of Soviet Russia that Denikin is meeting with obstinate oppositon and severe reverses not only n the territory around Kiev, but southwest and north of Kiev.

In view of these admitted facts the situation seems to be that Denikin's advance to Orel, where the Soviet government was not prepared to place sufficient forces in the field because of the more important general offensive against Denikin's right flank, is nothing but a panicky result of his being despertely pressed on both flanks.

This pressure may result in the encircling of such Denikin forces which have advanced along a narrow line to the north. They are obviously in imminent danger of being caught far away from their bases and thus face utter destruction.

Reports Called Unreliable.

The reports of the alleged advance of the counter-revolutionary forces in the north also are singularly untrustworthy. The only significant thing about this news is that it shows the boundless hypocrisy of the British pretensions of opposition to the German Baltic Junkers.

General Yudenitch, the commander of the so-colled Northwestern Russian army, is nothing but a tool of Von der Goltz and other Baltic Junkers, who together with Russian reactionaries of Yudenitch, Denikin and Kolchak type are striving to re-establish monarchy n Russia.

Von der Goltz has been kept in the Baltic with the connivance of Britain. The British played a double game—on one hand trying to create a barrier against Soviet Russia by using as their tools nationalistic movements in Esthonia, Lithuania and Letvia—on the other hand betraying these movements by seeking an alliance with the Baltic Junkers led by Von der Goltz, who are arch-enemies not only of Soviet Russia but of the nationalistic aspirations of the Baltic peoples.

Peace Considered.

Lithuania, Esthonia and Letvia have no interest whatsoever to strengthen either the Russian counter-revolutionists or the Baltic barons, and so the result has been that these countries, in the interest of their very existence, have been seriously considering peace with Soviet Russia.

The situation in this respect has developed to the point where peace negotiations were to start at Dorpat, October 12, and they would have undoubtedly led to an understanding between these peoples and Soviet Russia.

If such a peace is reached, it is obvious that it will altogether destroy the British and French plan to starve Soviet Russia and to re-establish monarchy in that country. The main driving force of the present campaign against Russia is, therefore, nothing but a desperate attempt, at any cost, to prevent such approachments between Soviet Russia and the Baltic nations. But the campaign will not succeed. The Russian workers, as well as the working people in the Baltic provinces, understand full well the real significance of all these criminal machinations, and the Russian Soviet government is well prepared to thwart all attacks.

Business Men Impatient.

There is also another very important reason for the present campaign of lies, and especially for the desperate efforts on the part of certain Alied governments to extend the starvation blockade of Russia by asking Germany and remnants of Austria to join the blockade.

Many commercial interests have long ago lost their patience with the present Allied policy toward Soviet Russia which not only is bringing the Russian people untold suffering but also is quite insane from the point of view of commercial peace.

Within the past two months there have been definite steps taken by business men in many countries, and especially in America, to open trade with Soviet Russia. The efforts in this direction have reached a point where great pressure is being brought to bear on all governments with the view of opening trade relations. To thwart such negotiations, the present campaign of lies has been instituted.

Workers Demand Peace.

Finally, the laboring masses in Allied countries and in Germany are becoming more and more insistent in their demands that their rulers cease the criminal and senseless war against the Russian workers. This dissatisfaction has resulted in mass demonstrations everywhere, and refusals to load supplies for the Russian monarchists.

The lies wherewith such demonstrations have been answered are becoming stale, especially in view of the ever increasing abilty of Soviet Russia. It, therefore, becomes necessary to create an impression of an impending downfall of the Russian republic and to simulate a "German menace," which in realty exists nowhere but in the acts of the Allies themselves.

We feel confident that the workers everywhere will not let themselves be deceived by such obviously false propaganda.

To sum up, the situation is as follows:

1. Denikin's campaign in the South is threatened with annihiliation. His "advance on Moscow" is actually a retreat in the only direction where at this moment there is no concentrated military opposition, but where he instantly will be confronted with such, his "advance" thus making him run right into the lion's lair without a chance of a return to his bases.

2. The Baltic nations are determined

Communist Labor Party Officials Out on Bonds

The five officials of the Communist Labor Party, Walter Bronstrup, Cleveland secretary, L. E Katterfeld, organization director, Chas. Baker, organizer, A. Wagenknecht National Secretary and E. T. Allison, editor, arrested by Loyal American League operatives and police at a Meeting at Acme Hall, Cleveland, Oct. 16, and charged with vialotion of the "criminal sindicalist law, were released on $1,000 bonds each at 2 o'clock the next morning.

A. W. Moskovitz offered bonds for the five jailed comrades but it was some hours before a judge could be reached and the amount of bonds set and consent given to their release.

It was nearly 2 a. m. when the turnkey at Central Station turned the key in the lock of the steel barred door of the "bull pen" and announced "all-aboard boys", awakening some from slumber upon the two inch board "cushions" of the cells.

Up stairs in the office they were met by comrades Marguarite Prevey and Moskovitz and in a moment were in Moskovitz' big machine whirling over the city streets catching up a few odds—and ends of business before retiring to "civilized" beds.

At the morning session of Judge Moylan's court the preliminary hearing was set for Thursday, Oct. 30, at which time it is expected that the five comrades will be bound over to the grand jury.

ALLIED CONTROL OF PASSPORTS TO RUSSIA SCORED BY SWEDISH PARTIES.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 23.—The Swedish parliament, in secret session today, began to discuss Sweden's attitude on the request of the entente allies that the neutral countries join in a blockade of soviet Russia.

The Socialists predict a refusal to acquiesce, while the Liberals and Conservatives said that a joint answer from the northern government is most likely and that this will point out that a de facto blockade exists and nothing is to be gained through a formal declaration.

All the political parties protest against the proposal to submit to passport control by the allied forces of travelers between Sweden and Russia, which is declared to be part of the blockade proposal and is denounced as being an unbearable humiliation.

GERMANS REFUSE TO BLOCKADE RUSSIA

BERLIN, Oct. 23.—The Germon Government is inclined to delay answering the Allies' recent proposal for an Economic blocade of Russia and if it does answer it will refuse to join.

The old saying that like experiences beget sympathy is here exemplified—Germany knows from experience, how terrible a thing an economic blockade may be made.

COMMUNISTS, UNITE!

An Appeal to the rank and file of the Communist Party and Communist Labor Party.

Every true Communist finds in the present unfortunate division of our ranks much cause for anxiety and views it as a condition not to be tolerated. Whatever may have been the causes for the catastrophe which occurred at the Chicago conventions which created this deplorable condition within the Communist ranks, the rank and file of the membership are demanding that every obstruction to a unity of the two Left Wing parties shall be immediately removed to make way for one great party of Communism in this country.

Weeks have passed since the Chicago conventions. The membership is coming to a realization of what occured there and the thot that lies at the bottom of all its conclusions is that whatever differences there are in the organization and tactics of the two parties they are infinitesimal as compared to the greater question of UNITY. The rank and file of both sections see no fundamental differences between the two parties. And there are none. None are claimed by either side. The programs of both parties are based upon the program of the Third International formed at Moscow. Words, sentences and paragraphs are lifted almost bodily from that program and placed in the programs of both Communist parties. What differences exist in tactics and inner party construction are not of such a nature as should create a permament division of the two sections. They can be threshed out in a unity convention to the entire satisfaction of the rank and file if not of a few leaders and so-called philosophers who take it upon themselves to believe that the mantle of Lenine has fallen upon their shoulders.

"All power to the workers" is the slogan of both parties. "All power to the rank and file within the party" is a slogan which we must adopt in our party work. It is especially necessary that it be adopted at this critical period and the precept lived up to the fullest extent. Let the rank and file assert its rights and we will have one strong party of Communism in this country at once.

The conditions existing at the present time within the party ranks are most deplorable. The situation in Cleveland is a replica of the vast majority of locals thruout the country where the membership has made a decision for one or the other parties. For which ever party the majority of the membership has decided to affiliate, it has meant little. The other party has immediately organized. Affiliations by locals has meant little except the advantage which control of the organization machinery gives. The membership has immediately split up into the two camps. Tried and true comrades who have worked together shoulder to shoulder now find themselves divided.

This conditions must be brought to an end. It is intolerable, without sense or reason. Thousands of members, true revolutionists as any who remain in either parties are dropping out discouraged and disheartened because of the schism between the two Left Wing elements. Strong locals are split wide open and thus weakened. Our press is weakened on account of this division. Funds which should be used in propaganda and organization among the uninlightened workers are diverted toward building up dual organizations, duplication of effort and in establishing headquarters etc.

The rank and file are demanding UNITY. They are going to have unity. They are going to have it in spite of any and all obstructions that have been or will be placed in their path. To the rank and file this appeal is made. To those who by their sacrifice of time, money and effort have made this working class revolutionary movement possible, who have been the Jimmy Higginses in the party, whose nickles and dimes have paid for the propaganda and organization work; who have served faithfully and oft times, tho sorry we are to have to say it, without honor or recognition; these thousands and tens of thousands we urge: DEMAND UNITY. DEMAND OF YOUR OFFICIALS THE REMOVAL OF EVERY OBSTRUCTION TOWARD UNITY. Demand that the officials of the Communist Party take favorable action upon the invitation of the Communist Labor Party for a Unity Conference.

If any stand between unity of the two Left Wing elements throw them out, brand them for what they are, ENEMIES OF THE WORKERS.

Streng then the demand of the Communist Labor Party for Unity.

In unity there is strength. In unity we can strike from the throat of labor the blood-stained hands of capitalism and establish a world of Communist comradeship.

Yours for a united Communism
ELMER T. ALLISON.

Debs is Anxious to do His Part in Steel Strike

By DAVID KARSNER.

E. V. Debs is taking a lively interest in the great steel strike. He is hoping that the workers will stand firm and bring the United States Steel trust and its subsidiaries to their knees. The pale blue eyes of the battle-scarred champion of the American working class flashed fire as he talked of the steel strike.

There was a note of longing in his voice as he narrated the incidents of the conflict as he had read them in the conservative papers published here.

"If I should get out of this prison today, I would be in Gary or Pittsburg tomorrow," he said. "That is exactly where I belong, and that is exactly where I would go. Mr. Palmer and Mr. Wilson and the capitalists know that perfectly well, and that is why they keep me here.

"I am not being kept as prisoner here for the speech I made at Canton in June, 1918. I am being kept here for the speech I would make at Gary or at Pittsburg in 1919. I know that as well as I know my name.

Eager to Take up Work Again.

"If I should get out of prison today I would continue my work in behalf of the workers for Socialism where I left off in April of this year when I went to Moundsville prison. The intervening time, while it has been a waste, could be easily made up by renewed activity and fresh endeavors."

I was talking with Debs in one of the reception rooms of the Atlanta Federal prison. A large table was between us. There was in the room only Debs, Samuel Castleton, an Atlanta lawyer who has recently interested himself in Debs' case, the guard and myself.

Warden Fred G. Zerbst was absent from the prison Wednesday afternoon otherwise the interview would probably have take place in the warden's private office, where I sat with Debs on two previous occasions.

Debs in Fine Spirits.

The interview was to have lasted only half an hour, but at the end of that time Castleton obtained an extension of another half hour from the captain of the guards. Everything of a currently important nature was discussed by Debs in that hour. He was well informed and in fine spirits.

Debs is making the supreme sacrifice for his convictions. He knows that he could come out of prison tomorrow if he would but say the word to the Attorney General. As a matter of fact he need never have come to prison at all if he had but given the high sign of repentence to the Attorney General.

Won't Retract Any Utterance.

"My attitude has not changed one whit since I came to prison. I would not take back a single word; I would not retract a single sentence. I will make no promises of any kind or nature to obtain my freedom. It would not be freedom if obtained by any retraction, promises or apostacy. To me that would be the worst slavery.

"Clarence Darrow was here not long ago. I could have said but a word to him to take back to Washington and I could have walked out of this place a real prisoner, with actual guilt festering in my soul and with unclean conscience for the rest of my days."

I had heard Debs talk this way before many times. It was not new to me, but it was inspiring and thrilling no less, and the three of us who heard this great man, this supreme martyr of modern time, speak thus could do nought but marvel and gape.

Sees Labor on Crucifix.

"I can stay in this place a thousand years, I can go to the stake without the bat of an eye, for the principles upon which I have based my life. There is no bravery in this. I could not do otherwise. I am no more responsible, actually, for the position I am taking than the man who might take a different position. It is simply my nature.

"I am conscious of no martyrdom. But I am absolutely sure that I have lived long enough to witness the crucifixion of the working class on the cross of capitalism. And we have come at last to the resurrection.

"We will take the prostrate body of labor from the cross, breathe into it the breath of love and purpose and dedicate it to the nobler impulses of life."

Sustained by Comrades' Love.

I mentioned to Debs that when the New York Socialists opened their city campaign at the Lexington Theater a week or two ago the mention of his name by one of the speakers was echoed by thousands of voices.

I told him that every Socialist and liberal publication in the country was tireless in its praise of him, and that he was not being forgotten by his friends and Comrades. His eyes instantly became most. He was moved to the depths of his soul.

"I know that is so without the telling," he said. "I can feel in my prison room the vibrations of my Comrades. I can feel the beat of their hearts as one for the revolution, and I can visualize the light that shines in their souls and is reflected in their faces. I am sustained by that knowledge. It will sustain me for a thousand years."

"But we do not wish to sustain you one single day in prison," I put in.

Baldwin-Felz Frame-up Fails to Convict

By LAWRENCE DWYER
Oct. 18. Special to Ohio Socialist.

The Jury in the case of Toney Stafford, charged with others in the shooting into the coal tipple at the Glen White mine on Friday, Nov. 16th., 1917, failed to agree after having the case 16 hours, and Judge Mc. Ginness discharged the Jury at 10 A. M. this morning.

Two weeks time was consumed in getting all the evidence and facts before the jury, I attended the trial from the beginning to the end, The miners showed particular interest in the trial by being in attendance at all sessions of the trial, and while the court house was always crowded no demonstrations was made at any time to interrupt the court, and Judge McGinness remarked after the trial it was one of the most orderly courts ever conducted.

The City of Beckley, was crowded with Baldwin-Felz men, the fourth floor of the Beckley Hotel reserved for them., some of them remained in the hotel all during the trial.

The substance of the evidence presented by the prosecution was submitted by Thos. MacGinnes, Geo. Lucas, Dorr Snuffer and Carl Kram, who swore that they, with Toney Stafford and others were the ones who did the shooting, and the four named above also swore that they shot with the intent to kill, and they further stated that they did not think it was wrong to kill, and also they said they did'nt think it was wrong to swear to a lie. On cross questioning they stated they were in the custody and protection of the Baldwin-Felz men and that their expenses etc. were paid by the Baldwin-Felz, they further said that they had repeated their statements to the Baldwin-Felz as much as Fifty times, they further stated that Toney Stafford was with them at Lester and Glen White on the 15th and 16th of Nov. 1917.

The Defense presented seventeen witnesses who swore that Toney Stafford was in Beckley on those dates and was not at Glen White at the time of the shooting.

Lawyers for the prosecution devoted nearly all their argument to the fact that Toney Stafford was an Italian.

International Board Member Lawrence Dwyer's name was not mentioned by any of the witnesses during the trial, and the trial brought out the fact that he was no way implicated by the one that confessed to the shooting.

It is the common belief of the people of this locality that the case is nothing more than a frame up by the Baldwin-Phelz thugs against the United Mine Workers Organization.

PREVENT THE DANGER OF INTERVENTION

An appel to American workers.
By Fulgencio C. Luna, Senior

In this great moment of the world's history, the Communist Party of Mexico has a wonderful opportunity to educate the Mexican masses and prepare them for the Dawning Day that is not far ahead.

But the one supreme task that must first be given our attention is that of preventing intervention. If we can keep Mexico safe and free from the clutches of foreign capitalists, we can lead the people of this beautiful land into the full enjoyment of the fruits of their labor, the Dictatorship of the Proletariat and Industrial Democracy. If Mexico is conquered our work will be a thousand times more difficult for we shall then have the whole force of the mightiest imperialist government turned against us. The Carranza government is very liberal and while not Communist, allows the workers considerable latitude in organizing. Labor can develop freely if home

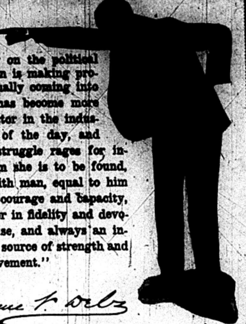
Debs says to You



"It is not only on the political field that woman is making progress and gradually coming into her own. She has become more and more a factor in the industrial agitation of the day, and wherever the struggle rages for industrial freedom she is to be found, side by side with man, equal to him in intelligence, courage and capacity, and his superior in fidelity and devotion to the cause, and always an inspiration and a source of strength and light to the movement."

Eugene V. Debs

Debs Anxious to Help

Only One Way to Free Him.

"Very well, then; let the Comrades carry on the good work everywhere; let them all get into the track for Socialism; let them make their message and their word felt and heard at Washington. When the capitalists of America realize that the workers mean business, then, and not until then, the prison doors will open at once for every political and industrial prisoner behind the bars.

"That is the only way I can come out, and, moreover, that is the only way I want to come out."

Debs reiterated to us on Wednesday his oftrepeated wish that he does not wish any one or any group, or any organization, Socialist or otherwise, to interest themselves in his personal behalf.

He does want, however, the fight to be made on broad-gauged lines, one that would release the scores of I. W. W. prisoners in Leavenworth the same as the Socialists at Atlanta. Debs asked me to say for him that liberty obtained on any other basis would be repugnant to him.

Would Emulate Liebknecht.

"That is the way I want to come out That is the only decent way. I want to come out as Liebknecht came out. The proletariat of Germany shook the empire to its foundations, and the beasts of Berlin readily found it convenient to unlock the barred doors."

The conversation veered back again to the steel strike, on which subject Debs said:

"I see in the present struggle between the steel workers and the corporation the old battle that has waged with increasing intensity since time immemorial. While I know that the leaders and striking workers do not counsel violence, I am aware of the tactics that have always been adopted by the steel companies, mining operators and other large concerns against their protesting workers.

Always Oposed to Violence.

"There companies have their own police force, which amounts to a private army, and if this private army, like the Pennsylvania State Cossacks, is not sufficient to club the workers into submission, the state or Federal government steps in to make sure the job is done right.

"I had hoped that the steel struggle would be fought without bloodshed, but that is impossible where companies are allowed private armies, and may draw at will upon public military. I have always been opposed to violence and bloodshed.

"I am in this prison today because I refused to forsake the tenets of peace. I believe in the commandment, 'Thou shalt not kill.' Nothing is more sacred to me than human life."

Tired and Haggard After Talk.

I mentioned to Debs the names of a number of his friends who had inquired about his health. To all of his Comrades he sent his love and greetings. The stout guard with boyish face, who sat at the end of the broad table with his hat on and a thick club in his hand, jerked his watch out and announced the end of the second half hour.

Debs stood up at once. He looked tired and haggard. He had exercised himself too much, no doubt.

Outside the doors there was much shuffling of feet, as of men on the march. The guard opened the door, and a long, double file of convicts was marching through a stretch of the corridor into the messroom. Debs could not pass through the door while these fellow prisoners were on the march. He stood with his back to the wall, not two feet from the double column of perhaps a thousand men in prison blue and gray.

We who had just left him could not pass through the opposite door until the last prisoner had come through. I looked back to the wall, close enough to the marching men to have touched their shoulders with his hand.

Man after man in both files saluted Debs by a slight lift of the arm, a quick jerk of the hand or a nod o the head. Not one word was spoken; not one face turned when it passed him. Debs acknoledged the greetings of every man who greeted him, slightly nodded his head by a quick, jerky movement accompanied by a smile. It takes time for a thousand men to pass a given point.

Debs was standing with folded arms. Many of those who passed him were Socialists, and all of them were workers. As the last man swung through the white marble doorway, Debs was swung into the end of the line, bringing up the rear. Two heavy guards, carrying thick clubs, stepped in back of him.

"May Drop Dead Any Minute."

The shoulders of the humanist were more stooped than than I had ever seen them. There was not that accustomed springy movement in his step. He was tired. His figure disappeared at the rounding of another corridor.

Only an hour before one of the prison physicians who has come to know Debs intimately, and who spends much time with him in social chat, had hung his head and looked at the tips of his shoes when I put a searching question to him concerning the health of Debs. He would not tell me, but I was told that a physian who had seen Debs recently said: "He may drop dead any minute."

The imprisonment of Eugene V. Debs is stirring this nation deeper than an anchor would plow in the bed of the ocean during a storm.

Soviet Bureau Warns

to make peace with Soviet Russia, frustrating Allied intentions to use them as tools against the Russian workers. The Baltic peoples are as hostile to Yudenitch as to Von the Goltz, but the British are supporting both of them. Yudenitch openly and Von der Goltz secretly, thus betraying the promises given by Britain to the Baltic nationals.

3. The British pretensions of opposition to von der Goltz are an unmitigated lie which is being used for the purpose of deceiving the British public opinion into a belief that "the German menace" demands the sending of additional troops to the Baltic coast. If such troops are permitted to be sent they will be used, not against the German Jungers, but in alliance with these Junkers against the workers of Russia.

Allies Forming Aliance.

4. Far from opposing the menace of German Junker designs on Russia, the Allied governments, and particularly Britain, are making an alliance with Germany and Austria against Soviet Russia. The announced demands of the Allies that Germany and Austria should participate in the criminal and brutal blockade of Russian ports is sufficient evidence hereof.

Some papers have referred to the situation in the Baltic as the reopening of the world war. It is true in a sense, but only in this sense. The reactionaries of the world, Allied and German alike, stand ready to sacrifice millions of lives of their peoples and of the Russian people in a last desperate effort to crush the Russian revolution, and, thereby, to remove the mightiest obstacle to the establishment of oligarchical despotism all over the world.

In this campaign are at stake the interests, not of the Russian workers alone, but of every labor and progressive interest of the world. Rather than come to a sensible understanding with Russia, the reactionaries among the Allies stand ready to plunge the world into new chaos and bloodshed on the slim chance that out of the shambles they shall be able to secure their threatened class interests.

It remains to be seen whether the plain pople will stand for such plans.

Soviet Still Holds Radio.

The above statement was written Thursday. Secretary Santeri Nuorteva of the Russian Soviet Bureau was asked by The Call yesterday whether the alleged Russian dispatches carried by the day's papers threw any new light on the situation.

"They certainly do," was the answer. "They most conclusively prove that our doubts about the veracity of the entire press campaign are well founded.

"A dispatch from London printed in the Globe today admits that wireless dispatches are continuously being sent by the Soviet government from the owerful radio station at Tsarskoe Selo.

Allies Dare Not Tell Fate.

"This conclusively proves not only that Yudenitch has not advanced as near to Petrograd as the fake dispatches would have us believe, but also adds color to the situation by showing that the Allies do not dare to print the facts as stated by the Soviet government itself. It is clear that such facts are concealed by the Allies not because they are unfavorable to Soviet Russia.

"The only Soviet disptach which has passed the British censorship shows that Kiev has been captured by Soviet troops and the dispatch states that the attack against Kiev was so sudden that Denikin had no time to cross the Dnieper river, but had to retire in panicky flight towards the north.

"This fact bears out the suggestion made in the above statement that the capture of Orel really is nothing but a result of a disordered flight due to pressure from both flanks.

ADVISING THE IMPOSSIBLE.

With commendable foresight the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor is distributing among 12.000 families under its care, circulars warning against a recurrence of the influenza epidemic. These circulars contain numerous rules of health and personal hygiene which are of great interest, especially when one recalls that they are commended to persons living in some of the worst slum sections of the great metropolis. "Avoid crowds" is the second rule on the list — easily observed, forsooth, by families living thousonds to the single block, hundreds to the single house, scores to the single floor, four or five to the single room! Again, "keep the home well ventilated and be sure there is plenty of fresh air day and night"— an easy rule for those to whom air and light are luxuries as rare as tenderloin steaks or silk dresses! "Avoid fatigue," is another injunction — attractive to those who labor early and late at exhausting tasks which never end! "Eat three uniform meals a day"— this at time when the cost of living was never so high, and three meals a day never before so far beyond the reach of the majority of city dwellers! "Keep warm and keep dry" is as excellent as it is surely impossible for those who buy coal by the bucket, and wear clothing about as adequate for protection against winter weather as sheets of paper. As for the succinct command, "bathe frequently," we commend this to anybody familiar with the ablutionary facilities of the average city tenement for fitting comment! An examination of these rules in their entirety convinces us that they could be observed with difficulty by those earning two or three thousand dollars a year — with ease only by those enjoing ten thousand dollars a year or more. When will our physicians, social workers, reformers learn that the poor are not able to practice even the elementary laws of physical and moral health? Shall we never understand that adequate income is the first and fundamental step toward the protection, emancipation and redemption of both the individual and society?

The Debs Case

There has been, it seems to me, quite recently a decided change in the entire national psychology. A few weeks ago the persecutory mania which had been developed partly as a result of the overstrain of war conditions and partly as a direct result of malicious propaganda, reached the climax. The witch-burning fever was at its height. ....The crisis came, I believe, when Eugene Debs was sent to serve his 10-years sentence in the Moundsville penitentiary. The intense wave of feeling which swept over the country when Debs was sent to prison seems to have brought a realization to many, if not all, the leaders of the forces of reaction that they had gone far enough, and perhaps too far.

There were hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of men and women who had loyally supported the government in a war which they believed to be righteous, who had condemned the majority report of the St. Louis Socialist convention, for which Debs stood sponsor, and who had acquiesced even in the arbitary suppression of free speech during the actual period of hostilities, who nevertheless felt that the imprisonment of Debs for 10 years was unjust and unwise.

They knew that the sentence of 10 years meant for the courageous and gentle-hearted man a life sentence, and they knew also that the revolutionary influence of Eugene V. Debs speaking from Moundsville penitentiary was 100 times more potent than that of Eugene V. Debs speaking from his home in Terre Haute.

These liberals and radicals who deplored the Debs sentence did not want a revolution, but, with equal ardor, they did not want the espionage act converted into what seemed to them an instrument for the punishment of men who were actively opposed to the existing economic and social order. They knew that active agents of the German government had been given sentences which were no heavier than that imposed upon Debs. They knew that there had not been a single effective prosecution of any one of the thousands of profiteers who, by de- shoddy and adulterated goods and defective munitions to the army and navy, had done more to interfere with the successful prosecution of the war than would a thousand speeches such as that for which Debs was convicted.

PRISON NOCTURE
By Ralph Chaplin

Outside the storm is swishing to and fro;
The wet wind hums its colorless refrain;
Against the walls and dripping bars, the rain
Beats with a rythm like a song of woe.

Dimmed by the lightning's ever fitful glow,
The purple arc-lamps blur each steaming pane;
The thunder rumbles o'er the darkened plain;
The cells are hushed and silent, row on row.

Fall, fruitful drops, upon the parching earth,
Fall, and revive the living sap of spring;
Blossom the fields with wonder once again.
And in all hearts awaken to new birth
Those visions and endeavors that will bring
A fresh, sweet morning to the world of men!

Poverty is a beast of prey which chases the song birds of joy and gladness out of the heart.

Competition is a war of individuals for profit; war is a competition of the individuals for profit.

In reconstructing society, shall the worker organize to disarm the despot or shall he wait for the despot to further organize the worker into a bond-slave?

Activity is the law of life but excessive action becomes an element of death.

Prevent Intervention

rule and local self-government continue, for any government by Mexicans will be more disposed to favor labor than capital, since labor is Mexican here and capital is foreign. Therefore, it is very necessary just now for us to direct all our efforts toward the preservation of Mexico's national integrity.

The Communist Party of Mexico is naturally concentrating its energy on opposing intervention and it believes that its comrades in the United States should give a large portion of their efforts to this same cause. We must not allow this crime of intervention to be committed. We must not allow the rulers to hurl the workers into another terrible war. We must prevent them from again demonstrating their power over the toilers; instead, we must demonstrate our class-consciousness and refuse to permit them to make fools of us again.

When the workers of the two countries become sufficiently strong to deter the capitalists permamently from their wicked plot, we sholl be free to go ahead with the vaster work of Communism.

With a loaded gun (the danger of intervention) pointed at them, the workers of Mexico cannot do much, so we must remove that gun. Then we can do things for the cause.

THE BLACK SHEEP

By Long and Leaky.

Chapt. III.
The Awakening.

The discussion on the subject of race antagonism had started a train of thought in Jack's brain. He was painfully aware that he had lived in a very limited world, as far as social phenomena were concerned. In fact he had not been aware that such a thing as race antagonisms existed. He had never seen a Negro or a Chinaman or a Jap. In fact he had never seen any one whose language he could not speak. It is true he knew the Indians but he was not antagonistic to them. He did not hate them. He considered them a kind of grown-up children, romantically interesting, and let it go at that.

He turned the entire problem as stated by George and Herman over and over in his brain and for a while there seemed to be no solution for the enigma of the race antagonism of which these men had spoken. It was while wrestling with this problem that he ventured to ask the engineer the question, why it was that the people did not seem to hate the Indians; to which the engineer replied by asking another question. "How many Indians does your dad employ?"

"None", the boy answered.

"Well then, there is no cause for antagonism. The Indian demands no share in your property. There was a time that he did, or to put it more truthfully, that you demanded a share in his; and at that time you hated each other like hell. You got what the Indian had and therefore there is no longer any excuse for hating him. There is no more to be taken from him. But don't fool yourself into the belief that the Indian loves you."

"I see your point" said the boy thoughthfully as he turned to his task at the fire box.

While it was true that he saw the point, it was all he did see. The body of the argument was as yet dark to him altho its vastness crowded itself upon him. He found himself asking the question, just how much of this is fact? How much is fancy? For it was a characteristic of his mind never to accept any statement on any subject as final, the truth of which could not be verified by observation and experiment. His experience with the bewhiskered guardians of the faith, and the parson at Westfield had convinced him that sincerity of conviction was no criterion of fact. He had proven to his on satisfaction that a man might be full of inspiration yet hopelessly lack information, or as he phrased it "A man may be a sincere fool."

Jack was awakening; awakening to a new life of which he was a part; the problems of which he had to share, and the facts of which were as yet entirely beyond his grasp. His brain worked like a trip hammer, steadily and presistently but it could get no adequate grasp of the problem. More than once he wished for the evining that he might hear the men talk again; he wanted to sit at the feet of his masters. Not to receive their opinions, but if possible to separate their facts from their fancies.

He remembered that Herman had compared race antagonism to class antagonism, and by some working of the law of, "the association of ideas," he remembered those, to him, strange words, uttered by his chance companion in the harvest fields—"ethics and economics." Were these phenomena of which his companion spoke in any way expressions of the meaning of these words.

That evening when they were seated in their customary place behind the engine. Jack asked the engineer the question, "what is your definition of ethics?"

"To be ethical is to conduct yourself in such a manner as not to offend, or injure those who are in authority. In other words don't do anything that will hurt the interest of your economic, political, or religious masters. It may be summed up in the words of St. Paul "be obediant unto the powers that be." Good-ethics are such conduct as the masters approve in their slaves.

"That is the phase of ethics in which you are interested. Ethics between capitalists is the law of club and fang until that porcupine called labor raises his bristles, then capitalists all make common cause upon their common enemy the militant working class. To do that constitutes their ethics for themselves. Their ethics for you and I are that we shall work cheap, long hours, under conditions that are not expensive to them, that we shall be thankful to God for the fact that while we are miserably poor we are not actually dead, and that when the masters of different lands get into a quarrel among themselves over the products they have stolen from labor that then we shall be ready to enthusiastically kill one another and ask no questions. The capitalist want it so that we will accept crowns, harps, white robes, and much singing after we are dead, in lieu of cash while we live. Ethics, my boy, is like every thing else in capitalist society to be explained upon the basis of the class struggle. It's all a problem of economics. Keep this in mind that whatever the capitalists proclaim as good, that, you can safely suspect as bad. If you are ethical to the capitalist class, then you are a traitor to yourself. Does that make the proposition clear?"

"Yes, I think it does. If I understand you rightly, then ethics is a mode of conduct approved by the masters of the world, is that it?" he asked uncertainly.

For on hour or so the conversation oscillated back ond forth between George and Herman. They again reviewed the different race characteristies and the economic and telluric conditions that gave rise to them. Especially did they discuss the difference between the Russian and Japanese. Dwelling much on the possibilities of a civilized orient and a consequent yellow peril. Needless to say the boy was absorbingly interested in the discussion, but as happens with many a man, who listens to such discussions he was unfamiliar with its terminology; and hence much of it escaped his understanding.

Finally he broke into the conversation by saying. "I hope you will excuse my ognorance but I wish that you would tell me just what you mean by the term economics? It was Herman who replied "economics is the science of management." I believe you aree familiar with the Bible. If so, then you have heard of old testament economy and new testament economy meaning the way in which human affairs were managed during the epochs of these writings. Political economy is the science of managing the state, the legislative, judicial and executive functions of government. Domestic economy is the science of farm managment, while social economy is the science of the management of society. Industrial economy lies at the foundation of them all; for it is the management of industry that makes all other social phenomena possible."

"Now" said Jack, "you must tell me what you mean by industry"

"Industry", Herman continued, "is the organized process of transforming natural resources into necessary commodities."

"Why do you say necessary commodities." George interposed. "You might have said that industry is a process of wealth production. I think that would be the better definition."

"That is perhaps the better way of putting it," Herman agreed.

"Then, if I understand you rightly, industry is the sum total of labor expended for race preservation and advancement," Jack remarked.

"The kid's got it" Herman said triumphantly.

"But I'm not thru with my questions. I would like to know just what you mean by natural resources."

"I will try to make it plain to you," said George. "Resources are the raw materials of which wealth is made. The fish in the sea may be considered a source of food. The coal in the earth is a source of fuel, dye stuffs and drugs. The forest uncut, is a source of fuel, shelter and articles of convenience. The unplowed prairies are the source of grain. In the latin language the word "re" means thing, and source means somthing like place; hence resources correctly defined are the sources of things, the places from which wealth may be obtained."

"If I understand you correctly, you mean by resources only things in their natural state. What would you call finished articles? Isn't grain a source of bread?"

"You must not forget that there is a difference between the terms natural recources and raw materials. A natural resource is always a raw material but it does not always follow that a raw material is a natural resource. For example, iron ore when taken from the mine is the finished product of the miner but the raw material of the smelter. The pig iron is the finished product of the smelter but the raw material of the rail maker, and so it goes on thru all the process of industry. Dealing with the second part of your question, let me me point out that grain is not a free gift of nature but the result of labor applied to the soil. You must always draw a distinction between the meanings of these terms resources, raw materials, and wealth. For the present I want to call your attention to the fact that thre is something needed to turn resources into wealth. What is it that turns pig iron, let us say into a steam boiler?"

"Work," said Jack laconically.

"Now you're getting at it. Labor must be crystallized into raw material before we can have wealth. Wealth is any product of labor having a use value. To produce it, three things are necessary, raw material, tools, and labor power. The first is a product of nature, the last is resident in man. These two are brot together thru the medium of the third."

"You might put it this way," suggested Herman, "that resources are natural substances, while wealth or riches are products of labor.

"That is generally but not technically true" George objected. "You do not take into consideration the waste products of labor. For instance, Jack put straw in the fire box, by which he raises steam. The steam runs the machine that treshes the grain, which is Wealth is man's gift to himself. firebox. These too are the result of his labor, but useless.

"I see the difference" said Jack, "Resources are natures gift to man. Wealth is man's gift to himself. But But I notice, that you used the term labor and labor power. Are they not the same thing?"

"No they are not the same thing," George explained. "The steam in the boiler is the result of your labor power expended on the straw. Labor power is the energy stored in your body. It is your ability to work. The result of that work is labor. A miner contains labor. Labor is that element that transforms a resource into a raw material, a raw material into a finished product or commodity.

Labor power is what you have to sell to your employer. Labor, is the result of the sale. It is the sale of your life energy that lies at the bottom of the class struggle. It is the fact that divides society into antagonistic camps. You will find it a factor in all present day social institutions. It lies at the basis of race hatred of which you spoke last night. Evil and sin, crime and poverty, spring from this fact; that one class has the power to buy for a price the life energy of the other class. And that last named class must daily sell its life energy in order to retain its life. It is the only thing the working man has to sell, and that he must sell in order to keep. It is paradoxical, but true.

"Let's hit the hay" suggested Jack, "I have a head ache."

The Pre-Revolutionary Era

The United States is in a stage of labor up-rising that bring to the foreground the question of their real meaning and connection with world labor movements and their significance. Strike after strike upon a more huge scale than ever before seem to indicate that labor is passing thru its pre-revolutionary stage. The Seattle strike, the steel strike, New York dock workers' strike, the probable strike of the coal miners coming in swift succession and the all disclaiming revolutionary intents are certainly not wthout revolutonary tendencies. Unconsciously the revolutionary tendencies develop. Labor here is inspired by workers' victories in England, Russia and other parts of Europe. ments and their significance. Strike after strike upon a more gughe scale than Labor here reacts to revolutionary movements of other parts of the world.

It is not so much what these strike are as what they may become; not so much what the intentions are as what may be learned from them that we are most concerned. No one can prophesy nowadays what a strike of a quarter or half a million men may lead to. The times are pregnant with revolutionary possibilities. Every big strike is a potental revolution, tho it may in its first stages be merely a revolt against the price of bacon and beans.

Recent strikes seems to bear out the affirmation that there is a strong feeling in the ranks of labor that it has nothing to lose by striking. It has no stake in the industries nor in their successful operation. Knowledge of the extent of the robberies perpetrated upon them have made them rebellious, rebellious without responsibility. It is a pre-revolutionary phase. It is not likely to grow better. Only under a system of industrial democracy can the worker feel responsibility. But industrial democracy and capitalism are at opposite poles and can not by any means be brought together.

Property Rights vs. Human Rights

Politically we are more or less free; economically we are serfs. And it is upon an economic foundation of serfdom that present day society is established. A foundation of serfs and masters; of owners and propertyless proletarians. But the foundation is being shaken to-day in a manner that puts terror in the hearts of labors' exploiters.

The right of ownership carries with it the right of operation or non-operation as suits the desire or the convenience of the owner. His right of control is greater than the rights of the dependent workmen to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Factory doors may be closed and kept closed until decay rots them to the ground, tho there be ever so great a need for the products of that factory and even tho it means starvation for the workmen.

Property rights are inviolate—human rights are imaginary.

But human rights are coming to the front in these days of the decay of capitalism. Property rights are being challenged upon every hand. The principle that human life and welfare is of more account than mere property rights is becoming more and more in evidence. And upon the devlopment and growth of this idea hinges all future progress of the human race from the savagery and inhumanity of capitalism upward to a more humane social system.

"The right to work" means the right to live, but in this age of machine production and corporation ownership access to the means of production are not guaranteed. Cut off a man's employment and he is severed from his means of livelihood. And herein lies the conflict between property rights and human rights. This conflict is growing fiercer in every civilized land, that is in every country where machine production has supplanted hand methods. And there can be no quarter given. Between these two principles there can be no compromise, for property rights spell slavery and between slavery and freedom there is no room for compromise.

MORE FREE LEAFLETS FOR YOU

The LEAFLET CAMPAIGN is still on. The Army of Liberators, composed of comrades from all states in the country, has contributed hundreds of dollars for the purpose of agitating and arganizing for the release of Debs and all political prisoners.

As agents for the Army of Liberators we have printed thousands of leaflets. These leaflets must reach the hands and minds of the workers who are as yet apathetic and unconcerned regarding our FREE THEM campaign.

WE WANT TO KNOW AT ONCE how hany of these leaflets you can distribute. Do not order more than you can use. If you can distribute a thousand, say so. If you can only use ten, say so—but make sure to order some.

THEY ARE FREE, for the Army of Liberators has paid for them.

Place your order today. Become a live factor in the campaign to FREE DEBS and ALL political prisoners.

PREPAREDNESS

Standing armies are maintained in all of the great cities of the world. Chicago has 5,000; New York, 10.000 policemen. Day and night these men are detailed to keep watch and ward. Over what?

One man in the city of New York has a house that cost $5.000.000; another used 200 tons of coal to keep himself and his family warm during the winter of caol famine; a woman provided with all of the necessaries of life spends nearly $60.000 for an opera coat; silver gold precious stones, silks, velvets, laces, costly furnishings—all of the most gorgeous luxuries that life affords are at the disposal of the rich.

Men in the same city work 54 hours a week for $20, and from that $20 try to support a family of five. More than 200.000 children go to school hungry; cellars, sub-basements, rookeries and attics are rented at extortionate prices for human habitation.

The rich and the poor live side by side within a stone's throw of one another. The rich enjoing wealth that they have neither produced nor earned; the poor living meanwhile, in hideous destitution.

These conditions existing in Russia, half a century ago led Tolstoy to write, "So the rich gather in one place and settle near other rich people with similar wants in the cities where the gratification of all kinds of luxurious taste is cautiously guarded by an enormous police force."

Our economic history evidently is repeating itself.

THE BULLETIN BOARD

There is a vast army of conscientious comrades scattered over the country who respond to every call of the revolution. Whether it is to arrange a meeting, to get subscriptions for our periodicals, the sale of pamphlets, the distribution of leaflets, there services are willingly and eagerly offered. They are the Jimmie Higginses of our Movement. They are the ones whose self-sacrifice make possible the spread of our propaganda and the advancement of our Cause. They are the foundation stones of our Movement. Upon them rests the whole programe of our activities. They are the ones who build the revolution. Some time perhaps, we will learn to appreciate these sappers and miners who eternally undermine the foundations of capitalism.

Join them by joining the Communist Propaganda League. Order a bundle of Ohio Socialist. Get subscriptions.

THEY ARE JOINING DAILY

Every mail brings us applications for membership in the Communist Propaganda League. Comrades who realize the value of educating the workers in the principles of our movement are taking advantage of this opportunity to do their share.

There is room in this League for every comrade who is willing to do a little each week for his class. There is great need for the good that will be accomplished by these league members who are laying the foundation of future class and mass action of the workers by first helping them to educate themselves in our principles.

There is need for the good you can do—

Here is the chance to do it—

Mind Your Own Business

No. IV.

— By RUBY HERMAN —
Acting State Sec'y. of Washington.

One of our oldest Locals made a change in Secretaries the other day. The new Secretary is not a new member of the Local; he has "paid Dues into the Socialist Party" for a greater number of years than—well, than I have. Whatever may have been his sins of omission before his election to the Secretaryship, he evidently started out with the intention of attending to the Office in an exemplary manner,—so he wrote to the State Office for instructions. This is exactly what he should have done, too, under the circumstances. I only hope he follows the instructions! If he does he will certainly be the best Local Secretary in the State! What appears odd to me is that it should have been necessary for such an old member of the Organization to ask such anxious questions about such simple and oft re-iterated duties of the Local Secretaryship. What in the world has he been about, all these years, to not know what his chief Local Servant was doing?

Among the things which he wanted to know was the price paid the State Office, by the Local, for Dues! And he "understood the Local was supposed to report to the State Office; please tell how often this should be done, and in what manner." Also,—he had found a number of "Initiation Stamps" among the Local's property would I please explain the use of these? And he wanted me to tell him where he could procure a "set of Rules" for Party affairs!

No—don't laugh: I honor the comrade for his frank and earnest efforts to adequately inform himself—at last. There are numerous Local Secretaries who, to judge by the nature of their correspondence with the State Office and the general appearance of the Monthly Local Report, are just as ignorant,—and make no effort to improve.

For instance;—I received a Money Order for $4.65 with the exceedingly lucid instructions to "send Dues for the enclosed M. O."—Now I wonder if you who read are sufficiently informed to be able to see the "point" to that!

Often some Secretary will send in the Local's Monthly Report about the eighteenth or twentieth of the month, and say,—"Plase excuse me for being a little late, this month; I hope you can manage, someway, to get the Report into the Bulletin." You say you don't see anything so reprehensible in that,—what's wrong about it, any how? Well, nothing; only—The Local's Report must arrive at the State Office in time to be included in the Report of the State Secretary to the National Office, which Report must be in the National Office NOT LATER than the twentieh. In this state it is just about impossible to delay the sending of our Report later that the fifteenth and not run serious risk of being too late. Moreover, the specific instructions are,—"Local Secretaries * shall report to the State Secretary on or before the 13th. of each month for the previous month." And the Report Cards each bear the legend, "This report should be sent to the State Secretary upon the first of each month." Really, it would appear that most Local Secretaries are in need of that "set of Rules"! What do they do with their State and National Constitions?

Comrades, these are matters which concern, not only the Local, State and National Secretaris, but EACH INDIVIDUAL MEMBER OF THE ORGANIATION. It is YOUR BUSINESS to keep yourself informed and active in all Organization affairs. Just let me whisper a word of advice into your ear—Comrades, MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS.

Long hair is not always an evidence of genius. It may be only an evidence of the H. C. L.

COMMUNICATIONS

ILLINOIS

Dear Comrade Secretary:—

The State Convention of the COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY OF ILLINOIS was held in Rock Island Sunday Oct. 12, 1919. We herewith send you a report of the proceedings. With the holding of the State Convention the Communist Labor Party becomes a mighty factor in revolutionary progress here in Illinois. We stand four square by the Manifesto of the Third International, and will bend every effort towards establishing the program of the Communist Labor Party adopted at the recent National Convention, which has already been sent you.

You want to take part in this work. You want the satisfaction of knowing that when our struggling Comrades of SOVIET RUSSIA sent the call to all revolutionary elements the world over, to unite in the magnificent struggle — perhaps the final struggle — to abolish Capitalism, and capture the world for the workers — you want to know that you were among those. Who ansveread

The old Socialist Party failed to measure up to its historic task. At the Emergency Convention it repudiated the Third International by a vote of 61 to 33. It speaks the language of the present government Social Democracy of Germany the government that assassinated Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. Its program is the embodiment of social reform. In a recent official communication issued by its Executive Committee it boasts that "THE SOCIALIST PARTY BELIEVES IN IMMEDIATE DEMANDS." This in the face of the collapse of reformistic socialism from the impact of the World War. Even from such a gruelling experience, the Socialist Party has failed to learn.

The Communist Labor Party maintains that the "emancipation of the working class must be an act of the workers." They must organize their class power; they must abolish the Capitalist political state; they must make themselves the ruling class, and under their own dictatorship they must develop the instruments with which to build the New Society — the Industrial Democracy. Such is the lesson of the Russian Revolution.

Petty personalities do not enter. It is a matter of basic principles. Socialists of this country must make their stand on one of these two fundamentally opposed viewpoints. And when the crisis comes — as come it will — then it will be well to look back to this moment of decision to see whether our lot has been cast with the Scheidemans and social reform, or with the Liebknechts and social revolution. Comrades! The Revolution calls you! Will you give heed? AFFILIATE WITH THE COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY.

Edgar Owens,
State Secretary

NEBRASKA

Dear Comrade Wagenknecht:—

Just a word to assure you that I stand with you and the new movement more than ever. I am not in the mood for making suggestions, and never am an adept at grappling with problems of organization, but others are, and all types of mind are needed.

I caught the spirit of Socialism Reborn in Chicago, and it is growing stronger every day. Out here in Omaha and Nebraska we seem to be away from the thick of the fight; we do not witness and only read of the making of history; but we are in the world and could not remain aloof from its problems and its changes even if we would.

The only regret I have is that I can give so little of my time to the movement, that I cannot put my shoulder to the wheel and devote all of my strength to pushing it forward. Perhaps that will be possible after a while. There are so many things to write about and, what is more important, so many things to do, but I must make a living, and some of the ideas that come to me have to put aside as if they were temptations.

The Communist Labor Party is established in Omaha and, from all indications, it has many adherents throughout Nebraska. Whatever their numbers may be, however, I do know that a finer bunch of "reds" never walked the earth and worked for the Revolution. I feel that I am one of the least of these, but I am pround to be with them. You will hear from us.

With regards for yourself, Katterfeld and all the rest in the National Office of the Communist Labor Party, I am.

Yours fraternally
Edward Rutledge

WASHINGTON

A. Wagenknecht, Executive-Secretary,
3207 Clark Ave., Clevenad, O.

Dear Comrade: —

The return of our National Convention Delegates has been met with enthusiasti approbation upon the part of all who have had an opportunity to learn of the accomplishments of the Emergency Convention. Preparations are under way for a State Convention, and there can be doubt in the minds of those who have kept in touch with the Socialist Movement in Washington that the State Organization will vote as a unit for affiliation with the National Organization of the Communist Labor Party.

By way of illustrating the sentiment which prevails here in regard to that organization which still retains the name of "Socialist Party of America" it is only necessary to quote the following incident:

Adolph Germer is sending broadcast among the membership in this state a lengthy and painstaking explaination of what the claims to be the financial condition of his organization, in which he pleads for funds to ward off "bankruptey." Upon receipt of this touching appeal the Secretary of Local Gold Bar wrote to Germer, suggesting that he "take up a collection from among the police whom he recognized as delegates at his convention!"

It is evident from this and similar incidents that the organization calling itself the "Socialist Party of America" will receive scant consideration from the comrades in Washington.

Our State Secretary, who is in the U. S. Penitentiary on McNeil's Island, —where he is taking lessons in "Democracy",—writes, "It goes without saying, of course, that my lot is cast with the C. L. P."

Again assuring you of hearty cooperation from this Office,

Fraternally Yours,
RUBY HERMAN,
Acting State Secretary.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Weston, West Va., Oct. 5, '19.

Dear commrades:—

At a meeting of the Weston Local today the question of endorsement of "The Communist Labor Party" came up and every member present voted for alliance with that party except one member who asked for time to investigate, but emphatically saying that she did not endorse John Spargo nor Benson nor any one of their followers at The St. Louis convention nor their actions since.

I was recently mixing cement for a porch for my residence and I found in the sand, which had been taken from the river bed small twigs, particles of coal etc. So we had to put it through the seive to get rid of the dead wood which would have materially weakened the concrete and the coal which would have tarnished it by filling it with black specks which would upon friction leave black holes. In that connection I desire to say that there can be no permanency in a bad mixture for concrete results.

Individually I am glad the issue is drawn and I have no fear of the good results. Capitalism can not keep from showing its teeth. The columns of every corporation in America are open to Spargo, Russell and Benson. And the plutocracy is short sighted enough to think they can split the party. They are purifying it and paying to get rid of the dead wood and dark specks that would spoil results when we get control of affairs which is not far distant. Let the sifting process be made thorough. Our recalcitrants do not lack funds and will have no trouble in scattering the debris all over the world but when the smoke subsides you will find that the crater through which it was emitted is very small. You can fool all the democrats and republicans some times and as long as they are republicans and democrats you can fool them all the time, but you can not fool a well grounded Marxian Socialist even one time. When the swarm of workers who were driven out of the hive settle, be assured that they will not make honey for the drones.

Dr. M. S. HALT.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION

The state convention of the Communist Labor Party of Illinois was held recently. A state constitution was adopted, as were resolutions for unity; demanding freedom for class war prisoners; endorsing "Soviet Russia", the official organ of the Soviet Bureau. Edgar Owens of Moline was elected state secretary. Members of the state executive committee are England, Shipman, Stolar, Doering, with Arthur Procter as state chairman.

The state executive committee went into session right after the state convention adjourned to consider methods of organization and propaganda. It was decided to engage Chas. Baker for six weeks. In a letter to the Illinois membership, State Secretary Owens wirtes: "You will want the satisfaction of knowing that you were among the FIRST to help in the work of organizing the communists in America. You will want to onjoy the satisfaction of knowing that when our struggling comrades in Soviet Russia sent a call to all revolutionary elements the world over to unite in this magnificent struggle — perhaps the final struggle — to abolish capitalism and capture the world for the workers — you will want to know that you were among those present to answer the roll call."

The C. L. P. can hardly be said to be a month old, yet for the month past, dues stampj orders totaling 14,897 have been received.

C. L. P. state convention of Minnesota will be held November 2.

ASKS U. S. TO ARM HOME GUARD.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—A bill authorizing the war department to issue rifles, pistols and machine guns to the states for home guard defense was introduced today by Senator Harrison, Democrat, Mississippi, who said the legislation was designed as part of a plan to protect communities against violence byr adical elements.

DANCE AND SOCIAL GIVEN.

EDITOR:—

The Workers Defense League of Akron, O., gave a dance and social Saturday evening October 18th in Kaiser Hall. The attendance was unusually good as the program included several addresses in diferent languages.

Some good books on working class economics were given away. The League is becoming a very important factor in Akron and expects to do some very important work in the ensuing struggles between Capital and Labor. We are arranging for a series of lectures for the coming winter season and have the hearty support of all workers organizations in Akron.

Yours for Industrial Freedom

JAMES B. O'BRIEN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Red Doran is teaching a class in Automobiles and at the same time giving his class a much wider and better course than most any school in the U. S., as he delves always into the why of everything which makes the scholars brush up on their Geometry, Physics, and etc. He is the real McCoy when it comes to teaching.

Ashleigh and Downing are teaching English, which they are undoubtedly well fitted for.

Enrique Magon is teaching Spanish and if a man were to search over the entire U. S. I do not think he could find a more competent teacher.

James Solvie is teaching a class in Russian.

BLEEDING MEXICO

By LINN A. E. GALE.

The United States sways back and forth, unsteadily, on the edge of war with Mexico. Unless the Radicals, Liberals and peace-loving people generally, north of the Rio Grande make an almost superhuman effort, their country will be plunged into another blood-bath within a few months or even few weeks.

Nothing short of Social Revolution in the United States or England, can permanently prevent intervention, for intervention is the inevitable next move on the program of imperialistic capitalism. Intervention in Mexico, war with England, war with Japan and God only knows what next—they are unavoidable, sooner or later, unless Wall Street's government or Lombard Street's government topples down.

But, while only the Revolution can permanently prevent intervention, it is possible for organized public opinion in the United States to bring such powerful pressure that it will be delayed a year or two. And during that year or two, in all probability, England will have an upheaval. One is imminent there now. It is too early to expect anything like that just now in the United States but Bolshevism in England would hasten the Great Change in North America and affairs might easily get so serious for capitalism in the United States that Wall Street would have its hands full at home. In such a case, intervention would never take place and Mexico would be free to work out her own destiny.

The chief reason why Wall Street wants intervention is, as everybody knows, told in the one word—"oil." It cannot be said, however, from the standpoint of bourgeois governmental procedure, that Carranza's taxes on oil properties have been excessive or "confiscatory." Compared with the rates in Texas and Oklahoma, both rentals and taxes are moderate. The total value of petroleum exports for 1918 was about $70,000,000, American money, and the official tax for that year, according to Mexican government figures, was $5,560,198.95, American money, or about 8 per cent of the value of the exports. Hardly an unjust tax, when it is remembered that 54 of the oil companies pay an annual rent of about one dollar an acre, these 54 companies occupying 7-8ths of the oil land under exploitation, and the other 24 oil companies own their own land in fee simple and pay no rent.

However, it is not the tax itself that has stimulated the intervention movement. The petroleum magnates don't like the tax, to be sure and probably it would be reduced some under American rule, but the tax is not the real trouble. If that were the only difficulty, a few grumbles would be all that would ever come of it.

American capitalism is far less concerned about the oil tax than it is about the fear that "Bolshevistic tendencies" are lurking behind it. What Wall Street is really afraid of is, that it lets the oil tax stand and virtually acknowledges the principle of eminent domain which the Mexican government has proclaimed with regard to oil wells, mines, etc., that same government will some of these days seize the wells and mines and operate them itself.

Carranza is not a Socialist nor is his Secretary of State, Manual Aguirre Berlanga, but their sympathies are with the common people rather than with capitalistic exploiters. They know what foreign capitalism has done to Mexico. They can see every day in Mexico City what Wall Street did when General Diaz was President—how it erected elegant public buildings that cost millions of dollars wrung from a long-suffering people, how alien contractors received staggering graft on every one of these buildings, how helpless peons were paid niggardly wages for working on them, and how two mammoth unfinished structures, the National Theater and the Legislative Palace, with now rusty iron beams and sinking abutments, testify to the thievery of those capitalists and to the profligate extravagance and corruption of Diaz.

It would not take much to swing Carranza and Berlanga into open espousal of Socialism, or to at least make them put into practice a mild form of state Socialism. That is, if it were not for outside pressure. Just at present there is little danger of any such action because the Carranza government is struggling for its very life. But under ordinary circumstances, there would be a tendency in the direction of more Radicalism that would be at least distictly uncomfortable for outside capital invested in Mexico.

This is the real reason why Wall Street raves and rages at Carranza and wants American gunmen hustled at once to the border. Morgan, Hearst, et al., do not want to take any more chances with such a government. Who knows but Bolshevism may sweep across another country or two and Carranza may catch the disease and do a little Bolshevizing himself? Such a possibility is too terrible to be considered with complacency. Such a government is too dangerous potentially to be left alone. It must be overthrown and some form of a stable "protectorate" substituted. So reason Morgan and Hearst—and quite properly from their standpoint.

This uneasiness on the part of the American money kings has been increased not a little in the past few months by certain symptoms that are clearly indicative of growing Radicalism among the Mexicans. William Gates, who wrote a series of articles of a very abusive and unfair nature for the Worlds Work, mentioned reproachfully in one of them: "Before me lies a recent Mexico City newspaper with photographs of a poster advertising copies for sale of the Bolsheviki constitution on the walls of the government buildings in Mexico and a clerk at the window of the Chamber of Deputies, selling copies. My current Mexican papers are daily filled with increasing numbers of notices of Russian Bolsheviki propagandists." Gates is not the only fossilized foreigner who has been perturbed by the fact that Bolshevist propaganda is for the most part unchecked in Mexico.

Just the other day, Secretary of the Treasury Luis Cabrera, who is considered the second most influential man in the Republic below Carranza—Secretary of State Berlanga ranking first below the President—was interviewed by a reporter for El Democrata, a Mexico City newspaper. The reporter asked Cabrera if he did not think Bolshevist agitators in Mexico ought to be imprisoned or deported. Cabrera said "No," and remarked that Bolshevism was an ideal social system but Mexico was not yet ready for it. Perhaps Cabrera would not have made that latter statement if it had not been for the Damocles' sword of intervention hanging over the head of the government of which he is an important part. But even if he really made it in all sincerity, the preceding remark is sufficient to show that he is not a "safe" man for Wall Street to permit to have charge of the finances of a large, rich and fertile country like Mexico—that the Mexican government is a "safe" government when it tolerates such a Secretary of the Treasury. It is not enough that he thinks Mexico is not ready for Bolshevism—just now. Wall Street won't stand for a chancellor who think Mexico will ever be ready for it!

A worse thorn in the flesh of Wall Street than Cabrera—and Cabrera has been honored by being called "pro-German" by New York newspapers—is Secretary of State Berlanga. During the war, Berlanga was everlastingly opposed to any participation in it and some think he, even more than Carranza, was responsible for Mexico's flat decision not to listen to the siren song of the Allied Committee of Public Information, the oil magnates and American vested interests when they pleaded with the government to help save democracy. All American capitalists consider Berlanga "pro-German"—much more so than they consider Cabrera. Perhaps he was a little "pro-German" in the war. If so, his position was undoubtedly the same as that of not a few Mexicans who told me they wanted to see Germany win, not because they liked the kaiser or the junkers, but because they felt that with Germany victorious, Potsdam would keep Wall Street from gobbling up Mexico—one set of thieves would balance the other and meanwhile Mexico would have a chance to live in peace. If the United States won, they maintained, Wall Street would immediately prepare to size Mexico. In the light of present events, the idea was not as far wrong as it may have seemed.

Be this as it may, it is an undisputed fact that Berlanga is the bitter enemy of alien exploiters. He is a lawyer by profession, a student by inclination, and a temperamental pacifist and democrat, hating alike military trappings and official obsequiousness. The gaudily uniformed soldiers of Diaz and the pomp and display of the Diaz regime are still nauseating memories to him. All thru his career, his hostility to anything militaristic or imperialistic, has been evident. If Mexico is free from coercion in the presidential election of 1920, he may succeed Carranza. There is little doubt that he is Carranza's preference. If he became President, the Mexican government would be still less kindly disposed toward the oil and mining magnates. In fact, Berlanga might decide, some fine day, to make an alliance with Lenine. He might not. Nobody knows. But Wall Street cannot afford to take any such chanse and let Mexico elect such a man as its chief executive. Another reason why intervention is necessary.

Two little happenings lately furnish additional proof of which way Secretary Berlanga inclines. One of them concerns myself. I was arrested by order of the Mexico City health department for publishing a Spanish edition of Margaret Sanger's birth control pamphlet, "Family Limitation." There is no law in Mexico against contraceptive information but the health department, which is under the influence of Allied capitalists who particularly hate me, construed a certain paragraph in the book to mean approval of abortion and also claimed that an advertisement in the book of a suppository violated the patent medicine regulations. I was fined 500 dollars, Mexican money, and sentenced to a penitentiary term if I did not pay the fine. I appealed to Berlanga and Berlanga summoned the secretary of the health department before him. What happened, I heard from a witness who said that Berlanga gave the frightened secretary a lecture that he will not soon forget, warning him to take no more orders from foreign capitalists or the American embassy! I was already in the penitentiary, having been railroaded there as quickly as the health department could get a policeman to take me. I did not stay long, however, for very shortly thereafter, the health department was compelled to revoke its penalty and order me freed. This action by Berlanga was taken in the face of a storm of savage articles in El Universal and Excelsior, the two principal newspapers in Mexico City under the controll of Allied money.

The other incident in which Berlanga showed his hand lately, was that of Dmitri Nikitin, who was arrested in Monterrey and conducted to the city of Victoria, en route for Tampico, where he was to have been deported for being a "pernicious foreigner." Nikitin is a Russian by birth, lived in the United States 10 or 15 years and is, of course, a Bolshevik. He is a "slacker" and was conducting a school of languages in Monterey with his wife, a Mexican lady. He also sold radical literature and advocated Bolshevism. American capitalists "framed" him, getting the police to arrest him in the belief that he was a supporter of Villa. Friends appealed to Berlanga and Berlanga communicated with the governor of the state of Tamaulipas who ordered Nikitin's release. He is now free to pursue his own inclinations and will be — unless intervention comes. These are only little incidents but they are significant.

Another and very important reason why American capitalism wants intervention is the fact that Mexico provided asylum for nearly 30.000 "slackers" from the United States during the war. Nobody knows the exact number but there were probably 30.000 who came to this country. Many have now gone back, many others went to South America and quite a few went to various European countries, hoping to eventually get to Russia. Today there are not more than 5.000 here — probably much less. But the fact remains that these political exiles who refused to participate in what they regarded as an unjustifiable war, were protected by the Carranza government. A few near the border were returned by local Mexican officials who sold out for the $50 a head offered for deserters, but this was not done with the knowledge or approval of the Mexico City government. Not only were the "slackers" protected from extradition, but they were allowed to engage in Bolshevik propaganda to their heart's content. Allied firms that discharged men on learning just why they were in Mexico, had to pay damages under the Mexican law which forbids discrimination by employers for political reasons. Allied stores that refused to sell goods to "slackers" were forced to serve them or pay a fine. Sanborn's Drug Store of this city was visited by ex-Governor Breceda of the Federal District and a delegation of Mexican soldiers a few minutes after one of the waitresses refused to serve "Jack" Johnson an ice cream soda, and "Jack" thereupon had all the sodas he wanted. Pugilist Johnson is neither a "slacker" nor a radical, having left the United States on account of a charge under the Mann white slave act, but this is another instance showing the attitude of Mexicans toward fugitives from other countries. Johnson's color was probably the reason for his chilly reception in Sanborn's; and color discriminations are not tolerated.

There is still another reason why intervention is wanted — a big and influential reason. The Roman Catholic Church. Probably no man on earth is more hated today by the Pope at Rome than President Carranza of Mexico, because he confiscated vast church estates and exiled many priests who were robbing the ignorant masses. The anti-Catholic policy of the government has moderated a great deal in the last year or two, in an evident effort to stop the Catholic clamors for intervention. Lately many of the exiled priests have been allowed to return to Mexico, but the church knows that Carranza still detests it and would not hesitate to completely crush it if his government were free from outside coercion. Therefore, the Catholic Church of foreign countries is, almost to a man, loudly, for intervention, and the Catholic hierarchy of Mexico, with its thousands of illiterate, degraded followers, stands ready to stab the Mexico government in the back while Allied capitalism attacks it from the front.

The stories of atrocities committed against foreigners in Mexico may be dismissed briefly. Foreigners have been treated no worse than Mexicans by the bandits. And if Carranza had been left alone during the years of his administration, there would be few bandits in the country. The cancellation of enormous land grants to political heelers and grafters of Diaz, the division of these lands into small tracts and their restoration to the people, the proper taxation of mines and oil wells and the socialization of certain industries that would have taken place, would have eliminated most of the terrible poverty that is the logical fruit, not of Carranza's policies, but of outside interference. Non-interference would have enabled Carranza to remove extreme poverty and thereby eliminate the banditry arising from it. The other kind of banditry which is the bigger share of it, would have disappeared almost instantaneously, for it is traceable directly to foreigners who supply the brigands with guns and money.

It is common knowledge that oil men in the Tampico district pay $200.000 a month to Pellaez, king of the bandits of that section. When L. J. de Bekker, an American newspaper man, asked an oil man why he did not refuse to pay this blackmail and appeal to the Mexican government for protection, the answer was: "We can't. Pelaez would blow up our wells if we did. Besides, the State Department at Washington knows each and every payment we make to Pellaez and approves it!"

The simple truth is that the bandits in Mexico get their ammunition from American sources — there is no other place from which they could get it. In some cases the ammunition is sold them in cold-blooded commercial transactions. In other cases it is given them and money is also paid as a bribe, besides, to protect the property of the donors. The same aid given Carranza soldiers would probably protect the givers of the guns and dollars amply, but they would rather help cut-throats, ruffians and robbers than to help a government that tho faulty and weak, is honestly liberal and honestly making a hard struggle against uneven odds. The Pellaez bandits in the Tampico region, who protect the property of the oil magnates never neglect an opportunity to dynamite a government railway train or kill Carranza soldiers!

There are a very, very few gangs that loot and murder and that do not get help from foreigners. It is such as these that commit the crimes like the killing of Correll and the others that fill the American newspapers. But, in the first place, these gangs are no more numerous than were similar gangs in the early days of the United States; in the second place, there are more lynchings, "patriotic" outrages and the like commited in the United States, considering population, than there are crimes of these gangs in Mexico; in the third place, if the Carranza government were given the aid that foreigners now give its enemies, the government would be able to exterminate such outhlaws; and in the fourth place, the members of many of these gangs are peons who have been cheated by foreigners and who seek revenge by attacking every "gringo" they see. If foreigners had not wronged them in the beginning, they would not be outlaws now.

After all, no matter what Mexico's offenses, they are the offenses of a child, unlettered, abused and enslaved. They are offenses that no nation that is genuinely great and no man who is truly human, can refuse to forgive. Her whole life has been a pitiful series of serfdoms, violations and tortures. A toy, a mistress, a thrall — this was her role for centuries. At last, freed by revolution, she has been beaten and bruised almost from the very moment she drew her first breath of freedom's air, and her newfound emancipation has been but a ghastly mockery.

Unjust and unrighteous as all wars of capitalist society have been, war with Mexico will be the most wicked and wanton that was ever waged. "War" is a misnomer. It will not be war but rape — brutal, vicious, lecherous, fiendish rape, committed against a nation that has suffered as no nation ever suffered; that is slowly and painfully climbing the steeps that lead toward light and liberty; and that, in spite of enforced ignorance and degradation, has never lost the love, laughter and music in her heart nor the democratic dreams in her soul!

Official Bulletin Communist Labor Party

LOCAL BOSTON COMMUNIST PARTY PASSES UNITY RESOLUTION.

One of the largest locals of the Communist Party, that at Boston, Mass., has gone on record for unity between the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party. The resolutions passed are significant in that they show that Local Boston recognizes the sincere attempt for unity which is being made by the Communist Labor Party. Despite the opposition of the Communist Party national officials, the demand for unity is permeating the rank and file of that party and its officials will have to obey or lose their positions, dignity and all.

The resolutions passed by Local Boston follow:

"Whereas the existance of two communist parties, both standing upon the platform of the Third International, organized at Moscow, is a crime and only tends to split the revolutionary forces of the American proletariat, and

"Whereas there is no diference in principle nor yet in tactics between the platform and program of the Communist Party and that, of the Communist Labor Party, and

"Whereas the chief cause for launching two communist parties appears to rest in the shallow personal activings and mutual hatred between so-called laders of the communist movement of America, and

"Whereas a division of communist forces leads to useless expense of means, all of which are contributed by the rank and file, and in baseless internal strife between communists, thereby weakening the propaganda among the working class as well as disorganizing the communist forces in America, all of which will reflect badly upon the International Communist movement, and

"Whereas the Communist Labor Party has declared its readiness to at any time unite with the Communists Party on the basis of equality,

"Therefore, taking all this into consideration, be it resolved by the Communist Party of Boston, representing 2.000 members in joint meeting assembled, October 12, 1919 that we demand immediate unification of the Communist Party with the Communist Labor Party."

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THIRD INTERNATIONAL HEARD FROM

A communication has been received by the Soviet Bureau in New York City from the executive committee of the Third International, which commands the Russian Federation of the Communist Party to cease their ruthless attacks upon the Soviet Bureau.

The Russian Federation of the Communist Party has for months made war upon Martns, head of the Soviet Bureau in the United States. The object was control of the bureau by the federation. This constant attack upon the Soviet Bureau has caused a serious split in the Russian Federation of the Communist Party, 18 branches having either seceded or been suspended for objecting to criticism of the bureau. these 18 branches have organized a Russian Federation affiliated with the Communist Labor Party.

OFFICIAL BULLETIN-COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY

TELEGRAM:— Local Oakland, Cal., a local of 500 members and the largest in the state, joins Communist Labor Party. "Oakland World" our weekly paper, taken over into C. L. P. with us. Only 50 out of the 500 members will stay with the reactionaries.

The "Oakland World" is one of the largest party weeklies in the country. Its circulation of 10.000 per week will make it a power for the Communist Labor Party.

NEW LOCAL OF 80 AT BREEZY HILL.

J. I. Crviston and J. P. Cannon are invading the Kansas coal fields. A meeting held at Breezy Hill, Crawford county resulted in the affiliation of 80 members, mostly Jugo-Slavs. Max Bedacht will also spend a week in that same territory and Cannon assures us of five more locals before Bedacht leaves.

Adolph Germer, now national organizer for the Socialist Party, held a "rousing" meeting in Kansas City Missouri the other day. All of 19 people were present to hear him orate, and 12 of these were members of the C. L. P.

Ruthenberg Again Challenged

Makes lame excuse for refusing to debate.

Immediately after the Cuyahoga County delegate convention, where Ruthenberg was publicly Challenged to meet Katterfeld in debate before the Cleveland membership, Ruthenberg agreed personally to accept this challenge "sometime soon."

He now attempts to sidestep the debate with the lame excuse that when the delegate body of Cuyahoga County had voted, the matter was settled as far as he is concerned, and accuses those who accepted his personal word in good faith of "cheap trickery."

The Communist Labor Party maintains that the issue was not settled and can not be settled by delegate bodies and conventions. No member can delegate the resposibility for such a decision to anybody else. The question of Party affiliation is one that each individual member must decide for himself in accordance with his own convictions, and the issue is NOT settled until the individual Party member decides and pays his dues to the Party of his choice.

Ruthenberg claims 2,500 members for the Communist Party in Cleveland because of the vote of a few delegates. As sheep fellow the bellwether, so he seems to think the mass of the Cleveland membership will follow the "leader" But the Cleveland Comrades are not sheep. The fact is that to date only a small fraction of this number have affiliated with either Party. The great majority of them have not yet decided where to join.

The Ruthenberg method is to try to herd the membership en masse into a Party through the actions of officials The Communist Labor Party method is to appeal to the judgment of each individual Comrad. Which of these is in accord with Communist principles?

Instead of being moved into the Communist Party like a set of pawns, the Cleveland membership would like to have some information on a number of points.

Why did not Ruthenberg carry out the program to which he agreed time after time in conference with other Left Wing Comrades?

Why did Ruthenberg persuade the Cuyahoga County Committee to give instructions to the Delegates to the Emergency Convention that directly conflicted with the instructions of the State convention, endorsed by membership referendum?

If, as he now claims, he meant when he wrote the State instructions on June 26th that the Ohio delegates should go into the convention called by the Michigan Comrades and the Federations, then why did he sign the following, which appeared over his signature in the Revolutionary Ago on August 2-nd?

"The National Left Wing Council... shall assist in all ways within its power to secure the election of Left Wing delegates to the Eemergency Convention of the Socialist Party...

"Should the National Emergency Convention prove reactionary and in the control through the assistance of the capitalist police of the moderate and despotic officialdom of the Party; should this Emergency convention rule in favor of the shameful acts of the present autocratic National Eexecutive Committee, then the Left Wing delegates to THIS Convention shall IMMEDIATELY organize a new Communist Party, representing the vast majority of the PRESENT. Socialist Party....

"In the event that the National Emergency convention of the Socialist Party is not called on August 30th the National Council is instructed to hold a convention that will organize a new Party then and there in Chikago on August 30th."

At the time that Ruthenberg signed the above document the call of the Russian-Michigan combination of Left Wing bolters for their privately conducted convention on Sept. 1st had already been out for many weeks. If Ruthenberg meant that our delegates should go into the convention of the bolting Left Wing minority why did he not say so? Why did he sign the above statement?

If Ruthenberg means one thing when he says another, then what dependence can the membership place in his present pretensions?

If Ruthenberg had in mind all the time and on June 26th that we should go into the Russian-Michigan convention, why did he agree on July 26th in the N. E. C. meeting to instruct Wagenknecht as National Secretary to rent a separate hall for the Emergency convention to meet Aug. 30th?

Why does Ruthenberg now propose an Ohio State Convention in conjunction with the reactionary locals of the old Socialist Party? Why is he willing to go cohoots with the Germerites?

Above all — Why does Ruthenberg oppose UNITY between the two Communist organizations? Why does he and the rest of the Communist Party officialdom refuse to accept the Unity Conference invitation that has been extended by the Communist Labor Party?

WHO stands in the way of unity of all Communist forces?

These questions are being asked by hundreds of Comrades right here in Cleveland. The issue is not settled until these questions are answered The demand is gaining ground from day to day that Ruthenberg appear openly before the Cleveland membership to justify his actions in public debate with a representative of the Communist Labor Party whom he has so milicicously slandered.

Ruthenberg is again challenged by the Communist Labor Party to debate with Katterfeld at ANY TIME before the membership of Cuyahoga County the issue between the two Communist Parties.

Dare he accept?
Dare he refuse?

WORCESTER JOINS C. L. P.

Local Worcester, Mass., (English) has joined the Communist Labor Party. Other locals in Massachusetts are making inquiries as to the reason for the split in the left wing movement and as they learn the thruth, will affiliate with the C. L. P. Massachusetts is considered a Communist Party stronghold.

The German Hungarian branch; the Northwest Side German branch the Forest Hill German branch, all of Chicago have affiliated with the Communist Labor Party.

GARY COMRADES HELD FOR DEPORTATION

Members of the Communist Labor Party, Russian Branches, at Gary, Indiana, are being hold for deportation because of their activity in the steel strike. Party members, homes have been ransacked by the military, wholesale arrests have been made, and the intimidation of strikers continues the program of King Gary.

SAN FRANCISCO AFFILIATES

A communication from J. A. Ragsdale, secretary of Local San Francisco, contains the encouraging news that his local has joined the Communist Labor Party. Local San Francisco, together with Local Oakland, are the two largest local on the Pacific coast.

The Socialist Party is commercializing the name of Debs by attempting to retain membership and collect dues by claiming that Debs will remain a member of the Socialist Party. Debs has not yet spoken, and when he does, a surprise awaits all American Scheidemanns.

"Long live the Socialist Party! Long live the International!" This is the new slogan of the reactionary Socialist Party. But, allow us a question, please? Long live WHICH Internationale? As usual, the S. P. officials are "putting it over" on their gulible membership.

WORKERS WANTED

The Communist Labor Party wants workers, comrades who are ready and willing to take the field and do real Jimmy Higgins organzation work. The lecture platform and the editors chair seem to be the magneth which attract too many of the comrades, whereas the most essential work, that of plodding along in the work of making personal canvasses from house to house, is overlooked and neglected. The C. L. P. wants workers. Let us repeat — WORKERS. If you are willing to WORK for the C. L. P., send in your name and address, as well as qualifications. Keep the Right to Strike!

Nearly half a million coal miners have downed tools as a last resort to force the coal barons to accede humane conditions of employment. The coal barons demanded that the miners continue at work pending the outcome of an industrial roundtable between the miners and their employers. The miners rightly refused to agree to throwing away their strongest weapon to enter unequally into a conference. The strike is on and the battle must be won for the men who mine the coal that makes civilization possible.

Woodrow Wilson and his reactionary government have chosen to throw its entire strength of courts and military on the side of those who have reaped millions in profits from the sweat and toil of the miners. As usual the class lines are drawn tightly, the capitalistic class character of the government is clarly depicted for all who may care to see. The government stands bone—headedly upon a technicality that the war is not over and the miners are bound by a war time agreement to keep at work. The government conveniently asserts or discards this same technicality as the conditions of its political welfare dictate. In order to bind into slavery a half million American workers it blunderingly serves an injunction upon the miners' officials restraining them from calling the strike. Nevertheless, the strike is on, the men are out and the injunction is worthless, but it should serve to teach American workers the true character of the government.

The right to strike must remain inviolate. An attempt to abrogate this right is an assault upon the workers and the rights of free men, whether the assault is led by a reactionary government or any other power. The right to quit work in order to force better conditions of life and employment is a fundamental right that no man other than a congenital slave will for a moment be denied.

The demands of the miners which may appear radical to some on first glance are upon close analysis, but logical and reasonable considering the conditions surrouding the coal industry.

For nearly a year the miners have worked about half time. Their liberty bonds, purchased to help win a war for "democracy" have long ago been cashed in to purchase food and clothing for their families. A shorter work-day and week are absolutely necessary if miners are to have steady employment. An increase in wages only, can assure them of a decent American standard of living.

But the government cannot see this. Its powers have been thrown to the interests of the coal barons. Soldiers are guarding the mines, protecting such scabs as the government and coal operators may be able to recruit to break the strike.

Let every miner stand staunchly by the principles of free men. None other than slaves will be cowed by the misuse of governmental power in the hands of the rulling class.

Terrible Treatment of American Soldiers in Waging Wilson's Private War Against Soviet Russia

SAN FRANCISCO:—

Bringing 1,278 United States troops back from what they describe as a land of horrors and no place for an American, the army transport Logan docked today with one of the largest detachments of Siberian expeditionary forces thus far returned to the United States.

Today's arrivals are from the Twenty-seventh and Thirty-first infantry having served more than 15 months in Siberia. In the ship's hospitals were thirty-eight men being transferred at the Presidio; in the ship's brig were three prisoners serving courts-martial sentences and to be transferred to Alcatraz and in the hold were the bodies of 16 Americans killed in fight with Bolshevik forces.

Tales of hardships, mistreatment and abuse are many among the men. The Japanese are blamed by the soldiers for the conditions in Siberia, which they describe as a pest hole of flith, disease and terror. Interior Siberia, especially at Harbin and further inland, is in the clutches of an epidemic of cholera and typhus which is resulting in many deaths, claim today's arrivals.

Bitter Against Officers

Members of several companies of the Tventy-seventh Infantry are bitter against the tratment given them by the commanding officers whom they charge with using the mailed first of military authority to maintain discipline and check the spread of discontent among the men because of their dissatisfaction at being kept in places for reasons they know nothing of and being subjected to treatment worse, they claim, than would be given a dog.

The majority of the complaints are lodged against Colonel H. T. Morrow, commanding officer of the Twenty-seventh Regimena, nicknamel by his men "Bull of the Woods."

Cruelties of all descriptions, intexication and many charges are lodged against officers by men of the Twenty-seventh. The chief complaint against Colonel Morrow is the erection of the prison stockade and herding it full of American prisoners, placed there, the man say, for the most trivial of violations of military rullings.

Tell of Conditions

Edward G. Bell of Company B. Tventy-seventh Infantry; J. Shapiro, Company L. and many others tell of conditions in the prison stockade, created, they say, by Colonel Morrow, Bell said:

This stockade was bult of logs and designed to hold about 150 men. There were about 140 men in it all of the time. We were made to double time to and from work or any place we were driven. Life inside this stockade was a horror. Every two hours during the night, officers, commanded by Colonel Morrow, would come in, wake us up, take our bedding away from us; force us to line up and answer to roll call and then we would be double-timed for a few minutes. Then we would get a snatch of sleep and double-timed again. We were sent to the stockade on charges which would in most places escape with a rebuke.

Charge Tyranny Reign

J. Shapiro of Company L. and vouched for by many of his company, charges the officers with conducting a reign of tyranny. Grafting of money to be used for the soldiers, abuses and brutalities are charged against the officers. Shapiro charges that German officers held as prisoners were given better treatment than the American and Russian prisoners, and that the German officers are wearing American uniforms. Supported by Dan Alexander of a headquarters company in the Twenty-seventh. Shapira says that Arthur Herrarra of Company L. a resident of San Francisco, was given a sentence of 14 days on bread and water for making a remark about a German major wearing the American uniform while a prisoner, Shapiro said:

Herrarra resented the fact that a major in the Germany army was wearing an American uniform. Herrarra said, "Doesn't he look cute, the —" Captain Larkin, commanding Company E. of the Tventy-seventh, heard the remark and Herrarra received a court martial and 14 days solitary.

Herman N. Jensen, Company B. Twenty-seventh infantry, expressed the sentiments of more than 500 soldiers of the Siberian forces when he said:

Americans have no business in Siberia. From all we can learn Hiram W. Johnson is one of the best friends we have and the men in Siberia and on the Logan are for him 100 per cent.

We have been inland about 1.800 miles at Verxhue Udnisk and if anybody can solve the riddle there they will have a Philadelphia lawyer beaten.

Japanese Show Hand

The situation there is thus: The Japs are stealing the country and helping them do it are three so-called Russian Kolchak generals—Kilmokiff, Seminoff and Gamoff. All are supposed to be divisional chiefs under Kolchak, but in reality they are bandits far worse than Villa. The Mexican situation is as peaceful as a village alongside of Russia. Kolchak is friendly to the Americans, but his bandit chieftains, who are supposed to co-operate with the Americans, are being financed by the Japs to create a reign of terror. They are open in their declarations against the Americans. Their actions, together with the conditions of poverty, filth and disease made Siberia an awful place. There are more than 1,000 men on board who are tickled to death to get back — but believe me, buddy, it's tough sledding for those who are in Siberia now, although they are beginning to get the men out.

From the Prison Hospital Debs Sees Labor Growing Stronger for Final Conflict With Its Exploiters

Cincinnati O. Oct. 23. 1919.

DEAR COMRADE WAGENKNECHT:—

I wisited Gene yesterday accompanied by attorney Castelton and found him slightly improved, he is still in the hospital and will in all probability remain there because of his health. He is no longer obliged to work in the clothing shop as the Warden recognized he must get better air and rest. Every one about the prison appreciates and loves "our Gene," many prisoners would gladly serve his time for him if they could. The prisoners in the turbeculosis section raise flowers and frequently send him boquets.

He is cheerful and optimistic, the split in the Party is to him an evidence of growth. He said. "Parties will split, but the movement for working-class emancipation never splits, the rank and file in all the Parties are honest and will get together in their own good time. "Tell them to carry on the work for liberation of all political prisoners. All of us will be released when the working-class present a united front. We must see to it that the financial interests are not permitted to overthrow by force the liberties so dearly bought and paid for by the blood of the workers.

They must understand that this government was founded on the theory of the right of its citizens to advocate change if the existing system does not provide safety and security for the people. The Declaration of Independence states this principle clearly, any group of people that interferes with this fundamental right is in conflict with the spirit and purpose of the revolutionists who were ready to die rather than live under the autocracy of King George.

It is the mission of the workers to rid the world of the industrial autocrats who are more oppressive than the political autocrats ever-dared to be. The workers have been robbed and starved in their interests, they are the 2o/o who control 70o/o of the weatlh. The men and women who feed, clothe and house the world, must control the world. They must systematize and organize industry in their own interest instead of for the 2o/o, thereby abolishing the conflict between nations and classes.

From behind prison bars I can hear the rumblings. I can feel the heert throbs of the working-class in their efforts to free themselves from their fetters. I understand and I reach aut to the men in the steel mills and the miners, the railroad shops, to the workers every-where. I am with you in spirit, be true to yourselves and your class, the day is not far distant when Labor will come into its own."

With this messoge, Gene Debs sends greetings to his comrades urging unity of all revolutionary organizations.

Fraternally

Marguerite Prevey.

GOOD NEWS COMRADES

COMRADES:—

The national executive committee of the Communist Labor Party just held a meeting in New York City.

Many important decisions were made. In fact, the Communist Labor Party steps forth a definate power from now on, having, as a result of this meeting, acquired the needed party activities and machinery which enables the party to reach its membership as well as workers who are in need of communist education.

1. Plans were perfected for the tourning of an army of organizers and lecturers. A circularization of locals and branches has resulted in a call for speakers and organizers such as will rush us to comply with.

2. The fighting organ of the Communist Labor Party has been established. It will be called "COMMUNIST LABOR". The first issue will appear within two weeks. Max Bedacht will edit this periodical.

3. "Class Struggle", at present the only magazine of a scientific nature published in this country, has been taken over by the Communist Labor Party. Ludwig Lore will continue to act as editor of this magazine, and Jack Carney and A. Raphailoff will be associate editors.

4. "Voice of Labor" has also been made an official Communist Labor Party organ. John Reed is its editor. This paper will continue the shop committee paper, propaganting the One Big Union idea among the workers and doing its part in organizing them for effective action.

5. The going business of the Socialist Publication Society has been absorbed by the party. This society has already on hand thousands of excellent pamphlets, and has an especially good stock of Russian book by Bucharin, said to be the best by Bucharin, saidt to be the best esposition of Communism so for written, of which three million copies have been sold in Russia and of which we hope to sell a million in the U S.

6. The national office of the Communist Labor Party will move to New York City. From this citadel of capitalism we hope to rally the 30.000.000 wage slaves to the cause of communism; from here the activities of the party will be prosecuted with greater vigor and efficiency.

AND YOU! Your duty is now plain. Every member of the party must from this moment on become an agent for the party. Every member must be an organizer, a subscription getter, a literature agent — a propagandist every spare moment of every day.

THIS WILL LEAD TO VICTORY!

Syndicalism Cases Continued

Unlettered Prosecutor gives new pronuntiation to class-war words and phrases and reveals ignorance of language as well as of law.

The cases of Chas Baker, Walter Bronstrup, L. E. Katterfeld, A. Wagenknecht and E. T. Allison, charged with criminal syndicalism, were continued in Judge Moylan's court to Nov. 5th when the five defendents appeared with their attorney, Morris Wolfe, last Thurs. afternoon for preliminary hearing.

Articles from the Voice of Labor, official organ of the Communist Labor Party and an editorial from the Ohio Socialist of date of Nov. 15th, entitled "Seizing the Capitalist State", which were distributed at a meeting on Oct. 16th as well as paragraphs from the Communist Labor Party News were submitted and read as evidence in support of the charge of criminal syndicalism against the defendents by McCuen, Secretary of the Loyal American League, who was instrumental in making the arrests.

Copies of speeches made by Chas Baker, A. Wagenknecht and L. E. Katterfeld and Margueritte Prevey were in the hands of the prosecution but were not offered as evidence. Attorney Wolfe, for the defendents submitted and insisted that the speech of Marguerite Prevey be read. Marguerite Prevey was not arrested at the meeting, nor were other women comrades who participated and took an active part in it. Both prosecution and defense rested their cases at this point but judge Moylan insisted that the prosecution point out the particular violation of the criminal syndicalism law which had occurred. This reopened the case and necessitated the reading of considerable portions of the articles by the prosecuting attorney. Attorney Wolfe asked that the defendents be discharged since no violation of yaw, no evidence of "advocacy of crime, violence or unlawful methods of terrorism" had been submitted. This put the prosecutor and his fellows of the Loyal American League to thinking and the prosecutor expressed the wish to submit the speeches of the defendents as further evidence. The hour being late a continuance of the case to Nov. 5th was granted.

Prosecuting attorney, Stanton, who is perhaps as shaggy and scabby an appearing individual as ever held down a job as police prosecutor revealed a pitiable lack of vocabulary and knowledge of modern English in his handling of the case, especially in his readings of extracts from the various publications. Such words as

Bombs and "Bull"

The capitalist press of the country has for a week past been reeking with tales of discoveries of alleged bomb plotters, their arrests, seizure of large quantities of materials for the making of bombs, radical literature and communications from men prominent in the American Communist Movement.

The assertion is made that the men and woman arrested at Cleveland have connections in various parts of the country and that the fact is being established that the bomb said to have been sent thru the mails in the early part of summer, and the bombing of the home of Mayor Davis is the work of these men.

We charge that these latest alleged bomb discoveries are the rankest kind of fake, perpetrated by one of the greatest political poltrooms who ever sat in a Mayor's chair — Harry Davis of Cleveland. While Davis' police were riding over the workers of Cleveland on May 1st, brutally clubbing men, women and children in an effort to exterminate every vestige of rising revolt among the workers, Harry Davis was in attendance at a ball game. While the agencies of destruction which he had released at the word of the Camber of Commerce were at work, he sat on a bench in the ball park safe in his skin far from the scene he had not the physical courage to enter. In his campaign for re-election the radical element of the city are bombarding him with questions about his murderous assault upon the workers and the reign of terror he imposed upon the city. He felt the ground slipping from under his feet. He needed and needed badly a substantial strengthening of his standing in the community he had assaulted and outraged.

Hence a "bomb plant" is discovered — right on the eve of election. The capitalist press, ever eager to spread red ink in lies against the workers, that they may be kept forever in subjection, enters upon another campaign of maliciousness. The gullible swallow the bait, hook, line and sinker. The administration is made to appear vigilantly at work in the interests of "law and order." The mayor receives a slight boost at the polls — perhaps enough to get him over the top and into the snug seat of the mayor — ready for another assault upon the workers whose votes put him there.

A capitalists politician will sink to any depths for public office. Gulling the workers is a part of the game. The workers are slowly learning this and it is one of the things which are driving capitalism and its political representatives to distraction — and desperate lengths to keep them harnessed to capitalism's chariot.

More Persecution.

Local exponents of Wilsonian "Democracy" working over time in suppression of Working-class.

Sleuths and gum-shoe men of the local Chamber of Commerce are using every method of "crime, violence and terrorism," in violation of the Constitution of the United States in their repression of the rights of Cleveland workers.

Having partially succeeded in preventing hall meetings after ruling socialists off the streets, they now have entered upon a course of open violation of all the laws of sanctuary guaranteed by the fundamental law of the land. No worker's home is now safe from entrance at any hour by these hounds and lick-spittles of the ruling class.

Ten comrades of the Communist Party of Cleveland were held up at the point of revolvers in the private home of a comrade, where an organization meeting was being held on the night of Oct. 30th. Those taken in this latest unlawful outrage were Carl Hacker organizer, Harry Wagenknecht, Rudolph Altenbernd and others.

Guarded by the valliant apostles of democracy as we have it to-day, the comrades were herded into a patrol wagon with books, pamphlets, membership cards etc. They were charged with violation of the criminal syndicalism law at the police station, where they remained overnight.

At the hearing in Judge Moylan's court the following day they were bound over to the grand jury on $500 bond which was immediately raised o $1.500 when bondsmen appeared with bonds for their release. At this time sufficient bonds have been produced for the release of all.

Hamilton Socialist Mobbed and Beaten by Six Masked Men

Steiger Chloroformed and Taken to Woods, Left Unconscious.

John F. Steiger, chairman of the Hamilton, Ohio, Socialist campaign committee, on his way home from a meeting Friday, evening Oct. 17, was seized by six masked men, beaten, chloroformed, taken in an automobile to the woods, stripped, whipped, tarred and left unconscious.

He recovered at 3 o'clock in the morning and got to the police headquarters. The Hamilton newspapers at first suppressed the story, but later let some news of it out.

The same gang took from the Cincinnati and Dayton motor express office 6.000 Socialist campaign leaflets.

The clew to the assailants was obtained through the sale of masks.

Walter Harlan, judge of the Court of Common Pleas, has ordered a grand jury investigation.

Steiger had received a threatening letter, unsigned. This letter ordered him to leave the city within ten days. The general belief is that the plot was organised in the Chamber of Commerce and employers' association circles. This theory is based on the fact that these circles have been alarmed at the prospects of a Socialist victory at the polls.

CLEVELAND'S "BEER" COMMUNISTS

(Contributed)

Not that we care to write an article about Cleveland's "Beer" Communists, members in good standing of the Communist Party. We would much rather overlook points of difference and emphasize points of unity.

But of late the Communist Labor Party has been belabored with such senseless and bitter criticisms from Communist Party ranks, that it becomes our duty to prove to the Communist Party membership that their party does not stand the hundred per cent test, and that the errors made on the side of adherants of the Communist Party are as mountains beside the so-called mistakes of the Communist Labar Party.

And now to the story of Cleveland's "Beer" Communists. It was our good friend Jos. Jodlbauer who lambasted the Communist Labor Party for its "impureness" at the several meetings of the German branch in Cleveland, and the Cleveland German branch eventually joined the Communist Party because it thought the Communist Labor Party not one hundred per cent communist.

New steps forward the official organ of the German branch of Cleveland which is also the official organ of the German branches in Ohio, and does what? Does nothing more nor less that advocate "beer" communism. This official organ, called the "Echo", in its main headline on page one, issue of October 25th, calls upon all good comrades to hurry to the ballot box on November 4th — to vote for the revolution? — to elect communist to office? NO. It asks all good comrades to hurry to the election on November 4th to VOTE FOR BEER.

Here is the call of these "beer" communists.

"TO THE BALLOT BOX ON NOVEMBER 4-TH".

"The known occurances in the party organization give the election upon November 4th only a secondary place. However, we must not stay away from the ballot box, but must, with our ballots protest against everything that has to do with prohibition, because as honest people we must not allow hypocrites to rob us of our liberty."

GREAT — ISN'T IT! Communist Party adherants calling upon the membership to battle for personal liberty — even intimating that it might be all right to vote for any old kind of candidates so long as they are "met" candidates. And it is the Communist Pardy which thinks itself TOO PURE to unite with the Communist Labor Party!

This together with Local Cleveland's call for a state convention in conjunction with reactionary Socialist Party locals in Ohio, are the two outstanding features of Communist Party menshevism. And undoubtedly the Communist Party will continue to attempt do dislodge the mote in the Communist Labor Party eye, overlooking the beam in its own.

Who Killed Cock Robin?

"I was never a Prohibitionist," said a man to me the other day. "But I saw it work in Seattle, and that convinced me." In other words the apologies for the saloon died when the saloon died. Just as the apologies for slavery died when slavery died. And as the apologies for war will die when war dies. And as the apologies for land monopoly, and profit-taking will die when land monopoly and profit-taking go the way of the saloon and slavery.

You have to kill an institution before you can get rid of its excuses. And because institutions are fundamentally economic it is the economic factor which kills them. Slavery went not because Garrison and Phillips talked against it. It went because it could not stand in the economic battle against wage labor. The saloon went, not because the W. C. T. U. held prayer meetings in saloons, and Gough and Father Mattews spilled their eloquence against it. Grant the good of all this. But the saloon went because it could not stand the economic pressure of sober communities and a sober industrialism. The war put it out of business quicker only because the war speeded up economic efficiency, and the saloon was not efficient.

And capitalism is going, not because the preachers and the educators and the editors are against it. They are not, and they will not be generally until it has gone. Why expect capitalism to raise flowers that will kill it rather than reproduce it?

No, capitalism is going because labar is coming. Industrial democracy is economically more fit than industrial autocracy, and that is why it is going to put industrial autocracy on the scrap heap. It is the biggest revolution in history, as much bigger than the fight against the saloon as industrialism is bigger in men's lives than their convivial habits, as much bigger than the struggle with African slavery as wage labor is more universal than was chattel slavery in the Nineteenth Century America of our fathers. It is the biggest revolution in human history, and will do more for the religion, education, and culture of tomorrow than anyman dare dream today.

But, remember, the preachers of capitalism are not putting capitalism out of business any more than the preachers of Virginia and South Carolina and Georgia put slavery out of business. No, it is the workingmen who are going to put capitalism out of the world. They are at it now. Their weapon is the strike. Not the ballot, except in a secondary way, for the ballot has been captured by the capitalist politician and the capitalist editor and the capitalist preacher. The one weapon the workingman has in his own hands is his job. It is the only weapon by which he can slay the Goliath of Capitalism.

And I for one am glad that he is giving it to Capitalism just where Goliath got it, in the head.

I am more interested in that fight right now than I am in all the smilings and smirkings and head-bobbings of all the stirrup-holders in the world.

Go to it, labor. More strengtr to your arm.

The Outlook in Russia

— By A. Bilan —

Two years have passed since the Russian workers began holding the destiny of their class in their own hands. The murderous warfare against the Proletarian Revolution in Russia by the combined forces of the world's capitalist imperialism have been unable to crush the Russian Socialist Soviet Republic. The eyes of the world are turned towards the eastern horizon, where we can read the glaring question: "To be, or not to be?" But this is not Hamlet's hesitating question — it is not even a question — it is a determined decision of an uncompromising class struggle. Dictatorship of the proletariat or Bourgeois — which shall be supreme?

In Russia at the present time, regardless of deprivations, heeding not the capitalist lies that are being spread, in the face of all opposition, the process of transformation to Communism is taking place; but that does not mean that the Russian workers alone will be able to reach this stage of society. They are only the pioneers who are preparing the way for a working class world. A Proletarian Revolution cannot be of local character. It comes as a rising tide inundating the entire capitalist society. In such position we find the Proletarian Revolution in Russia. Against it we find all capitalist governments, who still are holding clinched tight in their iron gloves the workers of their countries — the only allies and support in the Proletarian struggle. The Proletarian Revolution in Russia has only the hope of permanent success if it can count upon the support of the American and European working class. Therefore the necessary conditions for Proletarian action the world over are plainly to be seen. The war has brought sharp divisions between toilers and exploiters, has split all relations and prepared inevitable the last and final struggle between labor and capital. The war has destroyed the fruits of centuries of civilization, has confronted the masses with starvation. The example of the Russian Revolution has opened immense possibilities and wide perspective for the Communistic movement.

In pain and suffering is born the future; a new class is entering upon the stage of society creating its own will, in a world-wide struggle with its class enemies. One thing is clear — that without active support of the workers in other countries the working class of Russia and the poor peasantry with them will be crushed under the iron heel of the allied capitalist imperialism, and the bourgeois class in Russia will triumph once more with their "democracy" over hundreds of millions of workers. More than that, the darkest night of reaction would be inaugurated the world over.

The power of Soviets, the socialization of land, the nationalization of banks and industry is threatening the capitalist world with the vision of Proletarian Revolution. The imperialism of the world is asking "to be, or not to be?" It is bending all its forces to choke the Proletarian Revolution in Russia. In this fight the capitalists are united, setting aside their quarrels over markets and colonies. England, Germany, France, the United States, Turkey — all are fighting Communistic Russia. The historic work in the Proletarian Revolution by the Russian workers is fulfilled nobly. The further development of the Proletarian Revolution depends on the rest of the workers the world over. What is our duty? It is to give our active support, as workers of America, to help bring about the overthrow of the capitalist system, and not to allow it to crush our class revolution in Russia. We must show our class solidarity to our brothers in Russia. They have shown us the way towards working class emancipation, and are nobly carrying on their fight. The workers of England, of France, Italy are doing their share; demanding withdrawal of troops from Russia. What about us? President Wilson is waging a private war upon Russia, sending troops to Siberia. The recruiting of volunteers for Siberia is done openly by the War Department. The "free" American boys are flogged in Siberia by Wilson's friends. The Washington Government is seeking apologies from czaristic generals in Siberia, as if apologies would heal the flogged wounds of American soldier boys. Have not those two years of the heroic struggle of the workers in Russia convinced you to oppose the doings of your imperialists at home?

The possibilities of Soviet Russia under the workers' control is dependent not only on the sacrifices and heroic fight of the Russian workers, but also upon the demand of the workers in other countries that their governments cease their murderous actions against Soviet Russia. Our slogan shall be: "No troops, no volunteers, no ammunitions to fight against the Proletarian Revolution! Hands off Russia!"

Those slogans must be supported by action, like the English workers, the French marines, the Italian transport workers, and the Seattle Longshoremen put forth. They did not go to parliaments or congresses with petitions, begging the perpetrators not to do such things; they refused to load munitions to be shipped to kill Russian workers; others refused to go to Russia to war against their brothers.

This will be the active support given by us if we act as a class and not as individuals.

This action will give life to the workers' control of Russia, and it will teach that All Power to the Workers is the way to working-class emancipation.

A Song of Democracy

By Robert Whitaker

Lives there a workingman so dense
Who has not yet the common sense
To see that flags and forms of state,
Of which the masters proudly prate,
Are but the stock in trade of those Who fatten on the people's woes,
And with such symbols still divide
The folks whose backs they want to ride?

Where is the poor man's country? Where
The land that gives plain toil its share?
Where is the government that yields
To those who till the soil, their fields?
To those who build and weave, their tools?
Where are the workers not the stools
Of those, wherever they are met
Who live by other people's sweat?

When will the workers of all lands
Throw off their immemorial bands ?
The lying loyalties they cheer?
Their slave idolatries of fear?
And stand beneath one common sky,
As one to live, as one to die;
To own no flag, no state, no mood
Except the workers' brotherhood?

Mexico City, Oct. 13. — Industrial unionism a la I. W. W. was emphatically endorsed by Local Mexico City of the newly organized Communist Party of Mexico, at its meeting Friday night, Oct. 10. Members were instructed to join the Mexican I. W. W. that is being organized or if already members of craft unions, to try to get those unions to affiliate with the I. W. W.

The following permanent officers for the year, were elected by the local: General Secretary, Luis Macotela; Local Secretary, Roberto Sandoval; Treasurer, Angel Bernal. The local was provisionally organized the first week in September. Intervention was denounced in strong terms and plans made for opposing it. Speeches were made by the following officers of the national party: International Secretary Geo. Barreda; National Secretary Enrique H. Arce; and Linn A. E. Gale, publisher of Gale's Magazine and a member of the National Executive Committee. Meetings will be held every Saturday night hereafter.

Chapt. IV.

The Class Struggle.

"Well", said Herman, on the following evening while on their way to the village, "did you get all your economics stored away that George gave you last evening?"

"Yes, I think I have, but not at all perfectly. There are certain phases on which I need considerably more light before I will be able to classify and use them for myself. One of the points that persists in slipping from me, is that of the class struggle. I can see that it exists, but I cannot figure out how it originated, or why it exists:" said Jack meditatively. "I wish you would illustrate and explain it a little further."

"You have bitten off a mouthful," answered Herman. I'm afraid it will keep you chewing for months. To comprehend its origin you will have to study it's historical development from the middle period of barbarism to the present day. It's a big subject, passing thru various phases, changing and modifying in harmony with the changes and modifications in the prevailing mode of production. It will be up to you to read books and study for yourself, the growth and development of the proletariat thru the ages."

"What do you mean by proletariat?" asked the boy.

"The proletariat is that part of the people of a nation who have nothing to sell in the markets of the world except their human energy; their labor power. They are the class whom Marx said, "You have nothingh to loze but your chains and a world to gain." You and I are proletarians. We make our living by selling our work for wages, with which we buy the necessities of life, that we may evalue more strength to necessities. We do not own any machinery. The machinery is in the hands of the employing class. We must use the machine in order to work. We must work in order to live. The capitalists have us tied by our guts to the machine" Herman explained.

"That's clear enough." remarked the boy. "Now give me your definition of a capitalist."

"A capitalist," Herman explained, "is the possessor of land and tools that the working class needs in order to produce the necessities of life. The capitalists class is that element in human society that has made itself master of the resources and instruments of wealth production, and who will permit the proletariat to use them only under the consideration of profit. If a capitalist cannot make money off of your labor power he will not employ you. You must be employed in order to live. Thus it is that capital thru heir control of life's necessities practically have the power of life and death over you. They make you pay a price for the privilege of existence."

Jack looked blank. George noticed it and tried his hand to clarify matters. Said he to Herman, "Why don't you hit the kid on the head with the first volume of Capital?" Then he went on, "Now listen Jack, take it this way, what you want to know, is, what constitutes the class struggle today. It is the struggle between the worker and the owner of land and tools, for the possession of the products of labor. The two phases of the struggle maybe expressed in the words, wages and profits. The worker sells his labor power for wages. It is his commodity, that means the thing he has to sell.

"Naturally he wants as much as he can get for it, and the tendency is to give as little as he can "get by" with. That is the essence of all business, as little as possible for as much as possible. It is the natural attitude of man. The buyer of labor power wants to pay as little for human energy as the worker will accept and drive the worker to his utmost capacity of production. That is the class struggle. Capital can only grow on the difference between what it pays for labor and what labor creates in wealth. A capitalist is a human being who grows fat on the product of unpaid labor."

"Why don't the workers kill the capitalists then," Jack remarked innocently. At which both men laughed heartily.

"There is a good reason," George explained. "The bulk of the workers are like yourself, they do not understand the relaton that exists between workers and owners. Then there is a large element such as the farmers for instance who function in the two classes, being both producers and exploiters. It is not the business of the class conscious worker to kill the exploiters. It is rather his task to educate his fellow men to a cognisance of their position in society."

"The difference is quite clear," answered the boy. "But what will it lead to?"

"Figure it out," suggested Herman, "You create by your work on an average ten dollars worth of wealth per day. You get two dollars in wages from which you live. Your boss employs a hundred men, from each of whom he gets eight dollars in profits; hence your income is two dollars and his income is eight hundred per day. Now compare your incomes. Who will buy the most land, you or the boss? Your boss gets more money that he can use or waste hence he must re-invest in something and that something is already owned. He buys it and puts men to work on it; but every time he increases the number of his employes he also increase the volume of his profits, which it becomes necessary to re-invest, while you the worker have nothing to invest. Can't you see how the time must inevitably come when a few men, have everything and the mass of men nothing, but their strength. That when that condition obtains in the world the mass of the people will be dependent for the privilege of work upon a few owners of the world's wealth. Can't you see how this system of wage labor is enslaving the human race? For where one class is tied by their heart strings to the machine the other class cannot be free."

"Yes, I can see how this will lead to the death of freedom, to a condition of slavery. But what can be done about it? You show me where we are going but I don't want to be on my way."

"Nor does any class conscious worker want to go into that slavery to which the development of capitalism inevitably leads. That is the reason we organize the militant proletarians into political parties and into industrial unions, that have for their objects the education of the working class to a recognition of where they're going for the purpose of abolishing the wages system and instituting in its place the collective ownership and democratic control of the means of production and distribution. To the end that all men shall become workers in, and owners of, the industries with which they are affiliated."

"Now you souse him on the bean with a volume of capital, "Herman retorted. At which George laughed.

"I begin to see the whole thing. A worker who is on to his job approaches every thing from an entirely different viewpoint. He has more to do than merely make a living, because, the system under which he is making a living carries within itself the germ of its own destruction. It is therefore necessary not only to make a living by working for wages but to see to it that the opportunity to make a living by working for wages does not slip from our hands.

"Yes," said George, "and that consciousness modifies and changes all your philosophical concepts. It affects your conception of truth, justice, God, Devil, Heaven and Hell, everything. The way that you make your living colors your view point-the preacher in the South was pro-slavery and his favorite text on Sunday morning was," Abraham bought his servants with his gold". The parson preached as he was paid. The chink of the dollar was the voice of God. While in the North the preachers belonging to the same church took for their text 'Stand ye then in the freedom with which Christ has made you free' The churches split along the line of the material interest of those who pay the pew rent. To them, then as now, the voice of God was a source of bread. In the North it was considered a virtue for a slave to escape. In the South it was a crime. It is the wedge that splits the classes in society apart."

At this point they entered the village. It being Saturday night they decided to stay in town so as to get a bath and a decent night's rest and on the morrow they would go out to the lakes in pursuit of ducks and geese.

George and Herman had led Jack into the world of economics. Now Jack led them into the world of nature. Natural things were the things he loved. As George and Herman had taught him economics so he pointed out to them the wonders of Biology and to his surprise discovered that the same laws producing social phenomena in a modified form also produced the phenomena of life. For instance, when he was asked to state the reason why the females of pheasants and ducks as well as other birds had sober plumage while the male of the species abounded in brilliant colors, he pointed out to his companions that during the hatching season it was of advantage to the mother bird to blend with her environment. If she did not she would be a conspicuous target for all forms of beats of prey. It is the life necessity of the race that gives to the female her sober plumage. The same is true of the young chick, both male and female, it is colored so as to blend with its sorroundings. The mother hen must care for herself and her young, while the chief concern of the male is to attract a mate. He has only himself to care for. Thus he can afford to have the more brilliant plumage."

"Do you mean to tell us that birds select their plumage thru an effort of will?" Herman asked.

"No" Jack answered, "will has nothing to do with it. The bright colored mother does not raise her young and the dark colored male does not get a mate. These are the material factors involved."

George called the boys attention to the fact that he had used the word material factors in his discussion of the markings of birds and pointed out that what the boy had observed in the phenomena of wild life also was true in the phenomena of society. "The reason that there are not more class conscious workers in the working class is similar to that which causes so few bright colored females in the bird world. The man who has resented the encroachment of capital in an active way, has generally been driven from place to place and been illed. In ancient times Spartacus asked his fellow slaves if they were beastes to stand like dumb oxen awaiting the butcher's knife, and told them if they were men that they should strike down their guard and gain the mountain passes, there to do bloody work as did their sires at old Thermoplea. But Spartacus was killed and his followers crucificied along the Appian Way. Spartacus was an off colored bird in Roman slave society.

Grachus plead with the Roman senate that the land be restored to the people and they hurled him off the Sorpion rock. He was an off colored ird in Roman slave society. Christ saod, "Call ye no man master," and he was crucified for the same reason. So we can come down the list, Savanerola in Florence, Emmett in Ireland, John Brown in the United States all died, because they didn't blend with the industrial, political or religious world in which they lived. It is natural law in the social world that the un-adaptable perish. Even in our own day the radicals are jailed and driven from place to place so that they cannot perpetuate themselves.

"Now I'll tell you" said the engineer, "that if you will study as diligently the problems of organized labor as you have studied the problems of nature, then you will be a power for good in the world. I can also tell you that you'll never be rich."

IN ECLIPSE

For a year the world has been treated to the eclipse of one of earth's most brilliant luminaries. And the effect upon the luminary appears to have as little effect as an eclipse has upon earth's sun. A year ago, had any one openly stated that Woodrow Wilson would have passed into the shadows of public disapproval to the extent he has reached at this moment, he would have been accused of disloyalty, branded as a traitor and probably delivered over to be hounded and persecuted by agents of commerce clubs and mobs of patriotic blackguards.

Just before the President wrote the fatal open letter to American voters asking for the return of a Democratic Congress, no finger of accusation had been lifted against him. He shone with all the splendor of omniscience, his rays lighted all the world and warmed the remotest corners stricken as it was, with grief and sorrow.

As an evidence of the unstapleness of fame and glory he presentts an unsurpassed example. Never has a man stood so high in his countrymen's and the world's opinion and fallen with the velocity of a plummet to the depths as has he. But tho the President's eclipse began at home just previous to the last Congressional election, it was not until the return from his first trip to Europe that any evidence of the world's changed valuation was in evidence.

President Wilson went to Europe a conqueror with the world at his feet in worship. He came back beaten, despised by Europe and denounced at home. His partial tour of the country in the interests of the discredited League of Nations, did not add to his standing with his own people. Rather did it act as an irritant, and is merely playing the cheapest kind of political tricks.

President Wilson stands alone, deserted by his political party in Congress, by the people of this country and of the world. He is parting into a period ignored of friend r foe.

CAN THEY CURE IT?

From preacher to President the daily offerings of cures for discountet grow in volumne. Settlement workers, priests, doctors, lawyers, senators, policemen, suffragettes, Samuel Gompers. In fact the whole riff-raff of capitalism's hangers-on eagerly extend their nostroms for society's salvation.

The variety too, is great. Mostly, they contradict each other and this does not lead to greater faith in their curative powers. But there is one which is coming to the front more and more as THE remedy. More and more of our statesmen and world saviors are accepting it as such. It is the resort to the armed power of the state; more stringent laws against the expression of discontent, then the police, soldiers, riot guns, armoured cars. This is the "cure" for bolshevism and revolution. This is the last resort of the capitalist state, in fact. It is well that the workers recognize it as such. Also remember, the capitalist state, as Karl Marx said, is but a committee to manage the affairs of the capitalists class.

The latest nostrum to appear comes from Senator McKellar, of Tenn., who has offered a bill aiming to stamp out radicalism root and branch. The provisions of this bill are enlightening as well as amusing. It provides that any person even advocating by peaceable means the overthrow of ANY goverument, or associating privately or publically with such advocates shall be subject to a fine of not less than $5,000, or from [illegible] years in prison.

It must be admitted this is "going some". America, the land of democracy will soon reach the stage of Bismark's iron laws if this bill becomes law. We could almost hope it will become law. The espionage law is not half stringent enough. While the worker's press has been almost obliterated, and free speech denied in almost every city in the country, workers can still converse with their wives about the mounting grocery bills and the solcless condition of Jonney's shoes.

This bill however, would put a stop to all that violent talk. It would teach us to keep our mouths shut about our master's business.

Pass the bill gentlemen, by all means. Gives us more repression. The criminal syndicalism bill has but added its tens of thousands to the army of discontented. This bill would add hundreds of thousands. Let's have it.

By the way wasn't it a certain king, who afterward became headless, who said "give them a whiff of grape shot"? And wasn't it administered — with what success the French Revolution tells us!

Americanism!

— BY SKYGAC —

Lately
we have heard
SO MUCH
about a certain
something they call
that I decided I would
LOOK AROUND and see
if I could find out
WHAT IT WAS ALL ABOUT.
I had read the WORDS
of the President where
he had said that if the
MINERS STRUCK
it would be unlawful.
The president is an
American and if he says
a strike is unlawful
then AMERICANISM must
mean a belief that it
IS UNLAWFUL TO STRIKE.
I had read that in GARY
the peaceful parades of
STEEL WORKERS were
stopped by the militia
with machine guns, tanks
AND AVERYTHING
and the army was under
the command of Gen. Wood
who is also an American
and if he says that
Peaceful assembly is unlawful
then AMERICANISM must
mean a belief that it
IS UNLAWFUL TO ASSEMBLE
peacefully together to
petetion the government for
REDRESS of GRIEVANCES.
OVER IN OHIO
the troops were also
CALLED OUT
by the Governor in behalf
of the CAPITALISTS
and as the governor is an
AMERICAN, it must be
that it is UNAMERICAN
to be anything except a
CAPITALIST, or else
a worker that is
SERVILE ENOUGH TO ALLOW
the capitalists to
HAVE THEIR OWN SWEET WAY without resistance.
DID NOT LIKE
these conclusions
because they were
contrary to all I had learned in school

about Patrick Henry
and the
DECLARATION OF

and everything,
but they were
TRUE TO FACT
even if contrary to
what I had been taught,
and I was sorely worried
and sought for an
ANSWER to the problem
in heredity,
Here is what I found;
AMERICA was settled by
Foreigners, who
KILLED OFF the original
owners of the land and
TOOK it for their own.
We had three kinds of
Foreigners here then,
The CRIMINAL
who was deported here for
CRIME.
The ADVENTURER
who came as an
INDENTURED servant
or just plain adventurer,
and the RELIGIOUS FANATIC.
These elements,
Crooks adventurers, and
murderers of INDIANS
land thieves and
Religious fanatics
form the parent stock
from which, with the
additions of NEW
IMMIGRANTS, make
up the bulk of
AMERICANS.
So
must be the sum total
of the inherited
characteristics
of the parent stock.

The Coming of the Storm

By Robin Adair

Do you hear the workers toiling in the murky shaft of Fate?
  Heavens! listen to the thunder of the sound,
Of a million whispered curses; a million thoughts of hate;
  A molten stream of anger — underground.
Do you see the miner sweating, reeking naked to the loin,
  Oh, you pious bible-thumping Man of God?
De you see his widow weeping by his body, Man of Coin,
  And his starving children, homeless at your nod?
    If the game is worth the candle,
    'Tisn't you who turns the handle;
  'Tisn't you who mans the windless — Man of God.

Oh listen to the echo in the stokehole and the mine,
Oh [illegible] voices all a-wail;
  Of a million anguished voices [illegible]
By the railroad and the quarry, or midst the bush and pine,
  I the stockyard and the foundry and the jail.
Do you hear the spirits stirring in the graves of shattered hopes,
  Oh, you soulles, brass encrusted Man of Fat?
Do you hear the clanging voices of the dead men in the stopes,
  And the whisper of the "blackleg" and the "rat?"
    Oh, its dividends and hampers,
    To the music of the campers;
  It is you Dame Fortune pampers — Man of Fat.

Do you hear the faint, far rustle in the tree tops on the peak?
  (How the murmur gathers volume as it nears)
Do you hear it, Man of Mammon? You're the cursed thing they seek;
  'Tis your victims — and the tempest is their jeers.
Oh, just hearken to the howling and the shrieking of the blast!
  Hear the trump of Resurrection, Man of Cash!
For the one who once was tyrant, shall be Serf in fetters fast,
  And the broken slaves of years shall ply the lash.
    Oh, its greed and niggard wages,
    [illegible]
  Down the ghastly path of ages — Man of Cash!

In Russia

THE THEATRE

Soviet Russia is working hard to popularize the theatre and a system of committees called the Proletkult has been formed to deal with this matter. Proletkult is a composite word, denoting, of course, proletarian culture — there is now a prolific manufacture in Russia of new composite words to serve new needs. The Proletkult organizes in all districts, schools where workers are educated in music, dancing, and the mimic arts. When these students are sufficiently trained they play in company with the old actors. There is a demand for thetrical artistes which it is difficult to supply and no actors are unemployed.

The price of theatre tickets is low and the tickets are offered for sale first through the factories workshops, offices, wherever work is carried on. Only if any tickets are left after the work centres have been supplied are the tickets put up for general sale. Only then have the hostile bourgeoisie who refuse to work an opportunity to buy theatre tickets. As a rule the workers have bought up all the theatre tickets and only a few cinema tickets remain; indeed it is evident that presently it will only be possible to attend places of amusement if one is willing to work.

The theatres are becoming more and more popular: the cinemas less so. The general view in Russia is that the cinema should not be use for drama but for scientific purposes: for revealing the growth of plants, the depths of the sea, and so on.

The Soviets regard the theatre as a valuable means of social and artistic education: hence its popularity.

THE PHONOGRAPH AND PROPAGANDA

The phonograph is much used in propaganda. There is a widespread desire to hear Lenin speak; to hear Trotzky, Angelica Balabanoff, Zinoviev, Alexandra Kollontai.

Russia is an enormous country; the only way for the mass of people to hear speakers is by the phonograph, and request for the records of their speeches comes in a growing stream from all over Russia. The records are set going in barracks, parks, and open spaces. Our visitor recently heard a speech by Kollontai in one of the squares of Moscow.

LEARNING BY DOING

More than sixty millions of the Russian people are directly dependent upon the Russian Co-operative Unions The Consumers Unions have twelve million members (heads of families). The credit societies have four million members. The producers and marketers, societies have four million members. Beginning with one co-operative society in 1865 Russia at latest reports can boast of some forty thousand co-operative societies of varying strength.

Russia is engaged in the greatest economic experiment of the age — an experiment aimed to demonstrate the capacity of the workers for self-government. As a background for this experiment the Russian workers have built up a system in which millions are engaged, as a part of their daily routine, in the processes of active co-operation which enables them to learn by doing.

DO PRISONS REFORM?

By H. L. Giles.

If you mean the "old-fashioned" kind, which still exists in many places, the answer is decidedly "No." A dungeon, close confinement of any sort; ignorant, unfeeling and cruel guards; compulsion and degradation of the meanest kind never reformed or regenerated anything. But there is no reason why the right type of penal institution should not benefit misguided persons who have come within its walls. Take Western Pennsylvania's own institution, in Center County, as an instance. Who could help but be benefitted by the healthful life on its farm, the work in the open air — close to nature and God—the effort to teach a helpful vication, the humane treatment its prisoners are said to receive.

It is necessary that there be a place of confinement for unfortunate persons who become convicts. But at the same time it is true convicts are human beings, responsive to humane treatment. It is punishment enough to shut them off from the rest of humanity, without marking their lives a succession of horrors. Give them encouragement. Give them education. Give them healthful work and wholesome recreation that will lift their minds above the sordidness of their situation. Put capable, whole-hearted, healthy, unselfish men in charge of them men whose actions will be an inspiration for well-doing, rather than a model for baseness. A convict has become what he is because of some erior in his training, some mistake in his environment. The vile environment of the oldtime penitentiary will not change him. But place about him influences that will show him the benefits of right [illegible] living, the advantages [illegible] of honesty, the worth of help[illegible] others, and he will come out "reformed."

SCOTT NEARING AT AKRON

Workers of Akron are in store for a treat on Nov. 11th when comrade Scott Nearing, writer and socialist will deliver a lecture at Eagle Hall Nov. 11th. Prof. Nearing is natinally known as one of the foremost educational lecfurers in the country and any one attending this lecture is assured of a discourse of unusual value. A large audience is expected.

Watch for advertising of the meeting.

COMRADES:—

We are under considerable expense in bringing speakers here for these meetings. Every comrade should therefore take a deep interest in the splendid lectures given and support this series liberally.

Every comrade and fellow-worker is urged to attend each lecture and bring others with them. Dont forget the dates and remember to bring others and help the movement along. Fill the [illegible] hall to overflowing.

A KING A QUEEN AND THE SCABS.

A real live king and his queen have been tourning these benighted states of late. It is not so long since we were being compelled to voluntarily contribute foodstuffs, cash and clothing for the benefit of the starving Belgians, and now before the peace treaty has been signed the Belgian King, Queen and Royal party take a trip to the land of sham democracy which will cost over a million dollars. The plute press recently carried the story of how the king and queen walked over the hot iron in the steel mills of Pittsburg, and how the queen climbed to an advantageous position in order to take a picture of the men handling a red-hot ingot. When she got that picture she got a picture of a bunch of scabs. It is but logical however for kings, queen and scabs to herd together.

Declaration on Unity of the National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party on the question of Unity with the Communist Party.

In view of the fact that the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party has again refused to accept the Unity invitation extended by the Communist Labor Party on Oct. 13th we issue the following declaration to the membership of both parties.

1 We reaffirm our sincere desire for Communist Unity. We are sure that the invitations that we have extended to the Communist Party to meet with us in Unity Conference are in harmony with the will of the membership, not only of the Communist Labor Party, but of the Communist Party as well. The Communist Comrades in both organizations hope for unity of all true Communist elements in ONE Party.

2 We regret the seeming inability of the officialdom of the Communist Party to sense this desire of their own membership, and we express our firm conviction that in time this membership will enforce its will. The Communist officials that now prevent Unity will be compelled to clear the way, or all real Communist elements will leave the Communist Party just as they left the old Socialist Party when that Party's officialdom refused to ebey the mandates of its revolutionary membership.

3 The excuse of the Communist Party officials that they have no power to act in this matter is palpably untrue. The Communist Party's constitution gives their Executive Committee full power to initiate referendums. If they really desired unity and believed that a referendum offered the only means, they could immediately submit the question to referendum and let their membership decide it.

4 In making our unity offer we did not thereby approve of all the elements in the Communist Party. We are not surprised to find unclear and undesireable elements in that Party, opposed to Communist Unity.

Elements that are engaged in dickering with reactionary Socialist Party Locals in an attempt to wrest property from the Communist Labor Party, as the National Executive Secretary of the Communist Party is now doing in Ohio, can not be expected to help bring about unity of all real Communist forces.

Groups of so-called Communists that appeal to the capitalist courts to rob Communist Labor Party Branches of Party property, as some of them are now doing in New York, are surely not desireable elements with whom to unite on an equal basis of Communist Comradeship.

Neither can we place the laurels of 100% Communism upon the brows of those that are rallying the proletarian hosts to the polls for the suport of bourgeois wets in the defense of "personal liberty" against the onslaughts of bourgeois drys, as is being done right now by members of the Communist Party and one of their official organs in Cleveland.

5 In spite of the fact that we see these and many other signs of centrism and menshevism in the Communist Party our invitation for a unity conference on a basis of equality still stands. We know that the great mass of the rank and file of the Communist Party is sound and revoluitonary. We have absolute faith that if unity is achieved on a PROPER basis, so that the membership has an opportunity to assert itself, these unclear elements will eliminate themselves and a Party of true proletarian Communism will result.

6 The letter of the Communist Party dated Oct. 25th answering our unity invitation contains no proper basis for unity. It contains no unity basis at all. In this they merely ask the officials of the communist Labor Party to betray their membership. They refuse to consider even a meeting for the purpose of attempting to work out a basis for a unity conference. To call that an offer of unity is rank hypocrisy. We spurn their bribe in the shape of an offer to liquidate our debts.

7 There is a fundamental difference between the two Parties that must be considered by the membership before Unity could be achieved. that difference is in the form of organization. The Communist Party is a loosely federated group of almost independent parties. Because of this very structure of organization their officials have power to break them a part. Where "leaders" have this power, they will inevitably enter into conspiracies and combinations to maintain their control. This must eventually destroy the Party, just as it almost wrecked the Left Wing movement last summer. It was one of these very cliques that bolted the Left Wing Conference in New York, split the revolutionary movement in two, sent out the call for its separate convention and organized the Third Party, the self-styled Communist Party.

8 It would be futile folly for any one to join the Communist Party with the idea of correcting these fatal errors and ousting this organized clique from control either at the next convention or at any other time. They openly boast that should they lose control they would again bolt, cause another split and organize another new Party. "Boring from within" can therefore not bring unity. It is impossibly to achieve a lasting unity of Communist forces unless this clique control is corrected at the very start.

9 It is apparant that the officialdom of the Communist Party is determined to maintain its clique control at all costs, even at the price of another split in their own Party. Upon them rests the heavy responsibility of bringing forth a third Party, since they are the ones that split away from the Left Wing organization and started the third organization and the third Party. They are the ones that refuse all unity offers before and during the conventons. They are the ones that refuse every unity offer today.

We therefore urge upon the membership of the Communist Party as their only recourse that they withhold from their officialdom all support, financial or otherwise, to compel them to change their attitude and agree to unity.

11 We urge upon the Communist Party membership not to permit the unfortunate and biased attitude of their "leaders" to cause them to relax their efforts in Communist propaganda. We invite all branches, Locals, Federation and State organizations of the Communist Party that may be in accord with the platform program and constitution of the Communist Labor Party to join our Party and co-operate with us in our activities to spread the message of Communism among the proletarian masses.

12 The Communist Labor Party stands squarely upon the principles of Communism outlined by the Third International with which we have affiliated.

The tactiets of the Communist Labor Party are determined by the revolutionary needs of the class war in America.

Its form of organization meets the revolutionary situation, since it gives the full possibility to organize all Communist elements in this country into one strongly centralized Party.

Its Party machinery is now well established. It is in direct contact with the revolutionary workers right in the shops. It has taken over the "Voice of Labor" for shop propaganda and organization and the 'Class Struggle" for the scientific education of the membership. It has established other national periodicals to supply every need of a great working-class movement. It is already engaged in the publication of numerous timely leaflets, pamphlets and books.

We call upon all class conscious workers, especially upon those now in the Communist Party, to join the Communist Labor Party and work with us to reach America's thirty million wage workers with the message of Communism, to rally them for the struggle against American and World Capitalism, — to abolish the Dictatorship of the Capitalist class and to clasp hands across the seas with our Bolshevik and Spartacan Comrades to establish the Dictatorship of the World's Proletariat.

What's the Matter with America?

John Reed.

Comparatively untouched by the War, her man-power almost intact, her immense resources scarcely scratched, the Unites States began the year 1919 as one of the most reactionary nations on earth. Never had we felt the strain of imminent invasion, as the people of Europe had felt it; never had we starved, or frozen, or dragged our married men from their families, as in other belligerent countries Labor here was getting war-wages; "radicalism" of all sorts — the Socialists, the I. W. W.'s, even the Non-Partisan Leaguers — had been privately and publicly mobbed into comparative silence; the vast bulk of the population, and especially of the workers, seemed satisfied and patriotic.

To all apperances the bulk of the people were behind President Wilson and his much-heralded League of Nations. Samuel Gompers had become a statesman of international importance, wielding the massed power of the American Federation of Labor which seemed as solid and eternal as the Rock of Ages.

THE GREAT CHANGE

Now, nine months later, what do we see?

Woodrow Wilson a failure, a proven hypocrite and liar, deserted by the Liberals, viciously assaulted by the reactionaries, Gompers absolutely discredited abroad, and coming more and more into open conflict with the rank and file of his own organization. The Labor movement of America stirring, awakening to new ideas, new forms of organization, new methods of industrial warfare, revolting against its leaders — becoming revolutionary!

Those frightened authorities who see in all this stirring and upheaval the work of "Bolshevik propaganda," are on the wrong track. Certainly events in Europe have had their repercussion here; it is impossible for the workers of Russia to take over control of their country or the workers of England to threaten Direct Action for political ends, without making American workers think.

But no revolutionary movement was ever yet caused by propaganda alone. Conditions make Revolutions. Conditions have caused, and are causing, the tremendous change in the attitude of the American Labor movement.

How It Happened

The war speeded up industrial evolution tremendously, even here. Under emergency agreements with the A. F. of L., Union rules and safeguards were suspended, the skilled trades were diluted. Labor was still further subdivided. The War Labor Board contributed to the change by permitting the workers to air their grievances, and then demonstrating its inability to combat the great capitalist employers. The various Liberty Bond, Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. drives, in which the workers were forced to subscribe or lose their jobs; the supression of all class-activities of the workers by anti-Labor, strike-braking organizations of employers such as the National Security League, the American Protective League, The American Defense Society; the lynch-law employed by chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade — all these fed the smoudering resentment of the workers.

This burst into flame when the signing of the Armistice suddenly shattered the artificial social and economic conditions which had prevailed in the nations organized for war. With Governmental pressure removed, the workers found themselves face to face with a brutal capitalist class, whose first instinct was to contract industry. In the ship-yards, the steel mills, the mines, thousands of men were laid off. The restlessness of the workers was met by "anti-vagrancy" laws, such as that of Kansas, which forces an unemployed worker to take a job at any wages; by "criminal syndicalist" laws, which struck directly at all effective forms of labor organization.

The Prohibitive Cost of Living

The end of the War didn't put an end to the high prices of living necessities. On the contrary, with artificial government control released, an orgy of profiteering set in. This was due, among other things, to the clearly visible bankruptcy of Europe, which prevented the export of surplus products to be disposed of in foreign markets, and also to the uncertainty of foreign investments in "backward countries" — about whose disposition the Peace Conference was squabbling, and in certain sections of which the Social Revolution was threatening or in full swing. The plethora of gold with which the banks of this country were bursting also had a tendency to raise prices, because of the cheapness of money.

These two counter-tendencies — the rapid rise in the cost of living, and the attempt of manufacturers to 'transform industry to a peace basis" — in other words, to reduce wages to what they were before the war — quickly produced a crisis. The workers, who had already discovered that even war-wages wouldn't buy as much for the dollar as wages before the war, were faced with actual want. Moreover, the sudden cancellation of war-contracts, leading to the discharging of thousands of owrkers, gave the remainder the bitter choice between staying at work on insufficient wages, or walking the streets.

The issue was sharply precipitated by the ultimatum of the Railroad Brotherhoods, asking for vast wage increases or the adoption of the Plumb Plan, and threatening a general railroad strike.

The Government Gets Busy

This sudden revelation of the power which might be employed if the workers really made up their minds to it, shocked and frightened the Government. Immediately the President and Congress got busy with all sorts of schemes to reduce prices. Laws were proposed to punish profiteers, investigations started, retailers by the dozen arrested for hoarding food and clothing stocks, the Army supplies were ordered sold through the public schools and the Post Office.

But even in its panic, the capitalist class did not intend to relinquish a penny of its profits. It served notice on the Government that it would sooner see industry go to smash than to surrender an atom of its power.

This put the politicians in a difficult position. The Government had to obey its capitalist masters; so Wilson refused the Railroad men's demands, and issued a statement denouncing strikes. But the Administration was fearful of losing the workers votes; it had to pretend to be doing something. Therefore the invitation to the Capital-Labor Conference in Washington on October 6th; hence the appeals for an "industrial truce"....

Labor Betrayed By Its Leaders

The workers, however, who are too close to the facts of life to be fooled by such propositions, and whose actual need is driving them to immedate action, will not wait. They must strike to live. They must strike to maintain and strengthen their organizations and alter them to meet new conditions. Under no industrial truce will the capitalists cease to make class war on the working class.

The interests of the Craft Union leadership, however, are different from the workers' interests. The A. F. of L. oligarchy is interested in keeping Craft Unionism intact, in making Organized Labor a power with which to dicker for a share of the capitalists' profits. This power — the workers of this country — they are willing to sell to the capitalist class for any political game or imperialistic scheme, in return for "a fair wage."

It is for this that the A. F. of L. leadershpi surrendered the Organized Labor movement to the War Party in 1917. It is for this that the "leaders" of the Trade Union movement in America have always been the bitterest of Socialism. It is for this, finally that Gompers and his clique have joined with the Government in its efforts to sabotage the Plumb Plan, to halt strikes, to collaborate in the Conference of October 6th.

The Workers Can't Wait

But the workers, as we have said above, cannot wait. They must get relief. They strike. The leaders forbid. They strike anyway — they must strike. And this struggle between the masses forced to move forward, and the "leaders" who want to hold them back, reveals to the workers the reactionary character of the whole Craft Union structure, and its function as a buttress of the capitalists system.

This leads to the smash-up of the old rigid Labor Movement in this country, and the inevitable conception of a new organization based upon actual necessities and needs, and so organized as to be able effectively to cope with the gigantic new growth of capitalist power — One Big Uunion!

The Seattle and Winnipeg strikes, and the abortive Boston strike — all bitterly condemned by the A. F. of L. leaders; the great Steel strike, tying up an entire basic industry, from the mines to the finished product — which the A. F. of L. politicians have also tried to stop; these are the first tentative tests of the new form of organization.

So Revolutions begin — so the Revolution is rapidly approaching here in the United States.

Social Revolution Impending in Poverty-Stricken Italy

The Council of the Chamber of Labor in Rome, passed a resolution in opposition to the farmation of a militarist-imperialist government in Italy, which says:

"The proletariat will descend into the streets, build barricades and sacrifice their lives rather than fall into the rapacious claws of a military imperialism."

To the outside world it may seem as though all Italy is fervently Nationalist. In the Nationalist ranks are arrayed the so-called "best people," the business men and nobility, and the Nationalist cause is supported by the capitalist press, the "leading" papers.

But there is another party, less noisy but more numerous, less apparent in action but the most powerful, the Communist of Italy. What D'Anuzio has done they, too, can do, and the breach he made in Italian military discipline can be broadended by them to the breaking point.

At present Italy is on the brink of social revolution, and the almost unprecedented expedient of calling the leaders of every party to a Crown Council was an eleventh hour attempt to find a course of action that would stem the tide of revolt. The greatest significance of D'Annunzio's coup lies not in disobedience to the Supreme Council — though that would be serious enough — but in the proof thus given of the weakness of the bonds of discipline in the Italian Army.

D'Annunzio's act precipitated a crisis that had been latent in Italy since the early Spring. Even before the war Italian finances were in bad shape and her industries shaky. Today the country is virtually bankrupt and the Government is resorting to the desperate measure of a levy on capital — an enforced loan — as the sole chance of staving off ruin. To the lack of money must be added the lack of wheat, meat and coal.

The capitalist government of the world know that D'Annunzio is "rocking the boat" in dangerous waters, they know that he is brandishing a torch in the powder magazine of Italian proletarian revolutionary activities. An explosion is bound to follow. This is the reason why the Supreme Council in Paris does not dare to interfere and agree to leave the matter to the Government immediately concerned, because any interference by outsiders might start the conflagration of revelution which could only end by the workers of Italy organizing a Soviet form of government and demand all power to the workers like their brothers in Russia.

The immediate question that concerns the ruling class in Italy is not how to get D'Annunzio out of Fiume, or whether the city should be annexed or abandoned, but an agonized search for a path of safety in the storm that is about to break. As matters stand today the working class of Italy see very plainly that the ruling class is committed to a policy of imperialism, that neither puts fire in their stoves nor bread on their tables.

D Annunzio has stampeded the government along imperialistic lines. For the sake of what the workers regard as empty glory he has jeopardized the already scanty food supply. He has raised the flag of rebellion, in the interest of the imperialists and has got away with it. The workers are asking, "Is the future to be nothing but semistarvation, unbearable taxes, and militarism with its death and suffering for the many and honor and glory for the few?

The Communists, too, have devoted adherents. They, too, can take the power into their own hands, establish their own government and destroy the present imperialistic state.

They may not be ready to strike yet. They may prefer to wait until the first pinch of cold and hunger has ripened the masses for revolt. But it is now that the decisions of the communists are being made, and the seeds of their action sown.

Premier Nitti and his associates on the Crown Council know it, as do the Capitalist-imperialist governments of the world, and it is that knowledge of the impending revolution in Italy that is causing them so much enxiety, for they know that with Italy in the hands of her proletariat, all the Balkans would raise the relief banner of Communism and march to the relief of their embattled brothers in Russia.

Speed the day.

THE WORKER

"proletariat" and "sabotage" proved unmountable barriers for this genius who reminded us of another prosecutor we have in mind who was characterized as "having the manners of a coyote and the face of a thief". Knowledge of ordinary English words and their correct relation one with another, is apparently not required in the legal profession if the example submitted by prosecutor Stanton be taken as evidence. In fact one may conclude that ordinary knowledge of grammar is held in about the same esteem in a capitalist court as are the fundamentals of our Constitution, relating to free speech, and free assemblage.

The Sin of Silence

To sin by silence when we should protest
Makes cowards out of men. The human race
Has climbed on protest. Had no voice been raised Against injustice, ignorance and lust,
The Inquisition yet would serve the law,
And guillotine decide our last disputes,
The few who dare must speak and speak again,
To right the wrongs of many.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Scott Nearing's Lecturettes

Mexico, like several of the countries of Europe, has had a revolution. Consequently, there is a widespread effort, on the part of those who are not enthusiastic about a revolution in the United States, to make it appear that the Mexicans have suffered terribly as a result of the disturbance of Diaz-Huerta law and order. Recent reports from Mexico put a very different fact on the matter.

The foreign commerce of Mexico has never been as great as it was during the calendar year 1918 — and this despite the persistent efforts of certain interests to make it appear that Mexico was in no position to do business with anybody.

The real situation is best reflected in the reports of certain corporations, financed by outside capital, and utilizing the resources of Mexico as a source of profit. The Aguila Company (English) had an original investment of about $30.000.000 American gold. On this investment, in 1918, the company reported net profits of over fourteen millions and paid a dividend of 25 per cent. on its stock The Dutch Shell Company paid a dividend in the same year of 48 per cent. on the preferred stock and 37 per cent. on the common. The Pan-American Petroleum & Transport Company is reported as pying dividends of 28 per cent. a quarter. So the story goes.

Poor Mexico? Hardly. If she were as poor as we are led to believe, there is little chance that Lord Cowdry and the Rockefeller interests, and the French, Dutch, Belgian and Norwegian capitalists would take the interest in her that they do.

Quite the contrary, it is a case of Rich Mexico. Her ample resources, her cheap labor, her heretofore pliant governments have offered opportunities for plunder that have drawn the vultures together.

If the Mexican people were poor, they would be left as lonely as are many other poor ones in the world. Rich and defenseless they are the prey of every spoiler. The revolution gives an opening. Disturbances afford an opportunity, and the interventionists cry their wares to the four corners of the globe.

Mexico — rich in resources and commercial opportunities.

Mexico — poor in self-determination and international liberty!

Above the Struggle

Men and women; little children; families; neighborhoods; whole communities are engaged in a life and death struggle to secure the necessaries of life. Above the struggle are the privileged ones whose property and special advantages free them from the jungle of "civilization." A recent announcement of the New York Federal Reserve Bank tells the story of the ease with which these fortunate ones secure their lion's share of the good things of life.

Commenting on this announcement, the "New York Times" says:

"The business of the bank, as reflected in its earnings, has been phenomenal in the last year. So great were the earnings for the calendar year 1918 that at the beginning of the current year the managment put $7.572,676 into surplus account. On March 7, after the Federal Reserve Act had been amended to allow greater surplus holdings, the bank expanded this by $12.795.214, and on June 30, $10.126.437 was added to surplus. In consequence, that account, which stood at $649,363 at the end of 1918, now stands at $32.922.051."

Here is a story of bank surplus increasing from a little over half a million to more than 32 millions in less than a year. Meantime the necessary expenses of the bank have been paid; the business has been enlarged, and those connected with the finances of the institution have been properly taken care of.

Below, in the struggle, it is hell. Above, among the bankers, it is paradise, financially speaking.

Class Lines

The beneficiaries of a system are, naturally enough, inclined to favor the system that benefits them. Tolstoi remarks, truly, that the rich are willing to do anything for the poor except get off their backs. The poor suffer under the same system from which the rich benefit. The poor work; the rich live comfortably, in many cases, without doing any work at all. The rich enjoy this comfort, and teach their children to value and to look forward to it. Why should they be anxious to dispossess themselves of opportunities which give them the things they most value in life?

The economic abyss that separates the various groups in the United States has existed in all of the great civilizations of the past. Recent discoveries in Egypt and in Babylonia show that there, as well as in Greece and Rome, there was a well-established system of social organization which turned the first fruits over to the property owners. The bitter internal conflicts that tore the vitals out of classic civilization were the conflicts over land ownership and the concentration of wealth in the hands of the minority.

The basis of power in Europe during the past thousand years has been land ownership. Until the rise of commerce and industry, the sole economic basis of power lay in the control of the agricultural land.

Most of the great nations began their existence under a relatively free economic system. The land was held in common, or else it was held in small parcels by the individuals who used it. Then, little by little, the individual owners were dispossessed and the common land was taken over by the wealthy and powerful. The economic history of Rome and of Great Britain relates, in terms of remarkable similarity, the appropriation of common lands and small holdings by the great proprietors.

The proces of transforming free, individual holdings into great estates has always been accompanied by slavery, serfdom, or a system of tenantry and absolute landlordism that possessed most of the economically vicious characteristics of feudalism, minus the element of personal relationship that accompanied the feudal system.

History does not teach that all forces are economic forces, nor does it teach that all changes have been economic changes. It does teach, however, that the economic forces are so mighty and the economic changes so potent that they will both bear constant attention.

No explanation of social development or of social progress is complete without the economic element. Where economic lines are drawn, other lines follow of necessity. This has proved particularly true in the case of the economic control of the common means of livelihood. Wherever such a control is established, the dominant class is placed in a specially favored position that gives it a vested interest in maintaining the system that grows out of its control At the same time the dependent class finds a great gulf fixed between it and economic opportunity. Hence the conflict which inevitably arises between the workers and the owners. The antagonism and conflict that are based on these economic contrasts have helped to wreck every great civilization of the past and the chances are that they will have the same effect upon the great civilizations of the present and future. Society cannot persist unless the forces that tend to hold it together are greater than the forces that tend to drive it apart.

The most vicious basis of social distinction lies in differing methods of livelihood. Where these methods take the form of working on the one hand and owning on the other, the lines are laid for embittered economic struggle and for the ultimate destruction of the society that tolerates them.

STIRRUP HOLDERS

Robert Whitaker

There are many who do not admit this, and to whom our present attitude is quite incomprehensible. Our contention seems to them in the first place quite "unspiritual." It is "peace and good will, and brotherly love" that the world needs, not the "class struggle." And with all our talk of "human values first," it seems to them very inconsistent on our part that now we are putting "labor values first."

And to us their misunderstanding, and their failure to cooperate with the industrial revolution seems to be but another sad chapter in the failure of the common people in all ages to understand their own interests, and to support their pioneers.

When I saw Thomas Dixon's famous photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," the one picture that remained with me was a quite incidental part of the play. It was not his glorification of war, intentional or unintentional, nor his evidently evil purposed vilification of the negro in the mad pursuit of the helpless girl by a black brute. Rather was it the home scene where the young bucks of the south are shown riding off to war while their smiling and scraping negro servants hold the stirrups of the horses which their masters are mounting. The negroes hold the stirrups for the masters to mount and ride away to make the negroes' bondage more secure.

CONDEMNATION OF POLITICAL OFFENDERS PROVES GOVERNMENTAL HYPOCRISY

"Peace? Why, my fellow citizens, is there any man here or any woman — let me say, is there any child — who does not know that the seed of war in the modern world is industrial and commercial rivalry?....

"This war was a commercial and industrial war. It was not a political war."

* * * *

These are not the words of a ranting socialist, nor of an I. W. W. agitator, nor of a pacificist, nor of a conscientious objector to war, nor of any of those who at this time are condemned to years of bestial confinement by the present administration in the cells of the federal prisons of this country.

They are the words of Woodrow Wilson at St. Louis Sept, 5th. But President Wilson is not in prison doing the lock step for saying them. He is not confined to a cell for fourteen hours a day for saying what he knew to be the thruth about the causes of the war as was Debs up to a short time ago. He is not facing death and insanity behind prison walls for saying what HE thot was true of war, as many others have met death and gone insane. He is not locked up for weeks in the "black hole" on a diet of bread and water at the instigation of petty, ignorant and brutal guards. He is not paying the penalties HE has imposed upon hundreds of men and women for sying LESS than that.

The war is not over according to the President's decision in the coal strike, therefore the President is guilty of a violation of the espionage law under which all political prisoners were jailed. But he has not walked into jail and given himself up as a violator of the law. Nor has the Department of Justice sent its officers with handcuffs to bring Mr. Wilson to the bar of justice. Nor will it.

Yet others are guilty, so is he. If Debs is guilty and deserves ten years in prison, then the President deserves twice the sentence Debs received, for Debs said much less than the words spoken at St. Louis. The jails are filled with members of the I. W. W., conscientious objectors, religious objectors, pacifists, Socialists and others who, believing in the Constitution of the United States, offended Mr. Wilson by saying much less than he has stated about the war.

Where lies the justice in this proceedure? Are the officials of the government immune from the laws they make and put their names too as the law making body? Are the laws made for the many and not for the few? Are the laws made for all the people or are they made only to be enforced upon the opponents of these in power.

We have never made any statements in this paper as to the cause of the war. To have done so would have meant the cancellation of our mailing priviliges and a term in prison for the editors along with Debs and others. But we feel free to agree with the President's definition of the war's real causes. We will agree with him and accept his statement — "This was a commercial and industrial war."

The hollowness of the President's claims during the real period of the war are thus seen. A war for democracy, a war for self determination of all peoples; a war for righteousness and freedom for all the world against autocracy in all its forms— these were given as the purpose of the war times without number.

Out of these slogans a psychological effect was produced which acted to cover all opposition to the war. Millions gave their lives believing in them. The government used them to the limit in squeezing the last cent from the public in its drives for finances to pay the cost of war. And now we are told by the man who acted the leading part in this world tragedy — that it "was a commercial and industrial war" between commercial and industrial nations for world trade and economic supremacy.

We will accept the President's latest definition for the causes of the war. But we will not sit quietly by while our comrades and fellow workers lie in prison with the iron heel of despotism upon them. We will not be silent. We will reveal the hollow mockery of justice at Washington until they who are responsible for the inhuman outrages against our comrades are forced to open the prison doors. No worker with red blood in his veins can rest in peace with his conscience until this injustice is wiped out. Day by day, the Army of Liberators is growing. Every hour sees the demand for the release of all political prisoners increasing. Every moment they remem in prison brings nearer the day of judgment for the ruling class of this nation.

The ruling class fears to let our comrades out of prison. It knows that the moment they step out of prison they will join the growing army of INDUSTRIAL liberators who are waging a war against them for control of the world and their own destiny. Keeping the political prisoners in jail is a weapon in the class war, used by the ruling class in its programe of repression. They fear to let them out. They may well fear to keep them in!

In this fight for liberation, the support of every worker is demanded. For it will require the combined efforts of all of us to OPEN THE PRISON DOORS. Do your part. Join the Army of Liberators. Agitate for liberation for political prisoners wherever you are — at all times. Make the powers that be FEAR TO KEEP THEM IN!

Ex-officer of Russ Army Gives Views on Conditions in Siberia.

Military expert for "London Express" Describes Kolchak rule as state of "unorganized despotism".

Editor, Ohio Socialist,
Cleveland, O.

DEAR SIR:—

"As I am a Russian officer who has seen long service in the Russian army and who served in the British Volunteer Army against Germany, my interest in the military and political fate of my country needs no explanation. In addition to the natural intrests of a soldier and citizen, however, I have a special interest as a journalist in seeking the truth concerning the several factions which are at present contending for the control of Russia. (I was military critic and expert in connection with Russian affairs for the London "Daily Express" during the war.)

"Original sources of information concerning Russia are difficult to obtain. Therefore, whenever I am fortunate enough to find anything which throws the least light upon a situation so obscured by censorships and propaganda, I feel impelled to bring the results of my searches to the attention of others who have, like myself, a deep interest in Russia.

"With great difficulty I have recently been able to obtain a number of Russian newspapers from Siberia. These papers include the following. "Nashe Delo", of Irkutsk; "Golos Primoria," of Vladivostok; "Vladivostokskoie Oboozrenie," of Vladivostok; "Echo," of Vladivostok; "Usuriysky Krai," of Nikolsk; "Kazatchiy Vestnik," and several others. These copies which I have bear dates which run from March, 1919, up to the latets issue which have reached America. All these newspapers are known as the "Kolchak press."

"After having studied carefully this extensive evidence, I have come to the following conclusion: No propaganda in the world can turn the opinion of any sound-minded man in favour of the Kolchak and Denikin crowd, after having read the self-accusations of their own press. It is extraordinary that in spite of the rigorous censorship imposed upon the press in the regions occupied by the Russian reactionaries, these papers should contain so many facts that discredit the administration and expose the conditions of tyranny and disorder in those regions. The papers are filled with the reports of hundreds of cases, before the local courts, of desertion, corruption, theft and other crimes which could only be committed in such excessive numbers in a society without discipline or organization. The many reports of the execution of hostages, described in a most cynical and repulsive manner, reveal the nature of the regime in power. The orders of the day issued by the commanding officers show clearly the lack of harmony within the military organization of the Kolchak armies. The Cossaks are dissatisfied with their reactionary chiefs and are robbing the populations by the orders of the latter. For instance The Ataman of the third Trans-Baikal Cossack district, Colonel Zelinsky, issued an order of the day trying to stop the depredations upon the peaceful population according to the order of the well-known Kolchak general Baron Ungern-Shtenberg. He even complained to the All-Cossack Union saying that in spite of the general camplaints of all the cossack regions to the Omsk government, the accused officers not only escape all punishment, but, on the contrary, are promoted in rank and encouraged by their authorities to continue their "useful" work of crushing Bolshevism. One of these Kolchak satellites, Karmandonoff, flogged and shot a number of peasants, and all efforts to arrest him were in vain, — Omsk refused to interfere. As a result of his protests, Colonel Zelinsky was dismissed from his post (Order of the day No. 145 — "Echo" 19, June 1919). I have known Colonel Zelinsky personally for many years and I can state with authority that he is an officer singularly devoted to Kolchak and Denikin. In general the Cossack Attaman (chief) are constantly quarreling with the central military command. The general insubordination of these chiefs is plainly shown in the drastic measures which, the military authorities have had to apply, and often in vain, as is the case with General Rozanoff who has not appologized to the Americans for having flogged an American soldier, arrested an American officer and shot an American boy, Kolchak was unable to force his General to do that.

"These papers, to my great suprise, are only moderately critical of the Soviet Government of Central Russia. They do not fail, in some cases, to pay tribute to the honesty and organizing ability of Lenin.

"The following extract is taken from "Echo" of June 6th 1919, Vladivostok."

Press Review. "The Japanese press on the recognition of the Omsk government."

"The fact that Japan has been the first country to recognize the Omsk government and has compelled the United States to join in this proposition is not only a diplomatic success. We think it will be no exaggeration if we say that this step which Japan has taken is of world importance".

Travels Far for Tom Mooney

Robert E. Blackstone, "For Mooney Agitator", who spent several months recently in Ohio in the interest of the Tom Mooney Defense, is now in Canada. In a recent letter to the State Office he states that freedom of speech exists in Canada to a far greater extent than in the boasted land of the free.

Recently he spoke in the most Easterly point in the Western Hemisphere, Port Morian, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, where he delivered a speeech on the Mooney case to the miners.

Comrade Blackstone writes that he is still driving his "Red Devil" car in which he travelled from San Francisco across the United States in a Mooney campaign. He has met many interesting people in Canada and made the acquaintance of numerous labor organizations which he had never heard of before. Comrade Mrs Blackstone accompanies him.

He is meeting with great success in his effort for Tom Moone's release.

Capitalist Press Paints Glaring Picture of Its Ability to Lie.

The present propensity and capacity of the capitalist press for lying is without precedent in the realm of journalism. Unblushingly, without the shadow of shame or retraction visible upon its scurrillious pages, it perpetrates day after day and year after year its preposterous fakes upon its readers. Its pages, devoted to the interests of financial piracy and the economic system which make legalized graft possible thru the robbery of the workers in production, are in these times blatant with lies, corrupt with a corruption unparaller in the history of newspaperdom.

One of the most striking examples of the depraved depths to which it has sunk is furnished by the Plain Dealer of Cleveland. In bill-board advertisements as large as the side of a barn, new posters proclaim "knowledge means power." "Read the Plain Dealer" — and of course grow successful thru imbibing the truth and knowledge gleaned there from. To prove the truthfulness of its claims, the front page of a recent issue is shown on the board. "Fall of Petrograd Confirmed" reads the headline across the page. This is indeed convincing argument!

The posters appeared recently at the time when the capitalist press ran wild on one of its periodical sprees against the Soviet Government of Russia. More than a month has passed since the latest concerted national campaign of lies was started simoultaneously in the masters' press. Denikin was hailed as the savior of Russia, who even then was stated to be in Petrograd safely ensconced in the seat of power with his "patriotic" army of "decent" Russians. Bolshevism, according to the statements made, was on the point of vanishing as darkness before the rising sun.

In the world markets the effect too was felt. Stocks and bonds rose as did the hopes of financiers as they viewed in prospect a steadying of their grasp upon the world and its resources. A wave of reaction swept over the country and the representatives of "law and order" expanded their activities in wholesale encroachments upon the constitutional rights of the workers. All that smacked of revolt against the powers that be was branded as "bolshevik" and ruthless repression was prescribed as a prelude to the stamping out of the last vestige of the rising revolt against their rule of blood and iron.

It was a great game and it worked beautifully. Henry Dubbs grew exultant as they perused the red-headlines proclaiming the final overthrow of bolshevism. They again felt safe from the germs of the wily bolshevist. A haven of security opened up before their deluded vision as the picture of a world of labor paternally snatched from the monster, bolshevism, by the wholly patriotic allies, was shown them.

The drive of all anti-Soviet forces against Russia's workers was well timed. Taking advantage of the last opportunity before the setting in of winter, it was hoped that sufficient inroads upon the Soviet strongholds could be made that would have a disintefrating influence upon the workers' make at least some successes to counter-balance their stupendnous defeats of the past summer, in order that their endnous defeats of the past summer, in order that their armies should receive more confidence in their chances of success before the long period of inavtivity began. Then too, there was the question among the allies of gnowing discontent at home. The Soviets were gaining great moral support among the workers of every land. Their cause was becoming known as the cause of all workers, their success the gain of all who labor. Against this growing danger to capitalism a mightly blow must he struck and at once. Capitalistic imperialism allied with the Russian reactionaries prepared to deliver it. All its resources which it dared to enlist, including its public press were brought to bear in one mighty onslaught against the workers' republic of Russia.

But the dream has vanished. Petrograd is still in the hands of the Red Army. And if we are to place any credence in the news of the day, (and we are safe in doing so when that news is not in favor of the rupists of Russia), the drive of the reactionaries and the allies against the Soviets is meeting with sore defeats. Retreat after retreat is occuring on many fronts.

Kolchak, it is admitted is mashalling his forces for a retreat of 1.000 miles. Volunteers are pouring into the Red Army for the defense of Russia. Instead of an advance, a rout is occuring. In spite of the most inhuman blockade ever instituted since the beginning of civilization; in the face of

Where Are You At?

After all, this sitting on the fence is rather uncomfortable, in't it? It does very well to elevate yourself for a moment, to get a good look at that which lies to either side of the fence, but to sit on the fence for days and weeks becomes tedious and wearing.

So we ask — WHERE ARE YOU AT? If you can not accept the platform and program of the Communist Labor Party, why not frankly admit that you are a right winger; that you do not approve of the tactics and principles of the Bolsheviki and of the Third International; that you'd rather stay with the Socialist Party and its program of patching up capitalism to make it last a while longer. If you honestly believe that a number of representatives in political office are going to vote you Industrial Democracy; if you honestly believe that the capitalist class is going to allow a few representatives in office to hand over to you the power now possessed by the possesing class, then hot foot it to the old reactionary Socialist Party. That is where you belong. And belonging there, you should not be ashamed to go there.

If on the contrary, you are convinced that the working class must develop its own machinery and power, must create its own controlling weapon, with which to secure Industrial Democracy; if you believe that we must diligently work in shops thru shop committees to spread the communist propaganda; if you know that politics is a bourgeois game, and that our reason for placing political candidates in the field is to make propaganda for the cause; if you understand that votes are inanimate and that only working class power, exercised wherever possible, will bring workers' control— then you belong in and should join the Communist Labor Party RIGHT AWAY.

There's been a bit too much procrastination. Why hesitate? Why not join the reactionary Socialist Party if that is where you belong. Of course, you'll learn better some day. So those Ohio locals that still have to act in the matter of affiliation because campaign business and lack of business meetings have given no opportunity for earlier action — to these we say — join locals Bellaire, Cincinnati, Conneaut, Cleveland, Fremont, Galion, Springfield, Salem, Sandusky, Seneca County, Toledo, Youngstown, and other state locals in making the Communist Labor Party the workers' weapon in this state.

AND DO IT NOW!

What One Comrade is Willing to Do for Debs.

Comrades of The Ohio Socialist:—

I have read what comrade Gene Debs' lawyer has to say about his health. What can we do?

First: We can employ a doctor and send him there and demand admission for him.

Second: Twenty of we old fellows can volunteer to serve out Gene's time. That would be six months for each of us. Wilson and Company will thus get revenge upon twenty of us instead of only one, and the prison contractors will lose nothing, but rather gain by having a fresh recruit every six months. I am willing to be one of the twenty.

Third: If there is the shadow of manhood left in the working-class, protest meetings without regard to political affiliations must be called and held all over the country for the freedom of all who are held under the espionage law — except the spies. I believe however, they skipped the spies.

It will do no good to hold a protest meeting here and there but more thouroughly than a general strike, the protest must be organized and held from the Gulf to the lakes and from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"No Evidence of Advocacy of Violence" Says Judge Moylan.

Communist Labor Party Officials freed of charge of Criminal Syndicalism. Trial set for Dr John De Quer, C. E. Ruthenberg and Carl Hacker. Raids continue in Cleveland.

Communist Labor Party officials, Alfred Wagenknecht, L. E. Katterfeld, Chas Baker, Walter Bronstrup and E. T. Allison were treated to a surprise in Judge Moylan's court at Cleveland last Wednesday morning when the charges of "criminal syndicalism" lodged against them on Oct. 16, by operatives of the Loyal American League and police, were dismissed by judge Moylan.

Contrary to the general custom in Cleveland, which is to tie every official of every revolutionary organization up in the courts on charges of "criminal syndicalism" with the view of intimidating the workers and breaking up all meetings, whether held in the privacy of homes or in public, the case of the above named socialists may be viewed as a set back to the "Loyal American Leeches", representatives of the chamber of Commerce in their illegal and unwarranted raids upon the workers.

At the first hearing of the case on Oct. 23rd, judge Moylan stated that he would look over the copies of the speeches made by the defendents at the meeting where they were arrested. From the readiness with which he rendered his decision at the last period in court, he had seen the falsity of the charges against the defendents.

No League operatives were present when the case was called and an assistant prosecutor stated that he "did not know much about these cases". "Well I do" stated the judge. "The cases against the defendents are dismissed." The defendents filed out to pursue their work of further organization of the workers for the overthrow of capitalism.

GRAND JURY RETURNS INDICTMENTS.

The Grand jury last week returned indictments against C. E. Ruthenberg, Carl Hacker and Dr. John De Quer, on charges of criminal syndicalism. The trial of comrades Ruthenberg and Hacker are set for Nov. 20th. Dr. De Quer who was arrested for making a speech in a grove near Cleveland on Labor Day, will be tried some time in December it is thot.

Another raid took place at Acme Hall last week. Eight members of a Russian branch and of the Leidertaffle Club were hauled away to the police station. All are out on a thousand dollars bail each. The charge is the same old gag, criminal syndicalism, which means any thing the powers want it to mean so it seems.

The game goes merrily on. So does the coal strike, the steel strike, and a few hundred others. Discontent among the workers is steadily gaining a lead on repression. Just how soon discontent will turn about and face its pursuer we do not profess know. Things happen quickly, these days, however.

THE "CURE ALL" CLUB SAYS —

"Give the working-man hot dogs, ham, pretzels, sauerkraut and beer three times a day and America will be cured of strikes and Bolshevism." Jeff Davis, king of the hoboes.

"Beer", or "no work" is what Sam Gompers said at Washington.

Woodrow said 4 cents and a round table was sufficient.

And the class-conscious worker says nothing less than "the world for the workers" will do.

Take your choice.

STE[illegible]

BY [illegible]

The other day a man came into [illegible] office. He had been on strike [illegible] weeks, and now he had about 90 cents left. He had some chickens, he had good neighbors, that had given him vegetables and things from their gardens. The man was a foreigner, a young married man, and what he had come for was not to ask for strike benefits. He wanted advice and the moral support of encouragement.

He wanted to know how he was going to get along. He came rather deprecatingly, smiling in an embarrassed sort of fashion over his difficulties. Then he went away, still with his smile, his only assets, his friends, his 90 cents, and his indomitable will to stick out.

The strike is based on people like this; people full of faith; people full of endurance; people full of sacrifice — thousands and thousands of them.

Thousands of them looking upward and forward to a better life for themselves and their children — for these people are striking for a right to be considered as men. They are striking for the right of a little leisure. They want an end put to this de-humanizing double shift.

The other day in Braddock a mill superintendent stopped an old-timer on the street. "Aren't you working?" he asked.

"No, I am not working. I'm on strike; I'm taking a holiday. I am paying myself back those 20 Christmases I worked for the company," said the man.

That has been the situation with the mill workers. No Sundays, no Christmas. Work that took it out of a man so that he was old at 40. Work that left him so tired at the end of the day that he wasn't a human being anymore. And now these people are willing to sacrifice to change this sort of thing, for themselves, for their children, and for the workers of all time.

So when the history of this strike is written it is going to be a history of the faith and courage and endurance of men and women living in wretched slums, their windows looking on filthy court yards — living in desolate mill towns in sheds around the great mills; living in bleak houses on steep hillsides where the roads turn to rearing torrents during each rain.

Allegheny County is a fair, sweet place. There are large, fat farms; oil bubbles underneath the earth, and all around are beautiful towns full of comfortable American homes. At each turn of the road the ravines and brunt hills make you a new picture. Smoke shuts out all of this when you get to the towns where the mill workers live. Their landscape is the rows and rows of great chimneys and the smoke pouring out of them. Their music is the din of the shop and the roar of the whistle.

They have no life, and now because they have asked for a few hours which to live, every form of supression and terror is being used against them.

Why has the strike not already been smothered out of existence? Only because of the dogged endurance and the dogged faith of the men. This strike is not kept together by the ordinary strike discipline. It goes on by its own mementum through the faith and courage of the rank and file.

There is no one who reads this who does not know how the morale of a strike is kept up. There is no one who has seen strikes where there were not meetings entertainments, processions, the coming together of men working for a common purpose — there is nothing like this in the steel towns. It isn't allowed. If more than half a dozen strikers stop on the street to talk over their affairs they are arrested for "blocking traffic." "inciting to riot" etc.

No strike poster can be stuck up in a steel town — no leaflet passed on the street to tell the news. No meeting can be held without a permit of police. Many towns do not allow any meetings at all. In other towns where meetings are grudgingly allowed the halls are so little that they can hold only a very small fraction of the men on strike.

So a smothering silence shuts down over the men. Every day they get up to read lieing reports in the papers. Every day they meet on the street, mill employes who try to tribe them to go back. I know a young fellow who was discharged because he was getting men to join the union, and he was of many in his town — I have a list of their names, through Mr. Gary states that men are never discharged for union activities. This man recently met the foreman of his shop, who offered him back his old job at an increased wage. He didn't go, for they are not going back because they have settled down to a long, grim fight, in spite of every [illegible]

[illegible] the Cossacks, [illegible] and continual menace of arrest.

We must remember that [illegible] the crime of [illegible] charges such as obstructing traffic, unlawful assembly, etc. which make it impossible to run a strike in without his having committed any real offense.

Suppression and oppression have been the father and mother of this strike and terror its godfather. But, when the company used terror, they forget the old saying that the blood of the martyr's is the seed of the church.

There hasn't been a home searched or an illegal arrest made that hasn't helped the strike. There hasn't been a club that has come down on a defenseless mill worker that hasn't sent men hurrying to get out their union cards.

Take the case of Clairton for instance — this was the town where the union had got no foothold — the watchful authorities had kept the "agitators" out. ("Agitator" is the company's name for all members of the A. F. of L. who try to get their fellow workers to join a union.)

There were no halls in Clairton that could be rented. All permits were denied and street meetings were broken up. That is to say, the fundamental rights of Americans were sweepingly denied. There is no right of free speech and free assembly in the steel towns. When the people in Farrell want to go to a meeting they have to go over the Ohio state line into America — and the other evening 4.000 of them walked over to hear Foster speak.

There are plenty of steel towns not in America, and Clairton is one of them.

After a time the organizer hired a vacant lot from one of the mill workers. But a man in Clairton can't ask a few friends to a lawn party on his own property — the Cossacks rode down the strikers and broke up the meeting. The mill workers didn't know that it was un-American to strike and they had put up an American flag — this the Cossacks tore down and the flag was trampled under the horses' hoofs. This started trouble, for there were some ex-service men there as there are in all workingmen's crowds. The affidavits sent to the Senate abound in statements like:

"The state troopers rushed on the lot and the people started to run away, but when said state troopers rushed to the platform and tore down our flag, the men became incensed and some ex-soldiers, seeing our flag being insulted and defiled, rushed at said troopers in defense of our flag and started the excitement and almost caused a riot, and loyal citizens were greatly incensed. There was no provocation for said interference and riding over women and children"

(Signed) Mihon Terzich.

Before this happened the organization made no headway in Clairton, but the constabulary had made an irresistable argument — men rushed away from the riot to get their union cards.

The state constabulary are a splendid looking body of men in their smart dark gray uniforms and helmets, but with their riot clubs, three feet long, they are terror incarnate to the workers — they are in the steel towns in many cases not because the town authorities asked them, but at the request of the company. So brutal have they been that one can explain their acts only on the theory that they were acting under orders "to throw a scare into the workers" from the first, or else that they were deliberately trying to incite riot. How else can one account for the tearing down of the flag or the incident at Braddock? There was a mission in Braddock in the Slovak church and the men were coming out from instruction ot about 9—the Cossacks rode them down — not only that, but they rode their horses up the narrow church steps. The men controlled themselves — they didn't attack the Cossacks, and they did nothing in anger or reprisal when the Cossacks rode down a crowd of babies of the first grade who were going home from church.

No assembling in crowds is allowed in Braddock.

There is a narrow street in Braddock along which runs the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. A tall fence separates the street from the tracks and children play here for nothing on wheels is allowed by city ordinance. Since the strike one of the mill owners drove his car down this street, scattering the children in front of him. Behind him, for his protection, rode two of the steel gray troopers, but they weren't needed any more than they have been any time. The men are out to win the strike by peaceable means in spite of thugs, gunmen and state constabulary.

The worst of the terror is over now. The people have been "pacified." They realize that they have no freedom — no right of free speech or assembly. There are communities where for a steel worker to belong to the A. F. of L. is to lay himself open to arrest and imprisonment.

The search for concealed weapons still affords a pretext for the constabulary to break into houses at night, smash open trunks and boxes with hatchets. Yesterday I went to the house of a Slovak woman who had called her husband when the Cossacks came rushing in, whereupon the trooper struck her across the face with his gloves.

These outrages, and more besides, were testified to before the Senate Committee and, as the witnesses piled in, in ceaseless procession before the senators, the outstanding fact about them was their defenselessness. How small they seemed to lift their feeble hands against the giant of steel — the giant which can command not only the mills, but the courts, the police and the press!

There was one thing more outstanding than their defenselessness, and that was their steadfastness as they are fighting one of the greatest battles of all history and fighting with no other weapon than their unshaken courage.

THE STRANGE, SAD CASE OF PRESIDENT WILSON

By Woodrow

"More," says Labor.

"Less and less," says Capital.

"Nix on the rought stuff," says Government.

And the fight is on. Strange, isn't it, that President Wilson forgot to say anything at all, in his declaration of war on the mine workers, about treating the coal operators rough because they refuse to give the miners enough to eat? Very strange! President Wilson seems to have had a lapse in memory. Not very long ago it was he who said that the real trouble makers in this country are the big business interests behind the "invisible government."

But just in order to keep our faith in human nature let's diagnose the strange, sad case of President Wilson. We know that he forgot to say that he would use an army against the coal operators if they persisted in refusing the miners enough wages to live on decently. Now there must be something wrong with President Wilson's thinking apparatus. Otherwise there is no way to explain such a strange idea— that 500.000 coal miners have no right to quit working if they do not like the conditions or wages under which they are working. And the amazing statement of the president that they are "unlawful" in striking, while the coal operators are perfectly within their rights to close down the mines any day they are good and ready, throwing thousands of men out of work and cutting off the production of coal!

Let's diagnose the strange, sad case of President Wilson, who seems to have something wrong with his thinking apparatus.

Now the president is, we will admit, doing the very best he knows how. The only trouble is he does not know how very well. His mental machinery is running along just as smoothly as it ever did in Paris, where he had to make some of those 14 points a little less pointed in order to get them by with the representatives of certain monarchial governments. But he is still making the same mistake he made there; the mistake that all men who never labor with their hands for their living make when trying to "fix things" for the peoples of the world. He forgot to first find out what the people wanted.

It's a fatal mistake. There was a time when the common folks of the world — that conglomerate mass of men, women and children who just spend their simple lives creating wealth and getting very little of it for themselves — could be told by peace conferences and congresses what they wanted, and they took it. Just like a little kiddie takes the nasty medicine his mother says he must take or stay in bed. Just like that. But they do not do it any more. Perhaps it is because they, themselves, think they know what they want.

The only advice the president ever gets, we are told, is given him by the cabinet members and his other friends who ride about in limousines, live in swell hotels and never get their hands dirty or their feet wet. This class of gentlemen, of course, think that the whole world is just like their world, and the advice they give the president is always colored by their own —experiences. To the president they represent that strange and fickle quality known to the parlor students of economics as "public opinion." For is not one of them a banker, one a lawyer, another a business man, etc., representing all shades of "public opinion" — all but the one shade which is greater than all of them combined, the opinion of the millions of common folks who just make the wealth and have very little of it to spend for themselves.

So the president, surrounded by his cabinet of comfortable gentlemen of wealth and breeding, neglects to find out what the people want before he tells them what they are to have. And when the coal miners — 500.000 of them —ask the coal operators — less than 1,000 of them — to come through with a little more wages and better working conditions, and the operators stand sullenly silent and say that they will close down their mines first before they will their mines first before they will give the miners another red cent or a few less working churs, the president is guilded by the "public opinion" of the bankers and lawyers who surround him always. He issues a statement blaming the 500.000 coal miners instead of the 100 or less coal operators for treatening to shut down the mines.

Itʼs a strange, sad case, is the case of President Wilson. We diagnose it and find that the president is doing the best he knows how, but that he does not know very much. For instance, he does not know that the great mass of common people over whom he is president, are behind the coal miners in their demand that the millionaire coal operators must disgorge some of their huge profits in the form of decent wages to the men who risk their lives to produce the coal. He does not know that the miners are not getting ready to strike because they like it, but because they are compelled to use their only weapon to fight the coal barons. He does not know that the "poor people" he seems to worry about getting cold if the strike ties up the mines are cold now because the coal dealers have raised the price of coal to more than double and have already shut down many of the mines to one-half their normal production.

And, because the president is a pacifist and shuns violence in any form, he declares that the miners are trying to terrorize the country by tying up the fuel supply, and he says he will use the army to keep the mines running. Of course we can always stop to wonder why the president does not use the army to keep the mines running when the coal operators shut them down, all over the country, on an average of three days a week, even in war times. We can wonder, but that is all we seem able to do. Perhaps we had better put a man in the president's chair who knows a little something about what is going on in the country and what the common folks want. [illegible] we are weary of taking the nasty medicine Dr. [illegible] prescribes for us just because he [illegible] to be our "mother."

[illegible] tal and labor.

President Wilson's call stated that the conference would be held between "twenty-two representatives of the general public and an equivalent number of representatives of various bodies of organized labor and organized employers." The representatives of the public were named by Mr. Wilson; the representatives of the workers and of big business were named by the recognized labor and business organizations. The President appointed 22 delegates; labor appointed 11 delegates and the business interests appointed 11 delegates.

The President packed the conference against labor by selecting, as "representatives of the general public" bankers, manufacturers, speculators, profiteers and monopolists. There does not appear, on his list, the name of one well-known labor man. Thus the conference is so designed that the employers and their interest will always be in control.

Can the members of this conference agree on anything? There is Judge Gary, for example. He has refused point-blank to have any dealings with the unions which the American Federation of labor has organized in the plants of the Steel Corporation. He and Mr. Gompers must sit down together, and unless one yields everything that is worth contending for, they must come to an absolute deadlock; since Judge Gary will not concede so much as the right of organization to the half million employes of his corporation.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., another of the President's appointees expects to inherit, from his father something like a billion dollars in the form of railroads refineries, banks, traction systems and manufacturing establishments. He speaks for the monopoly that has for years been regarded as the chief among the corporate enemies of the public weal. The conference is like an assemblage of oil particles and water particles. Will they mix? The history of the National Civic Federation, which has been trying this same thing for many years is sufficient answer.

Suppose the impossible. Imagine that these conferees—the majority of them representing capital in one form or another, and not one of them representing the radical elements of the American Labor Movement in any particular — should agree; imagine a meeting of these unmeetable minds. Upon what can they agree?

1. They might agree to reduce profits. Will they?

2. They might agree to heavier taxes on capital and lighter taxes on the consumer. Will they?

3. They might agree to give labor a share in the management of industry, after the plan now operating in England. Will they?

4. They might agree to have the government own industries, and labor manage them, in accordance with the Plumb Plan. Will they?

5. They might agree to the socialization of all productive machinery, and the establishment of industrial control by the workers. Will they?

Will they do any of these things? No, they will not!

Does anyone expect them to do these things? Certainly not!

As President Wilson has so ably remarked, — "We are all caught in a great economic system which is heartless." Those who derive the chief benefit from that system will be the last to decide in favor of changing it. The "combined capitalists and manufacturers of the United States", who, to use another of Mr. Wilson's phrases, "are the masters of the government of the United States," and whose names have been sprinkled with so lavish a hand among the presidential appointees to the coming conference, are forbidden by the root-principles of the system which they represent to do any one of these things.

The conferees will talk. Perhaps they will wrangle. They will appoint sub-committees, pass resolutions and make recommendations. When they have finished their labors, the President will undoubtedly deliver another personal message to Congress.

And the high cost of living? The steel strike? The demands of the miners? Grinding poverty? Unrest? Incipient revolt? They will be exactly where they were before. The only difference anywhere will be in the thousands of dollars that the conference will cost the public treasury.

Antonio still shakes his head, Mr. President, muttering, — "You may as well do anything most hard!"

[illegible] I had faith in the works of Darwin, Huxly, Spencer, Tyndal, Romanes, Clodd, McCabe, Allen and Loeb, but none of these men mentioned that strange contradiction in human society of which you spoke. I must confess that your logic impressed me but also that I am as yet more bewildered than "convinced", said Jack to the engineer, while they were waiting for Herman to adjust something about the separator.

George Sigmiller smiled good naturedly as he answered. "The trouble with you is, that you have read biologists and rationalists instead of sociologists and rationalists instead of sociologists. You have studied animal life as related only to its environment, while men are related to their environment and to each other. You must graduate from the school of biology into the school of anthropology, then into sociology and finally into economics. In your study of biology you have but opened the door to the labyrinth of existance. There are yet many chambers to explore."

"The thing that puzzles me is this, we all live in the same environment; surrounded by the same influnces, then why don't we think alike?" asked Jack.

"What runs the machinery of thot?" was the engineer's counter question.

"If my books tell the truth, then thot is a result of nerve stimulation by light. heat, sound, touch, smell. These nerve stimuli being modified in their affect upon the brain by the impression we call memory. Thus it is, that human beings react to the impression from their environment, modified by the record of previous experiences that have happened in the life of the individual, or perhaps in the life of the race to which he belongs."

"Now George you must admit that the environment of all people is practically the same. How then can you argue that there are two thot modes in the world?" Jack asked of the engineer.

"Half truths are often times more dangerous than complete falsehoods" George answered. "Let me illustrate: you are working for a rich man; you are both affected by the weather in a similar way that is, if the condition of the weather is not extreme. In a blizzard he can afford a warm coat and a comfortable car when he is out and when at home artificial heat and pleasant sorroundings make the winter nights a luxury. You on the other hand are poor, and go shivering in the storm, homeless, cursing the hour that you were born. You see, the economic factor enters into it. It becomes clear that your environment affects you according to your economic position in life."

Again I might illustrate it in this way. A crop failure throws you out of a job which forces you as a migratory worker, to further migration, or to crime due to your not being able to make an honest living, when there is no work to do. The farmer not being ble to pay his mortgage loses his farm. The banker becomes richer by foreclosing the mortgage he holds on the farmers and forcing them into the working class. They make your lot harder by increasing the number of workers, competing for jobs. Crop failure is thus detrimental to you and the farmer, while it may be benificial to the banker and mortgage holder."

Environmental reaction indeed, causes thot processes in the brain of man, as well as all other creatures, but dont forget for a moment that your economic position is a part of your evironment."

"If I understand you rightly", said the boy. "You consider man's accumulated wealth a specific source of nerve stimulation. I might say, man thinks in accordance with what he has."

"Yes," answred George, "Your acts as a whole are determined by the law of economic determinism."

"Illustrate that law by example," demanded Jack.

"Your father is a religious man you tell me".

"Yes."

"He also lends money on interest to his brethern?"

"Yes."

"Now supposing his church would hire a parson who would make it his business to preach that the taking of interests is wrong. Would your father like it?"

"No dad wouldn't like it, especially if the preaching caused his debtors to refuse to pay interest."

"What would he do?"

"He would have the preacher fired or withdraw from the church. In fact I know that he would have the preacher fired, because the elders and deacons are all money lenders, and naturally would not stand for such preaching."

"But supposing the parsons proved his position by the Book? And you tell me your father believes in the Book, then what?"

"Dad would find an interpetation of scripture in harmony with his economic practices, and would hire a preacher who would preach his interpretation and nothing else. I see the whole thing. The law of economic determinism governs man's conduct. I might say it, so that it would be easier to understand by calling it simply, self interest."

"Now I want you to observe human actions and notice that no matter how they veil their true motives under cloaks of piety, patriotism, altruism or what not, somewhere either close at hand or further back you will find the prac[illegible] things about which you know nothing, but with which you will become familiar before you are many years older. On the other hand economic determinism forces the working men to organize into labor unions and into political parties and mutual benefit societies. Behind it all is the same law, economic determinism."

"By the way, Jack, do you know anything about labor unions?"

"Yes, I know that dad hates 'em."

"Naturally," conceded the engineer as he laughed good humoredly. — "But you are going to join a union, when you have learned a trade?"

"Oh, I don't know about that. I may never learn a trade, then what?"

"The time is coming when even the unskilled will have to be organized or be hopelessly exploited. The working must learn that they have no chance of fighting the amalgamated association of political, industrial and financial Barons, single handed. It will become the cry of the working classes, "organize, lest ye perish.""

"Do you belong to a union?" asked the boy guerolusly.

"Sure thing, I belonge to Stationary and Traction engineer's local number 370."

"You never threw any bricks at people who wanted to work, simply because they didn't belong to your bunch?"

"No, I was never elected on an entertainment committee."

"Is Herman a union man, too? questioned Jack.

"Yes, he's a member of the machinist's union.

"Why do the unions 'pul off' such terrible things, such as stopping people, who want to make an honest living?"

George looked upon the boy with a mingling of amusement and pity in his eyes. "We have taught you what the class struggle is theoretically. I dare say that you can give a better definition right now than eight out of every ten socialists. You have defined for me the law of economic determinism, saying that man as a whole acts from the view point of self interests. But lacking the practical experience of the class struggle you are not yet able to apply it to concrete instances. Now why should I want to join a labor union if not for self interest? You see my employer is a company, that is an organized body of men, whose function it is to buy my labor power. In order to deal with them to the best advantage, we approach them as organized workers. We tell them, "you hire us in a body, you pay us so much, you give us such conditions under which to work. And if you don't we quit." If our employer hires a man who is not affiliated with us, who does nothing in an organized way to get better conditions, then we resent it. We must resent it or the self interest, of the employing group will have its way and we as workers will become slaves, to the employer's will. That is the reason that scabs sometimes catch it."

"I see," said Jack, "organized labor is a weapon in the class struggle, but dad always spoke of them as criminals."

"That is quite natural, your father being an employer of labor hated nothing so much as an organized demand on the part of his workers for a larger share of the products of their toil."

"Always remember Jack, whenever you are confronted with a social problem that economic determinism is the key by whish it can be solved. When ever you see a fight between the employer and the employed you will find that it is over surplus value. When ever you see any marked change in the relation of employer and emplaye to the advantage of the employe to the advantage of the the result of organized effort. And all organized effort is a manifestation of social intelligence. — good God, boy, look at that steam! get busy!

Democracy at Home.

One might surmitr that a four years war, fought and won for democracy, might in all decency have some tangible evidence of its winnings on hand to show any unbeliveing who might have doubts thereof. One might even expect President Wilson, by some legerdemain of words and phrases to point out a few unquestionable evidences of the facts of democracy in the every-day lives of the common herd, who up to a short time since hung upon his words as the inspired sentences of mankind's Savior.

But the President is very far from bringing forth such proof of his conquests of the forces of autocracy. Quite the contrary. We are learning that winning a thing and having it are two entirely different propositions. Since the war for democracy was won there has been far more autocracy in America than before. As a matter of fact a period of reaction has seized the nation and the powers that be are marshalling every resource against the putting into practice of the principles for which millions died and billions in wealth were spent. The socialist press has been well nigh destroyed. Free speech is a memory. The Constitution, so far as the workers of this country are concerned, does not exist.

The steel strike has furnished sufficient evidence to damn any government. Men and women have been murdered in the towns of Pennsylvania and nothing hasn been done about it, nor will any thing be done except to cover the destroyers of life and liberty with a coat of governmental whitewash.

And now comes the coal strike bearing upon its heels more evidence of the brand of democracy which Wilson brought back from Paris and locked about the necks of American workers. President Wilson declares that the miners have violated the law by striking. He thus makes them out to be criminals, law breakers. One cannot believe that he believes his own statements. He seeks merely to use the capitalist courts to enslave the workers and to force them into abject slavery to the coal barons. With all his fine words for labor, his actions belie every one of them. By his action in declaring the coal miners to be outlaws, he brands himself an arch-autocrat and enemy of labor. Let him be known for what he is. Wilson's brand of democracy is proving the undoing of labor. The workers need no Saviors. They can and must save themselves. Confidence placed in others than the workers is confidence mis-placed.

Taking a Nation's Measure.

By what measure shall a nation be judged? The generally accepted standard to-day is that of commercial standing and battle ships and armament to protect it. It is a token of the times and a measure of the values set upon human endeavor. We live in a commercial age, hence all things commercial are hallowed. A brilliant halo resides upon our national god, the rays from which stretch out in all directions especially toward heathen and undevelopment lands, where trade possibilities are especially liable of development.

Let us take a glance at the conditions in which our school-teachers live while ministering to the moral, mental and physical needs of the nation's children. What are their services valued at in the coin of the realm? And don't forget to compare the "dollars" received with what they will buy in the shoe, food, clothing, and other markets which the teacher must patronize in order to keep respectable appearing and morally and mentally balanced to be able to do justice to OUR children.

The wages of Cleveland's school teachers afford a shining example and measure of one of America's greatest cities. The yearly wage averages about $75 a month. What will $75 buy—it will buy almost half enough for a family to live upon. Of course it does not afford vacations in the hot summers nor an overdose of refinements and nothing for a rainy day. Many teachers are bread winners for families. While giving the best that is in them in the prime of their lives to society, the child and the teacher, they are bereft of opportunities to develup themselves in accordance with the demands WE make upon them.

The plea is made that there is no money to pay higher salaries. But there is plenty of money for every conceivable kind of "drive" that can be imagined. The wages paid school teachers are an indictment of present day civilization. Commercialism rules. Our teachers, our children and posterity are mortgaged to maintain its rule. Measured by the value set upon education and the treatment of our children, America stands low in the scale of real civilization.

The Question Box

Under this heading we will each week answer questions in regard to the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party, their principles, tactics and form of organization. Are you in need of information? Write us.

J. R.— Akron: The Communist Labor Party has chartered state organizations in New York, California, Washington, Oregon, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Minnesota, Rhode Island and Ohio. Charters will shortly be issued to New Jersey and Pennsylvania. States having three hundred or more members can be chartered. The largest locals in Florida, Colorado, Utah, Arkansas, and other states have affiliated but many of these states did not have a total of 300 members even when affiliated with the Socialist Party. Organization work is going forward in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maryland, Delaware.

S. L.— Portsmouth: The Communist Party's claims as to membership vary. Sometimes this party claims 50,000 members, sometimes 45,000, at other times 55,000 and as high as 65,000. The membership of any organization is not based upon the random claims of some of its enthusiastic supporters, but upon an average dues stamp sale for a period of three or four months.

A. K.— Minneapolis: The Russian Federation which affiliated with the Communist Party has for months bitterly attacked the Soviet Bureau which is representing Soviet Russia in this country. These attacks led to a split in the Russian Federation, and the branches which withdrew from this federation or were expelled, have organized a new federation, affiliated with the Communist Labor Party. The Communist Labor Party Russian Federation is working in harmony with and is supporting the Soviet Bureau.

G. W.— Cincinnati: We have direct information from a member of the Communist Party that deals were made between the Communist Party Russian Federation and Ferguson and Fraina, several weeks before the Communist convention convened, which gave many of the present national officials of that party the places they now hold.

L. N. E.— Terre Haute: The Socialist Party convention, by a vote of about three to one, refused to endorse the Third International, that formed at Moscow. Thereupon a minority of the delegates insisted that a resolution, conditionally endorsing the third International, go to membership referendum, together with the resolution calling for another new international. These referendums are now before the Socialist Party membership.

C. McB.— Davenport: The Communist Labor Party will here after officially publish "The Class Struggle" monthly. It will also officially publish the "Voice of Labor" and "Communist Labor", each bi-weekly and alternatingly. Some of the best pamphlets and books are already on sale, published officially by the party.

H. C.— Seattle: Locals that now rejoin or remain affiliated with the Socialist Party become part of a corpse. The Socialist Party is wrecked financially; its membership now but numbers thousands werere it had tens of thousands before. Even locals that join neither the C. P. or C. L. P., many in number, will not pay dues any longer to the Socialist Party. These centrist locals are remaining independent of either party, many of them printing their own dues stamps.

E. M.— Boston: The letter sent the Communist Labor Party by the Communist Party, refusing to enter into unity conference, was submitted to the Communist Party central executive committee of fiteen, and the vote stood 9 to 5 in favor of its adoption. Whether the five who voted against the answer were for a unity conference is doubtful.

M. L. O.— Detroit: It was C. E. Ruthenberg who proposed the resolution at a delegate meeting of Cleveland comrades, asking that a state convention be held of Communist, Communist Labor and Socialist Party locals jointly, to decide the disposition of the state property. The Communist Labor Party is absolutely opposed to meeting in joint convention with any Socialist Party locals for any purpose what-so-ever.

A. W.— Cleveland: Yes, Fraina espires to make a trip to Russia to visit Lenine and Trotsky and to affiliate the Communist Party with the Third International. Your information that some of the national officials of the C. P. opposed to this trip by Fraina is correct.

A. M.— Cleveland: Unity is being demanded by an ever greater number of Communist Party locals. It is only the national officials of the Communist Party who stand in the way of unity. The demand for unity can best be strengthened by joining the Communist Labor Party, for it has officially, in convention, adopted a standing offer of unity with the C. P. or any other revolutionary group.

M. P.— Chicago: If you desire to remain clear of vision you must overlook personal attacks at unessential criticism. The Communist Party only disrupts its own organization in its senseless attacks upon the Communist Labor Party.

R. T.— Toledo: Lou are correct. Before the national left wing conference, Fraina and the Russian Federation called the Michigan Socialist mensheviks. After the national left wing conference, the bolting Michigan Federation group called Fraina and his group mensheviks. And Fraina and his group, thru the Revolutionary Age, called the Michigan-Russian Federation combination menshevikI. Then a merger was formed between these two groups which called each other mensheviks, and lo and behold, they at once became 100 percent bolshevik. It being written in the heavens that a menshevik group must exist, therefore the merger now calls the C. L. P. a menshevik organization.

The C[illegible] Party [illegible] You

The Communist Party, thru its official organ, attacks all locals that have entered municipal campaigns this fall.

The national secretary of the Communist Party continues his attacks upon locals which have taken part in the Ohio municipal campaigns. Wherever he speaks, be it Chicago or Boston one of his main themes is "the menshevism of Ohio locals that entered and fought in the municipal elections."

This means that he as well as the official organ of the Communist Party, has attacked Locals Toledo, Akron, Piqua, Massillon, Hamilton, and all other Ohio locals that have had municipal candidates in the field this fall.

The argument made by the Communist Party and its national officials is that under no circumstances should Ohio locals have conducted municipal campaigns under the name of the Socialist Party. Extenuating circumstances cut no ice with the Communist Party officials. That the campaigns were made upon a strict communist municipal platform, made no difference.

Principles did not count. The Socialist Party name was anathema — and this, despite the fact that the bolshevists of Russia conducted campaigns under any old name to get their principles across. We always had an idea that names meant nothing and principles everything. The Communist Party officials reverse this axion, it seems. Principles mean nothing and everything is in a name.

But what do you think of this? Ohio locals entering the municipal campaign upon communist platforms are compromisers, but the national secretary of the Communist Party thinks it ALL RIGHT to ask locals that have rejoined the reactionary Socialist Party to enter a state convention with him, where undoubtedly he intends to use them to "capture" the property of the state office, and its functioning organs. It's ALL RIGHT to go into cahoots with compromising Socialist Party locals but its all wrong to make an uncompromising campaign. Some consistency!

We agree that party controversies bring forth strange contradictions. But we are glad that the Communist Labor Party and seen clearly from the first, has not entered useless nor bitter discussions about non-essentials, has not resorted to foolish attacks upon comrades and locals.

It is because of this that the Communist Labor Party has steadily gathered strength.

It is the party which will gain the confidence of all revolutionary comrades — and in it all revolutionary comrades will eventually enlist their services.

THE PRESS FUND IS GROWING.

Recent conditions within the Party have had a slackening effect upon the Press Fund contributions but the reasons for this are rapidly passing. We expect a rapid rise in interest in the matter of securing an up to date printing equipment for the Party in Ohio and The Ohio Socialist very soon. Comrades realize that the question of propaganda is paramount to all else and that the best assurance of a continuation of our propaganda and our publications is to control our own publishing plant.

Since the termination of the war the publishing business has boomed at a tremendous rate. Manufacturers have been rushed with orders far in excess of the capacity of their plants. Several months will be required to fill an order for a new press, but we are attempting to overcome this difficulty. We will make the best possible bargain for ourselves and get a press as quickly as it is possible to do so. Keep the question of our needed printing plant uppermost in your minds for the necessity of it is growing.

Here are recent contributions.

JAPANESE WAGES.

From official figures published by the Japanese government, the average daily wage paid in Japan to carpenters is 43 cents; to bricklayers, 54 cents; paperhangers, 40 cents; printers, 28 cents. In the lighter manufacturing lines many more women are employed than men, and their pay varies from 11 cents to 17 cents per day, the latter figure being the highest paid.

The doctors of Dundalk, Ireland, went on strike for a minimum salary of $35 weekly for all public services. In the meantime people cannot afford to die decently in that town.

DEAR SIR:— [illegible]

"Weakness of Labor-Unionism."

At the Round-table Conference, Labor Unions were surely shown their weak and helpless condition, and their inability to cope with the Capitalist class, when their resolution providing for recognition of the principle of Collective Bargaining was turned down.

Paul Feiss of Cleveland, big employer, and member of the public group said: Organized Labor is not up to date, It has not developed with the times, and that labor leaders are still fighting their battles as they did forty and fifty years ago. This is true, Labor Unions are still fighting upon the same principiles that they did fifty years ago. And we are just as much wage slaves to-day as we were then, if not more so.

The workers see their last right being taken away from them, and they are powerless, and helpless, unable to protect themselves against the all powerfull capitalists class, which is crushing them to pieces.

It is high time that Union-men all over the country should wake up to the fact that what they need now is not conferences and arguments with the capitalist but a good strong Labor Party, and to rally to the standard of the party as one man, get the reins of Government in their own control, and then they will be up to date, and will be able to convince Mr. Feirs of that fact.

Labor then will be in a position to legislate and make laws for their own protection. But as it is today, all law is for the capitalist class. Capital controls both the old political parties, and when Union men go to the polls and vote for either one, he votes against his own Organization and Union Principles, and the capitalist know this and laughs at the Ignorance of the Working-man.

The great need of the working-man is to educate himself in regard to his own condition, and the cause, then get busy and help to organize a Labor Party that will remove the cause.

Then and not untill then will come that glad day of the Emancipation for the Wage-slave.

Yours respect.

Note by Editor. — While agreeing with the above, that all workers must unite in one strong political Party for the purpose of emancipating themselves, we wish to emphasize the last paragraph in the comrade's letter. We are in the educational period of the revolution. The great need is to educate the workers in the nature of his true condition — to teach him class-consciousness. Class-consciousness of the worker is the one thing which will guarantee him againt being gulled by "Labor Parties" formed by reactionary labor leaders such as we have had in the past and have in the process of formation at the present time. A worker's political party without a revolutionary programe and goal can be nothing but a means of enslavement.

The Communist Labor Party is a party of workers whose aim is not merely the mitigation of the conditions of the wage-slave's existence, but intends to overthrow and destroy the economic system which makes him a slave.

"The Final Conflict"

In the struggle of the miners and the operators President Wilson has taken his stand, the entire machinery of government will be brought into play if necessary, and the press brings up the rear of the procession. All these are open, willing servants of plutocracy, but the efforts of all combined cannot avail in the present crisis.

The sick man in the White House has let loose forces that may sweep not only his administration, but the social order, into the class of the over-powered and obsolete. Neither pity for his physical plight nor devotion to a flag will make the workers weaklings, content to be driven along the path that industrial autocracy, has marked out. As Helen Keller has recently written: "The wise fools who sit in the high places of justice fail to see that, in revolutionary times like the present, vital issue are settled, not by statutes, decrees and authorities, but in spite of them. Like the Girondins in France, they imagine that force can check the onrush of revolution. Thus they sow the wind, and unto them shall be the harvest of the whirlwind."

The blind girl saw clearly enough to state the situation correctly!

Labor is not a minority. It is a vast majority. That third, much-pitied group called "the public" is largely Labor, unorganized for the most part but containing all the potentialities of wise revolt. All Labor will become aware of its interests and will make [illegible] its own order, decide its own destiny, which at length will be the law and the order and the destiny of the whole human race.

Many of us have occasion to rejoice in this hour of hope for [illegible] working [illegible] the Social Revolution bursting upon us suddenly, brightly and [illegible].

EDWARD [illegible]

[illegible] The Society was [illegible] the purpose of [illegible] military activities [illegible] difficult to continue with the war [illegible] of the Society. With the coming of peace, however, many old societies are reorganizing and many new ones being formed. Since the opening of the college year California, Columbia, C. C. N. Y. Yale, Wisconsin, Adelphi, Radcliffe, New York University, and other colleges have reported good prospects for the coming season.

One of the most important activities of the Society during the winter will be the sending of well known speakers to different parts of the country. Members of the New York Alumni Chapter, one of the most active groups, have already started their regular Saturday afternoon "Camaraderie". They have secured William Z. Foster of the steel workers organization, and W. N. Ewer, Foreign editor of the London Daily Herald, as early speakers on their program.

Another undertaking, which the growth of the Society has made necessary is the publication of a monthly magazine, "The Socialist Review." Originally the organization issued a small bulletin which developed into "The Intercollegiate Socialist," a quarterly. But with the growing importance of Socialism in world affairs, it became impossible to present its latest developments adequately without a monthly. "The Socialist Review" will therefore meet the inevitable need of the Society for a publication to provide not only its members, but the general public, with the best thought and most significant facts available regarding the socialist and labor movement.

Membership in the Society is open to anyone, irrespective of his belief, who is genuinely interrested in the study of Socialism. Further information may be secured by addressing the I. S. S. at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York.

LOCAL CINCINNATI, ATTENTION!

We hereby announce that our Local severed connection with the yellow Socialists of the Socialist Party.

The Communist Labor Party is the National group the Local decided to affiliate with by a vote taken on October 2nd.

This step puts on every member the obligation to assist in the work mapped out by the platform and program of the new party.

This program calls for special branches to be organized in the workshops of the nation. The Organization in the shops are to become the channels thru which our propaganda is to reach the workers employed therein.

The Organization Committee of Local Cincinnati is now ready to take up this work.

It is the duty of every Comrade to assist in the realization of this plan in their respective places of employment.

We herewith request all willing to do their part to get in touch with the Organization Committee of the Local.

Yours for Cooperation, the Organization Committee

$65.—$22

Houston, Texas.— A good profiteer story has come to light here. It all started with a felony case brought against a negro porter for stealing a suit of clothes valued by the merchant at $65. At least this was the price the retailer sold it for and the sum was $15 over the amount needed to make the alleged act a felony.

At the suggestion of his lawyer, the negro, instead of denying guilt, submitted the price tag from the stolen suit and showed that the strange marks under the price mark indicated a cost price of $22. When the merchant learned of this defe rushed over to the district at and had the whole case throw He thus became an accessory the fact in a misdemeanor case ra than risk the light on his own ness. Most of us have little difficult in agreeing that the unwilling de fender of the thief was a great thief than the principal.

OUR HONEST FARMER
A Rural Soliloquy by Thos Howie

The Farmer's been silent for many a year,
So the old politicians have nothing to fear.
He's been told how to farm and how he should vote
And nobody worried when he was the Goat.

They told him how the land the moisture would keep
If he plowed this same land about eight inches deep,
And when he should harvest and when he should sow,
If much larger crops he wanted to grow.

He's been told how to pack and how he should plow;
They've told of the profits of milking a cow,
Of the alluring farm each has something to say—
Of the song of the hen the smell of the hay.

The've told of the crops the farmer should sow
And also the pork and the beef he should grow;
They pictured the future to the farmer so bright—
He hardly took time to sleep over night.

No wonder the wrinkles grow deep in his brow.
For they milked the farmer while he milked the cow,
And for politics he had no time to spare—
No wonder the hayeeds hang thick in his hair!

Oh farmer, so long as you mortgage your days,
And let wily grafters control what you raise—
Just that long you'll be in the profiteers' care
And the hayseeds be never comed from your hair!

LIBERTY

To all in vain will timorous ones essay
To set the metes and bounds of Liberty.
For Freedom is its own eternal law;
It makes its own conditions, and in storm
Or calm alike fulfills the unerring
Let us not then despise it when it
Still as a sleeping lion, while a
Of gnat-like evils hover round head;
Nor doubt it when in mad, disjointed times
It shakes the torch of terror, and its cry
Shrills o'er the quaking earth, and in the flame
Of riot and war we see its awful form
Rise by the scaffold, where the crimson axe
Rings down its grooves the knell of shuddering kings.
Forever in thine eyes, O Liberty,
Shines that high light whereby the world is saved,
And though thou slay us, we will in thee!

REPORT [illegible]

We reprint below the report of William C. Bullitt, special representative of the [illegible] to Russia in February 1919. This report was first made public in Mr. Bullitt's statement before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, September 12, 1919. In spite of this report, the truth of which can not be refuted, the President's undeclared war against the working-class government of Soviet Russia continues. The unofficial blockade still exists, millions of peace-loving Russians are starving for lack of the food this blockade is keeping out of Russia.

I. REPORT OF WILLIAM C. BULLITT

Economic Situation

Russia today is in a condition of acute economic distress. The blockade by land and sea is the cause of this distress and lack of the essentials of transportation is its gravest symptom. Only one-fourth of the locomotives which ran on Russian lines before the war are now available for use. Furthermore, Soviet Russia is cut off entirely from all supplies of coal and gasoline. In consequence, transportation by all steam and electric vehicles is greatly hampered; and transportation by automobile and by the fleet of gasoline-using Volga steamers and canal boats is impossible.

As a result of these hindrances to transportation it is possible to bring from the grain centers to Moscow only twenty-five carloads of food a day, instead of the one hundred carloads which are essential and to Petrograd only fifteen carloads, instead of the essential fifty. In consequence, every man, woman, and child in Moscow and Petrograd is suffering from slow starvation.

Mortality is particularly high among new-born children whose mothers cannot suckle them, among newly-delivered mothers, and among the aged. The entire population, in addition, is exceptionally susceptible to disease; and a slight illness is apt to result fatally because of the total lack of medicines. Typhoid, typhus, and smalpox are epidemic in both Petrograd and Moscow.

Industry, except the production of munitions of war, is largely at a standstill. Nearly all means of transport which are not employed in carrying food are used to supply the army, and there is scarcely any surplus transport to carry materials essential to normal industry. Furthemore, the army has absorbed the best executive brains and physical vigor of the nation. In addition, Soviet Russia is cut off from most of its sources of iron and of cotton. Only the flax, hemp, wood, and lumber industries have an adequate supply of raw material.

On the other hand, such essentials of economic life as are available are being utilized to the utmost by the Soviet Government. Such trains as there are, run on time. The distribution of food is well controlled. Many industrial experts of the old regime are again managing their plants and sabotage by such managers has ceased. Loafing by the workmen during work hours has been overcome.

Social Conditions

The destructive phase of the revolution is over and all the energy of the Government is turned to constructive work. The terror has ceased. All power of judgment has been taken away from the extraordinary commission for suppression of the counter-revolution which now merely accuses suspect counter-revolutionaries who are tried by the regular, established, legal tribunals. Executions are extremely rare. Good order has been established. The streets are safe. Shooting has ceased. There are few robberies. Prostitution has disappeared from sight. Family life has been unchanged by the revolution, the canard in regard to "nationalization of women" notwithstanding.

The theatres, opera, and ballet are performing as in peace. Thousands of new schools have been opened in all parts of Russia, and the Soviet Government seems to have done more for the education of the Russian people in a year and a half than czardom did in fifty years.

Political Situation

The Soviet form of government is firmly established. Perhaps the most striking fact in Russia today is the general support which is given the government by the people in spite of their starvation. Indeed, the people lay the blame for their distress wholly on the blockade and on the governments which maintain it. The Soviet form of government seems to have become to the Russian people the symbol of their revolution. Unquestionable it is a form of government which lends itself to gross abuse and tyranny, but it meets the demand of the moment in Russia, and it has acquired so great a hold on the imagination of the comon people that the women are ready to starve and the young men to die for it.

The position of the communist party (formerly Bolshevik) is also very strong. Blockade and intervention have caused the chief opposition parties, the right social revolutionaries and the mensheviki, to give temporary support to the communists. These opposition parties have both made formal statements against the blockade, intervention, and the support [illegible] Antisoviet governments by the allied and asso[illegible]ted governments. Their leaders Volsky and Martov are most vigorous in their demands for the im[illegible]te raising of the blockade and peace.

Indeed, the only ponderable opposittion to the communists today comes from more radical parties — [illegible] against the employment of bourgeois officers in the army and against the efforts of the communists to obtain peace. They demand the immediate [illegible] of all the bourgeoisie and the immediate declaration of war on all the nonrevolutionary governments. They argue that the Entente Governments should be forced to intervene more deeply in Russia, asserting that such action would surely provoke the proletariat of all European countries to immediate revolution.

Within the communist party itself there is distinct division of opinion in regard to foreign policy but this disagreement has not developed personal hostility or open breach in the ranks of the party. Trotski, the generals, and many theorists believe the red army should go forward everywhere until more vigorous intervention by the Entente is provoked, which they, too, count upon to bring revolution in France and England. Their attitude is not a little colored by pride in the spirited young army. Lenin, Tchitcherin, and the bulk of the communist party, on the other hand, insist that the essential problem at present is to save the proletariat of Russia, in particular, and the proletariat of Europe, in general, from starvation, and assert that it will benefit the revolution but little to conquer all Europe if the Government of the United States replies by starving all Europe. They advocate, therefore, the conciliation of the United States even at the cost of compromising with many of the principles they hold most dear. And Lenin's prestige in Russia at present is so overwhelming that the Trotski group is forced reluctantly to follow him.

Lenin, indeed, as a practical matter, stands well to the right in the existing political life of Russia. He recognizes the undesirability, from the Socialist viewpoint, of the compromises he feels compelled to make; but he is ready to make the compromises. Among the more notable concessions he has already made are: The abandonment of his plan to nationalize the land and the adoption of the policy of dividing it among the peasants, the establishment of savings banks paying 3 per cent. interest, the decision to pay all foreign debts, and the decision to give concessions if that shall prove to be necessary to obtain credit abroad.

In a word, Lenin feels compelled to retreat from his theoretical position all along the line. He is ready to meet the western Governments half way.

Peace Proposals

Lenin seized upon the opportunity presented by my trip of investigation to make a definite statement of the position of the Soviet Government. He was opposed by Trotski and the generals, but without much difficulty got the support of the majority of the executive council, and the statement of the position of the soviet government which was handed to me was finally adopted unanimously.

My discussion of these proposals with the leaders of the Soviet Government was so detailed that I feel sure of my ground in saying that it does not represent the minimum terms of the soviet government, and that I can point out in dedail wherein it may be modified without making it unacceptable to the soviet government. For example, the clause under article 5 — "and to their own nationals who have been or may be prosecuted for giving help to Soviet Russia" — is certainly not of vital importance. And the clause under article 4, in regard to admission of citizens of the soviet republics of Russia into the allied and associated countries, may certainly be changed in such a way as to reserve all necessary rights to control such immigration to the allied and associated countries, and to confine it to persons who come on legitimate and necessary business, and to exclude definitely all possibility of an influx of propagandists.

Conclusions

The following conclusions are respectfully submitted:

1. No government save a socialist government can be set up in Russia today except by foreign bayonets, and any governments so set up will fall the moment such support is withdrawn. The Lenin wing of the communist party is today as moderate as any socialist government which can control Russia.

2. No real peace can be established in Europe or the world until peace is made with the revolution. This proposal of the Soviet Government presents an opportunity to make peace with the revolution on a just and reasonable basis — perhaps a unique opportunity.

3. If the blockade is lifted and supplies begin to be delivered regularly to soviet Russia, a more powerful hold over the Russian people will be established than that given by the blockade itself — the hold given by fear that this delivery of supplies may be stopped. Futhemore, the parties which oppose the communists in principle but are supporting them at present will be able to begin to fight against them.

4. It is, therefore, respectfully recommended that a proposal following the general lines of the [illegible]

Appendix

Transport

Locomotives.— Before the war Russia had [illegible] locomotives. Destruction by war and ordinary wear and tear have reduced the number of locomotives in good order to 5.500. Russia is entirely cut off from supplies of spare parts and materials for repair, facilities for the [illegible] of which do not exist in Russia. And the Soviet Government is able only with the greatest difficulty to keep in running order the few locomotives at its disposal.

Coal.— Soviet Russia is entirely cut off from supplies of coal. Kolchak holds the Perm mining district, although Soviet troops are now on the edge of it. Denikin still holds the larger part of the Donets coal district and has destroyed the mines in the portion of the district which he has evacuated. As a result of this, locomotives, electrical power plants, etc., must be fed with wood, which is enormously expensive and laborious and comparatively ineffectual.

Gasoline.— There is a total lack of gasoline, due to the British occupation of Baku few automobiles in the cities which are kept running for vital Goverament business are fed with substitute mixtures, which causes them to break down with great frequency and to miss continually. Almost the entire fleet on the great inland waterway system of Russia was propelled by gasoline. As a result the Volga and the canals, which are so vital a part of Russia's system of transportation, are useless.

Food

Everyone is hungry in Moscow and Petrograd, including the people's commissaries themselves. The daily ration of Lenin and the other commissaries is the same as that of a soldier in the army or of a workman at hard labor. In the hotel which is reserved for Government officials the menu is the following: Breakfast — A quarter to half a pound of black bread, which must last all day, and tea without sugar. Dinner— A good soup, a small piece of fish, for which occasionally a diminutive piece of meat is substituted, a vegetable, either a potato or a bit of cabbage, more tea without sugar. Supper — What remains of the morning ration of bread and more tea without sugar.

Occasionally sugar, butter, and chickens slip through from the Ukraine and are sold secretly at atrocious prices — butter, for example, at 240 roubles a pound. Whenever the Government is able to get its hands on any such "luxuries" it turns them over to the schools, where an attempt is made to give every child a good dinner every day.

The food situation has been slightly improved by the rejoining of Ukraine to Great Russia, for food is relatively plentiful in the south: but no great improvement in the situation is possible because of the lack of transport.

Managment

Such supplies as are available in Soviet Russia are being utilized with considerable skill. For example, in spite of the necessity of firing with wood, the Moscow-Petrograd express keep up to its schedule, and on both occasions when I made the trip it took but thirteen hours, compared to the twelve hours of prewar days.

The food control works well, so that there is no abundance alongside of famine. Powerful and weak alike endure about the same degree of starvation.

The Soviet goverament has made great efforts to persuade industrial managers and technical experts of the old regime to enter its service. Many very prominent men have done so. And the Soviet Government pays them as high as $45.000 a year for their services, although Lenin gets but $1.800 a year. This very anomalous situation arises from the principle that any believing communist must adhere to the scale of wages established by the government, but if the government considers it necessary to have the assistance of any anti-communist, it is permitted to pay him as much as he demands.

All meetings of workmen during work hours have been prohibited, with the result that the loafing which was so fatal during the Kerensky regime has been overcome and discipline has been restored in the factories as in the army.

Social Conditions

Terror.— The red terror is over. During the period of its power the extraordinary commission for the suppression of the couter revolution, which was the instrument of the terror, executed about 1.500 persons in Petrograd, 500 in Moscow, and 3.000 in the remainder of the country— 5.000 in all Russia. These figures agree with those which were brought back from Russia by Major Wardwell, and inasmuch as I have checked them from Soviet, anti-Soviet, and neutral sources, I believe them to be approximately correct. It is worthy of note in this connection that in the white terror in southern Finland alone, according to official figures, General [illegible]

Morals.— Prostitution has [illegible] from sight, the economic reasons for their [illegible] having ceased to exist. Family life has been absolutely unchanged by the revolution. I have never heard more genuinely mirthful laughter than when I told Lenin, Tchitcherin, and Litvinov that much of the world believed that women had been "nationalized." This lie is so wildly fantastic that they will not even take the trouble to deny it. Respect for womanhood was never greater than in Russia today. Indeed, the day I reached Petrograd was a holiday in honor of wives and mothers.

Education.— The achievements of the department of education under Lunacharsky have been very great. Not only have all the Russian classics been reprinted in editions of three and five million copies and sold at a low price to the people, but thousands of new schools for men, women, and children have been opened in all parts of Russia. Furthermore, workingmen's and soldiers' clubs have been organized in many of the palaces of yesteryear, where the people are instructed by means of moving pictures and lectures. In the art galleries one meets classes of working men and women being instructed in the beauties of the pictures. The children's schools have been entirely reorganized, and an attempt is being made to give every child a good dinner at school every day. Furthermore, very remarkable schools have been opened for defective and over-nervous children. On the theory that genius and insanity are closely allied, these children are taught from the first to compose music, paint pictures, sculpt and write poetry, and it is asserted that some very valuable result have been echieved, not only in the way of productions but also in the way of restoring the nervous systems of the children.

Morale

The belief of the convinced communists in their cause is almost religious. Never in any religious service have I seen higher emotional unity than prevailed at the meeting of the Petrograd Soviet in celebration of the foundation of the Third Socialist Internationale. The remark of one young man to me when I questioned him in regard to his starved appearance is characteristic. He replied very simply. "I am ready to give another year of starvation to our revolution."

Statements of Leaders of Opposition Parties

The following statement was made to me by Volsky, leader of the right social revolutionaries, the largest opposition party:

"Intervention of any kind will prolong the regime of the Bolsheviki by compelling us, like all honorable Russians, to drop opposition and rally round the soviet government in defense of the revolution. With regard to help to individual groups or governments fighting against soviet Russia, we see no difference between such intervention and the sending of troops. If the allies come to an agreement with the soviet government, sooner or later the peasant masses will make their will felt and they are alike against the bourgeoise and the Bolsheviki.

"If by any chance Kolchak and Denikin were to win, they would have to kill in tens of thousands where the Bolsheviki have had to kill in hundreds and the result would be the complete ruin and collapse of Russia into anarchy. Has not the Ukraine been enough to teach the allies that occupation by non-Bolshevik troops merely turns into Bolsheviki those of the population who were not Bolsheviki before? It is clear to us that the Bolsheviki are really fighting against bourgeois dictatorship. We are, therefore, prepared to help them in every possible way.

"Grandmother Ekaterina Constantinovna Breshkovskaya has no sort of authority, either from the assembly of members of the all Russian constituent assembly or from the party of social revolutionaries. Her utterances in America, if she is preaching intervention, represent her personal opinions which are categorically repudiated by the party of social revolutionaries, which has decisively expressed itself against the permissibility of intervention, direct or indirect."

Volsky signed this latter statement "V. Volsky, late president of the assembly of members of the all Russian constituent assembly."

Martov, leader of the Menshiviki, stated: "The Menshiviki are against every form of intervention, direct or indirect, because by providing the incentive to militarization it is bound to emphasize the least desirable qualities of the revolution. Further, the need of the army overwhelm all efforts at meeting the needs of social and economic reconstruction. Agreement with the soviet government would [illegible]

Martov finally [illegible] that given peace, itself and the [illegible] will bring about the changes he desires.

Army

The soviet army now numbers between 1.000.000 and 1.200.000 troops of the line. Nearly all these soldiers are young men between the ages of 17 and 27. The morale of regiments varies greatly. The convinced communists, who compose the bulk of the army, fight with crusading enthusiasm. Other regiments, composed of patriots but noncommunists, are less spirited; other regiments composed of men who have entered the army for the slightly higher bread ration are distinctly untrustworthy. Great numbers of officers of the old army are occupying important executive posts in the administration of the new army, but are under control of convinced communist supervisers. Nearly all the lower grade officers of the army are workmen who have displayed courage in the ranks and have been trained in special officer schools. Discipline has been restored, and on the whole the spirit of the army appears to be very high, particularly since its recent successes. The soldiers no longer have the beaten dog-like look which distinguished them under the Czar, but carry themselves like freemen, and curiously like Americans. They are popular with the people.

I witnessed a review of 15.000 troops in Petrograd. The men marched well and their equipment of shoes, uniforms, rifles, and machine guns and light artilery was excellent. On the other hand, they had no big guns, no aeroplanes, no gas shells, no liquid fire, nor indeed, any of the more refined instruments of destruction.

The testimony was universal that recruiting for the army is easiest in the districts which having once lived under the soviet were overrun by anti-soviet forces and then reoccupied by the Red Army.

Trotsky is enormously pround of the army he has created, but it is noteworthy that even he is ready to disband the army at once if peace can be obtained in order that all the brains and energy it contains may be turned to restoring the normal life of the country.

Lenin's Prestige

The hold which Lenin has gained on the imagination of the Russian people makes his position almost that of a dictator. There is already a Lenin legend. He is regarded as almost a prophet. His picture, usually accompanied by that of Karl Marx, hangs everywhere. In Russia one never hears Lenin and Trotski spoken of in the same breath as is usual in the western world. Lenin is regarded as in a class by himself. Trotski is but one of the lower order of mortals.

When I called on Lenin at the Kremlin I had to wait a few minutes until a delegation of peasants left his room. They had heard in their village that Comrade Lenin was hungry. And they had come hundreds of miles carrying 800 poods of bread as the gift of the village to Lenin. Just before them was another delegation of peasants to whom the report had come that Comrade Lenin was working in an unheated room. They came bearing a stove and enough firewood to heat it for thre months. Lenin is the only leader who receives such gifts. And he turns them in to the common fund.

Face to face Lenin is a very striking man — straghtforward and direct, but also genial and with a large humor and serenity.

Concessions

The soviet government recognizes very clearly the undesirability of granting concessions to foreigners and is ready to do so only because of necessity. The members of the Government realize that the lifting of the blockade will be illusory unless the soviet government is able to establish credits in foreign countries, particularly the United States and England, so that goods may be bought in those countries. For Russia today is in a position to export only a little gold, a little platinum, a little hemp, flax, and wood. These exports will be utterly inadequate to pay for the vast quantity of imports which Russia needs. Russia must, therefore obtain credit at any price. The members of the soviet government realize fully that as a preliminary step to the obtaining of credit the payment of foreign debts must be resumed and, therefore are ready to pay such debts. But even though these debts are paid the members of the soviet government believe that they will not be able to borrow money in foreign countries on any mere promise to pay. They believe, therefore, that they will have to grant concessions in Russia to foreigners in order to obtain immediate credit. They desire to avoid this expedient if in any way it shall be possible, but if absolutely necessary they are ready to adopt it in order to begin the restoration of the normal life of the country.

After having read all this material, which in no case can be considered as Bolshevik propaganda, one can only conclude that Siberia is at present under a rule which is practically the same as that of the Czar, with one notable difference: namely, that was despotic organization, whereas here [illegible] is despotism without any organ[illegible]tion. The picture presented by these papers is one of sheer anarchy.

Had the American authorites carefully studied all these newspapers, or even only their official section as they could easily have done, they would never have supported Kolchak in any way.

Capitalist Press' Ability To Lie.

starvation, with a woleful lack of rolling stock for her crippled railways and with all the capitalist world, like a wolfpack at her throat, the working-class government of Russia has rallied her powers and successfully warded off the atacks of her enemies.

The last chance of the capitalist allies of Russian reactionaries to wreck the first working-class government is rapidly passing. Winter is settling down in the northland. The opportunities for active campaigning will soon be over. Russia will have a chance to regain at least a portion of her shattered powers during the winter months. Starvation holds no fears for Russians. They knew starvation under the Czar, they can imagine but one thing worse, that is to become the slaves of the capitalist imperialism that seeks to devour them. By the time snows are melted in the spring, the allies may have sufficient trouble with their own working-classes to draw their attention from undecalred war in Russia.

The lying capitalist press completely refutes its own statements. It lies purposely and maliciousily lied to delude the workers. Already the prostitute editors are shedding tears because the facts do not bear out their extravaganzas of yesterday. But they do not weep on account of their falsehoods, they have fallen far below that moralstate. They are paid prostitutes and damned cheaply hired at that. Their kind in the under world would scorn the miserable ness of pottage they accept as the price of their debanchery.

The lying press will continue its present course as long as it can find a market for its wares. A powerful opponent is arising, however in the form of a militant worker's press. As the class-consciousness of the workers increase, their press is strengthened. And in this is the hope of the future. Like every avenue of human endeavor, journalism has been debanched by the present economic system, which has perverted a means of education and information into a means of enslavement of the peoples.

The future welfare of the world lies in the lap of labor. Labor only can save the world from the chaos into which capitalism is rapidly driving it.

The revolution sweeps on. No lie is big enough to halt THAT.

DISCOVERED! THE ONE HAPPYFAMILY IN INDUSTRY! IT MUST BE SO BECAUSE THEY SAY SO!

"Full many a flower is born to blush unseen and waste its sweetness on the desert air", sang a poet long ago. Many have been the comments upon the fact that greatness is often hidden and may be found in places least expected. — But who would ever suspect that right here in Cleveland existed that which the presidents round table so earnestly sought, that which has been so earnestly sought by all the happy little fixers for the continuance of the Capitalist state — THE HAPPY FAMILY IN INDUSTRY!

Under a very pretty picture of a bourgeoisie mother and child, the following notice appears:

Does this picture portray anything to you?

Does it make you think of your loved ones?

Must your wife and child suffer thru the ignorance of others?

Is the cry of bread to be heard from the mouths of babes so that a few of the so-called proletariat attain aims to their end thru the spirits of unrest they create.

We all know what unrest means in industry. It means less income and bigger efforts to wage the fight for existance.

When you hear of your fellow workers complain of conditions in our plant it is your duty to notify the industrial relations department of the complaint. Do not forget we are here to serve you. Your personal and industrial problems are matters we sincerely desire to straighten out for you. Our office is similar to a court of domestic relations only on a much broader field.

With all the policies of the company based on justice the reciprocation of your confidence to us is the first stepping stone to happiness fairness and the condition of equality that must exist with us all to become the one happy family in industry known as the American Multigraph Company. Signed Mr. Tom Wright Manager of the industrial relations department.

Upon inquiry as to wages paid in this happy family we were informed that we could become one of the family at any time and receive the magnificent wage of 40c an hour!

We had just been looking for a house to live in and knew something of the prices we would have to pay for house rent, we had just had an ordinary proletarian dinner and had paid 65c for it, and we had just looked over the price list current in Cleveland stores and we couldn't figure out how could make 40c an hour cover all the necessary expenses of just an ordinary decent living. We wanted to take advantage of the generous offer of Mr. Wright and have him help us straighten out "our personal industrial problems" including the problem of how to live on 40c an hour and still have at least six hours to sleep but alas its a cruel world! Our knowledge of Communist economics butted in here and told us that Mr. Wright for all his good intentions and generous offers couldn't do it!

YOU CANNOT BE ONE OF A HAPPY FAMILY ON A WAGE OF 40c AN HOUR!

Hands off Soviet Russia

The imperialists of the world are continuing their infamous armed intervention in Soviet Russia. The counter-revolutionary Czarist generals, backed by allied troops, allied ammunition and allied money continue shedding the blood of the Russian workers and devastating the territory of the proletarian Republic. Moreover, the Allies are tightening the iron ring of the blockade around Soviet Russia, thus dooming millions of women and children to unheard of misery, starvation and disease.

All this is being done because the workers, and peasants of Russia have cast off the yoke of exploitation and opression and have devoted themselves to the talk of reconstructing their life on such foundations as will eliminate all oppression of the poor by the rich, all exploitation of the toilers by the capitalists. This is why the capitalist countries, where all the power is concentrated in the hands of the big commercial and financial interests, are waging this predatory war against Soviet Russia. Defending their class in Russia they are thereby protecting their own interests, for they know that the example set by the Russian workers will inevitably be followed by the workers of their own countries.

Hence, America's participation in this war against Russia!

American troops still on Russian territory, and American ammunition and money are still being used for the purpose of strangling the only proletarian Republic in the world.

America's intervention in Russia is frequently referred to as President Wilson's private war. This is correct only insofar as the formalities required for the waging of the war have not been complied with: It is being carried on without the consent of Congress. Yet, as a matter of fact, it is not altogether President Wilson's private war. It is rather the class war of the American plutocracy, the class war of the international money bags. American capital is vitally interested in crushing Soviet Russia and it does not stop at mere technicalities, even if it means the violation of laws of its own creation. In waging this war, President Wilson plays the part of the faithful servant of the American plutocracy.

American workers, you must realize this and bear it firmly in mind. You must know that every American soldier sailing for Russia, goes there to shed the blood of the Russian workers and peasants who are now engaged in a desperate struggle against the capitalists of the world — those brigands of the international highways. You must bear in mind that every rifle, every cannon, every machine gun which is being sent from the United States to Russia means death for the many Russian workers and peasants who are sacrificing themselves in order that the workers the world over may be liberated from the yoke of international capital.

Workers of America! it is not sufficient to know and to bear all this in mind, — you must act accordingly. Hands off Russia!

This slogan has already been adopted by the British, French and Italian workers. In Great Britain, in France and in Italy the workers are refusing to load ships with ammunition and provisions destined for the foes of Soviet Russia.

American workers, you must follow their example! To every invitation to play the part of Cain towards your Russian brothers, to every request of the American government to enlist for active service in Russia, or to load ships for the bloodstained Russian White Army, there must be one answer: "HANDS OFF SOVIET RUSSIA."

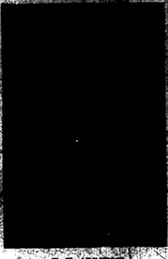
Resigning and Newly Appointed
State Secretary

ALFRED WAGENKNECHT

After serving three years as State Secretary of the Socialist Party of Ohio, comrade Wagenknecht resigns to go to New York as National Secretary of the Communist Labor Party.

Comrade Wagenknecht grew up in Cleveland, but spent several years on the Pacific coast. He was active in Washington state as organizer, speaker and assistant State Secretary, which position he resigned to return to Cleveland.



E. T. ALLISON

He was born in Mo. Emigrated to Wash. when fifteen and grew up with the country. Joined the Socialist Party when eighteen.

Is a shingle weaver by trade, being a member of No. 500 of the I. W. W. Two years ago he came to Cleveland and has since served in the capacity of assistant State Secretary and editor.

He now succeeds comrade Wagenknecht as State Secretary, being apointed by the S. E. C. to fill his unexpired term.

Miners Revolt Against Government By Injunction

The government has played the high card of the coal Barons. Government by injunction became an accomplished fact of American life during the administration of Grover Cleveland of odoriferous memory. The democracy destroying principle of government by court injunction has been revived by Woodrow Wilson in his war upon the working-class for the benefit of high finance and profiteers.

Government by injunction abrogates every constitutional right of American workers. By its action, men, politically free become virtual salves of the ruling class. Government by injunction never works toward freedom, but always toward slavery. Men who love freedom, who have red blood in their veins will defy it, they will fight it to the death.

No class of workers labored harder or sacrificed more for the winning of the war than did the miners. Now they find all the powers of the government they backed up attempting to drive them into submissive silence and abject slavery thru its made-to-order laws.

The government has taken the side of the coal operators against the miners on the pretext that the welfare of the "public" is at stake. Who is this public? Is it any but the workers? The government creates a fictitious bait for the workers to bite upon and to give it plausible excuse to wage war upon them.

The miners have revolted. In spite of their officials' capitulation before the mandate of the courts' injunction issued at the request of the government, they have refused to enter the mines, to labor for the enrichment of their exploiters, beneath a governmental lash. They are men, fighting as men fight, for their wives and children and a chance to live like free men in a world of freedom and justice. They refuse to bow the neck for the steel of those who thrive on their misery. The government has won a "victory" of a very questionable character. And victories of this nature mine no coal. Back up the miners with the strength of your organization. Back them up for their fight is your fight.

A Letter To the Locals and Comrades

COMRADES:

For two years it has been my pleasure to work in your State Office as assistant State Secretary and co-editor of our state paper, The Ohio Socialist. I have witnessed the great co-operation between the state office and the membership which has been so conductive of progress of our state movement. Co-operation between all elements in our party has been the keystone of the rapid growth which has marked the Ohio movement for the last few years. During this period we have built up from a small monthly bulletin a weekly periodical that now has the largest circulation of any Party paper in the country. We may well be proud of our victories of the past.

But we face ever new problems. I now assume at the request of your State Executive Committee, the greater and graver responsibilities of State Secretary. I am not unaware of the problems which we face at the present time, nor do I flinch before them. I shall pursue with all the ability which many years experience in our movement has given me and in an agressive manner, all the duties which now devolve upon me. In this work I ask and urge the co-operation of every comrade. This office will always be open for suggestions for bettering our movement, for getting out more propaganda, for organizing in a more efficient manner the workers of this state in order that they may achieve their emancipation.

Ohio, as a great industrial state furnishes a ripe field for our propaganda. Industrial unrest is rampant. The workers are awakening. They are ripe for organization. They are eager for a message that means emancipation from the galling chains of wage slavery. This is our work. Let us be up and at it at the earliest possibile moment.

It is my hope that the co-operation that has existed in the past between the locals, comrades, and the State Office may continue in the future to the great growth of our Party.

Yours for co-operation and victory
E. T. ALLISON
State Secretary

Socialists in Military Prisons Worse Treated of All Objectors

Brutalities to which conscientious objectors were subjected at Fort Riley and Camp Funston were directed mainly against prisoners who differed politically from the administration. Joseph Brandon, a conscientious objector who was freed recently after being sentenced to die by court-martial in October, 1918, and whose sentence was twice commuted by President Wilson, asserted this yesterday.

He charged that the Socialist conscientious objectors and practically all those classed as "radicals" suffered indescribable cruelties, which were directed by the War Department.

"Men are not kept in jail because they are opposed to war," he said, "but because they are Socialists. Those who took part in the hunger strikes and openely declared their opposition to the present regime were stamped as 'radicals.'

Solitary for Any Offense.

"We were choked, beaten, kicked and dragged whenever we sought to gain our rights as citizens, and not as criminals, as we were kept. At occasions we were thrown under cold showers, sometimes even five times a day. Once they threw a hose of cold water on me while I was asleep, although I was at that time in poor health."

Brandon declared that for the least thing a conscientious objector did he was thrown into solitary confinement. He charged that during the showers, through which many of the objectors contracted influenza and pneumonia, their backs were scrubbed with latrine brushes. Many guards, he said, also spat at them, kicked and punched them while doing this.

At Camp Funston, Brandon declared, about 20 objectors were denied cooked food.

"This happened," he continued, "in an open field under unsanitary conditions. Bugs and other insects were creeping and flying about us, but we were nevertheless told to cook our meals there. We refused to do any cooking at all, and went on a hunger strike.

"On the 11th day after the hunger strike began some of us were sent to the hospital. We were broken down for lack of nourishment.

Thrown Into Latrine.

Schools or Cabarets

On the "Educational" Policy of the Siberian "Government"

The following is translation of an article which appeared in the New York Jewish Daily, "The Day," of October 16th. As the reader can see from the article, its author, Mr. Boris Diukon, the Siberian correspondent of "The Day," is an anti-Bolshevist and considers the work of the revolution as purely destructive, and this makes his description of the policy of the Siberian Government the more interesting.

What would be of greater benefit to a wild, illiterate country: schools to educate the future generation, or filthy, dissolute, foul cabarets?

In the United States and in Europe, merely asking such a question would land one in an insane asylum.

But what is our Siberian Government, whose members have felt on their own shoulders the results of the Russian illiteracy, and have seen the destruction which was wrought in Russia by the dark and savage mob— what is this Government doing now to prevent such excesses?

What is it doing to enable the future generation to reconstruct at least a part of what their fathers have destroyed?

Absolutely nothing!

Has the Government built any new schools? Not a one!

Has it at least made improvements in the miserable schools which it found in existence? Not at all!

But do not assume that no appropriations were made for the Government's "Ministry of Education." Not only was an appropriation made, and quite a large one — ten and a half millions of rubles, but the appropriation was spent.

Ten millions of rubles and not a single school built! Ten millions of rubles, and not a single school improved!

But, as Popristchin said: "They write — China, and it reads — Spain." They write, "an appropriation for educational purposes," and it reads, "for drunkennes" — to spread drunkenness among the people.

You encounter them in every Siberian city, at every corner, near every cafe.

Some of them are eighteen years old.

They are prospective candidates for houses in which the windows are enclosed in iron gratings. They are without teachers. And, indeed, who should care for them? The parents?

But the cost of living is so high that to assure at least sufficient bread for the family one must work, and

THE ENGLISH SHOP STEWARD MOVEMENT

From "The World."

Yesterday a treasure ship came into port — a ship carrying a treasure of information, all concealed in one well-shaped head, poised on a pair of brawny, sailor shoulders — in short, a comrade British sailor-man, by name Wallace Hill, who rolled into the office with all that cargo of knowledge of what the workers are thinking and doing in England stored away in his head where the censor could not see it. His ship was scheduled to stop at this port only four hours, but the longshoremen's strike delayed matters a bit, and we had time to ask and hear about the shop steward system, the different political parties, the recent strikes, the old trade union movement, and innumerable personal anecdotes about the workers' struggle for emancipation in the British Isles.

After shaking hands, inquiring about each other's health, and exchanging a few other Bolshevik high signs — we naturally led off with:

"Tell us about the shop steward movement over there."

The Old Craft Unions Break Down.

"To understand the British shop steward movement," he replied, "it is necessary to go a bit into the pre-war trade union movement. First of all, the old line trade union movement has gone into the discard. This is not a prophecy, but an accomplished fact. It was broken once and for all during the war. For example: One of the cardinal principles of the trade unions was the restriction of output, and this principle came directly in conflict with the demand for a maximum production to win the war. The workers themselves, being at that time patriotic, willingly gave up this point to help beat the Hun." The leaders of the trade unions gave up all that the unions had won in a century, the government, with the understanding that after the war everything would be returned to the old status quo, thus demonstrating the ignorance of these leaders of all social forces. Like that earlier reactionary, Jehovah, they would set the sun backwards."

"Who are some of these leaders?" we interrupted.

"Brownelie of the engineers; Thornes, of the gas workers; Col. John Ward, at the present time fighting the Bolsheviki in Archangel, representing the Liverpool dock workers; Ben Tillet—"

"Where is Tillet now? we asked.

"At the last election he succeeded in getting into office — with the support of the Lloyd government. All of these men belong to the generation that is past — like Gompers — and they no longer represent nor receive the support of the workers."

"And did the shop steward movement come in to take the place of the trade unions?" we inquired.

"Yes and no. The shop stewards will never function like the old craft organizations. It is better to say that the shop steward movement will do what the old craft unions always pretended to do, but never did. The war demanded intensified production. The movement for intensified production was led by Sir Eric Geddes. This effort to increase production led directly to the dilution of labor, and—"

"What is this dilution of labor you speak of?" we interrupted.

Great Gains in Solidarity.

"For years and years the British working class has been separated into crafts. The engineer was an engineer, and the laborer was a laborer, and they did not mix. The workers were held apart by their crafts. But with the advent of intensified production, the craft lines became indistinct, until now they have practically disappeared as far as the consciousness of the British workers goes. The old line leaders had entered into an agreement with the government to the effect that if they sanctioned any strike during the war they would be subject to a heavy fine and to 12 months imprisonment. Thus the workers found themselves tied hand and foot. 'Sold out.' Then it was that the workers ceased relying on their leaders and took matters into their own hands. The result was the shop steward system. One thing which bulked larger in the mind of the British worker than would seem possible to his American brother, was the change from the plan of restricted output to that of intensified production. Restricted output had been a cornerstone in the British labor movement. Without this safeguard — unemployment loomed large before the eyes of the toilers for after-war period. It was this fact that first moved the British worker to seek control of his job. When their trade union leaders would no longer function for them, they found it necessary to function for themselves. Through the shop committees they sought control of the working conditions in the shops and factories. At first the new movement was fought by the trade unions, but now the shop steward movement is recognized by both the reactionary and progressive trade unions."

"Tell us something about how the system works out when it is actually applied to the job," we asked.

"Well, every department of a factory has its shop steward, who is elected by the men of that department, and the stewards from all the departments form a committee and elect a chairman, who, with the chairmen from other factories or industries, forms another committee, which roughly corresponds to the district councils of the American labor movement. When any trouble arises in a factory, it is brought to the attention of the shop steward, who immediately takes it up with the management. If the management does not adjust the matter, we have the call for 'down tools' and thus arose our numerous strikes during the formation of the new system. Under this plan no time is lost in going to union halls, seeking interviews with bosses, etc. You will also observe that the structure of the shop steward system is an industrial one and that the plan lends itself to a ready co-operation with the plan of the One Big Union. In fact, the shop steward system will lead, anywhere it is tried out, directly and inevitably, to the industrial union."

"Now, can you give us some concrete examples of how the plan worked over there?" we pressed him.

"I was just coming to that," he replied with enthusiasm, "the shop steward system, unlike a great many other systems for labor organizations, justifies itself in practice, not in words or in theory. In 1916, when the war menace was extreme in England, Lloyd George and Lord [illegible] went to Glasgow to meet the 12 shop stewards of the Clyde districts, who were representing something over three quarters of a million men. Lloyd George was introduced to Kirkwood, the chairman of the shop stewards. Immediately, without waiting for any formalities, Kirkwood told Lloyd George to be careful what he said, because whatever he said would be used against him with the workers and that on the whole it would be best for him to go back to Parliament [illegible] somewhat recovering himself, he left with the threat that he would give the men conscription for their impudence. And in a few days England had conscription for their impudence. Not only this, but the 12 men were arrested, and then deported to various industrial centers throughout the Isles. Immediately there sprang up among the workers a demand for the release of these men and their return to their homes. The merely verbal demand failing, the workers whom these men represented proceeded to down their tools, which plan was successful in gaining the return of the men. At a meeting of one hundred thousand workers on the green at Glasgow, the 12 returned men were presented with [illegible] the works of [illegible] and Kirkwood was placed the first foreman under the shop steward system. Another illustration," he continued after a pause, "is the use of the same tactics to secure the release of John McLean from prison. McLean was arrested and the workers downed tools. He was released. The workers returned to the job, and McLean was re-arrested. Again the [illegible] laid down their tools. And again McLean was released. Three times this was repeated — and finally the officials gave up in disgust."

"Is there any chance of the shop steward system losing the ground that it has won in England?" we inquired.

"No chance now," he answered, [illegible]

Five Members of State Executive Committee Communist Labor Party of Ohio

TOM CLIFFORD

Born in the pottery village of Roseville Ohio, 64 years ago, Tom Clifford has spent most of the years of his life an active worker in the labor movement. He is a printer by trade, being a member of the typographeal union.

For the last twenty years comrade Clifford has labored as speaker, organizer and committeman in the socialist movement. Repeatedly he has answered the call of the comrades to stand as a candidate for political office He was the Party's candidate for Governor in two separate campaigns.

LOTTA BURKE

No comrade in Ohio is held in higher esteem than Lotta Burke, whose untiring labors as, organizer and speaker and member of the State Executive Committee have repeatedly proven her fidelity to the cause of Socialism. Her Party membership of 16 years has been filled with activity.

Cincinnati is her home and place of nativity. She is a member of Garment Workers Union No. 113. Her recent election to the S. E. C. marks the beginning of a sixth term in that capacity.

M. A. TOOHEY

Mike Toohey, of Toledo, fully deserves the high estimation in which he is held by the socialists of Ohio. As organizer of Local Toledo, he has just carried to great success a most aggressive campaign.

He was born at Steubenville O., and is President of the Molders Union of Toledo. His service inthe labor union movement has brought him in bad repute with the steel kings and as a result he is on their honor roll —blacklist.

In the above picture, he is seen standing before the display window of Local Toledo Headquarters.

MARGUERITE PREVEY

One of the founders of the Socialist Movement of Ohio, is Marguerite Prevey of Akron. Of Canadian birth, she grew up on the farm and experienced all the out door hardships and pleasures of that life.

Tho an optician by profession, she long ago cast her lot with the proletariat and has fought his battles at all costs and sacrifices. A few years ago she led the Akron rubber workers strike. She is one of Gene Debs' best friends and just previous to his incarceration at Moundsville Penitentiary, toured nothern Ohio with him for the Socialist Party.

J. J. HOGE

A new member of the State Executive Committee is J. J. Hoge, of Bellaire. Comrade Hoge is well known in Ohio as an organizer for the Party, having delivered a course of illustrated lectures and done organization work in Belmont County.

He is a native of England having been born in County Durham. He emigrated to America in 1904. He is a miner and a member of the U. M. W. of A. His Party affiliation dates from 1911.

A. WAGENKNECHT
State Secretary.

STATEMENT TO THE MEMBERSHIP BY THE STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

To the Locals and Members of Ohio.

COMRADES:—

Your state executive committee, in meeting assembled this 8th day of November, issues the following declaration to the members and locals in the state.

After due consideration we hold that the Ohio state organization is officially affiliated with the Communist Labor Party by referendum act of the state membership. This conclusion is reached in compliance with the mandate contained in Article 1, Section 1, of the state constitution, which states that the party in this state shall be affiliated with that section of the Socialist Party which adopts the left wing program.

The national convention of the Socialist Party held in Chicago, Aug. 30th, split into two factions, a right wing faction and a left wing faction. The left wing faction, consisting of 92 delegates, adopted the left wing program and subsequently adopted the name of Communist Labor Party, to differentiate it from the right wing faction and its reactionary officialdom. The delegates attending the national convention from Ohio, with but two exceptions, joined the left wing group, helped organize the Communist Labor Party and followed state instructions to the letter. We now call upon all Ohio members and locals to cooperate with the state office in the many duties immediately before us.

The Communist Labor Party has gathered phenominal strength nationally in the last several months. The national office of the party is already publishing books and pamphlets in number it is issueng a national fighting organ, "Communist Labor", and a labor paper for the party, the "Voice of Labor". The party's monthly magazine, "The Class Struggle" should be read by every party member, and hundreds of thousands of leaflets are now realy for the locals for free distribution.

The Communist Labor Party is a party of action. We call upon you to become locals and members of action. Become active at once in the Communist Labor Party, distribute its literature, get subscriptions for its papers, engage its speakers.

The fundamental differences between the three parties are well analizing in the accompanying statement. Read it carefully. Then decide your affiliation and enter the work we must all continue active in, that of establishing workers' control so that we may gain Industrial Democracy.

REPORT OF STATE SECRETARY.

TO THE STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

COMRADES:—

Many events have taken place since the state executive committee of the Ohio party last met. The great change taking place in the world has demanded new adjustment in every walk of life, and new adjustments have also been forced upon the revolutionary movements of the working class.

The split in the Socialist Party, the consequent organization of two communist parties and the activities of all three parties call for study on the part of the membership. Many comrades need a goodly amount of time before they can mentally digest the causes for these controversies, and as a consequence there are many comrades yet in the transation stage, gradually growing into revolutionary Socialists, gradually accepting the program of the Third International.

To the comrades who look askance at the inter-party differences, we have this to say. The same divisions are occuring in all European countries. In Sweden, England, France, Italy, Norway, Germany — in all European countries in which a Socialist movement existed before and during war time, a division has occured, the comrades dividing themselves into right wing Socialist, those who are pure political actionalists and parliamentarians, and into left wing Socialists, those who realize that we participate in political campaigns for purposes of propaganda and education, and who make the industrial struggles the major campaign, and who know we can never hope to establish industrial democracy by having legislators make a motion for it in Congress! The slogan of these left wing Socialists is "all power to the workers" and their one immediate demand is "workers control".

In the United States the situation among the left wing Socialists is somewhat complicated because of a split in the left wing movement. This split occured in New York in June, when certain comrades demanded that a new party be organized at once, whereas others, a majority, demanded that the fight for left wing principles be continued in the old Socialist Party until the national convention. The result of this split was that some comrades began immediately organizing a new party, whereas others continued their fight in the Socialist Party for left wing principles. This resulted in two left wing conventions in Chicago, out of which were organized the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party.

The Communist Labor Party, while in convention and thereafter, made sincere attempts to unify the two communist groups, but without success. The national officials of the Communist Party seem determined to perpetuate their clique control and to do so, they do not feel inclined to unite with the Communist Labor Party upon a basis of equality. The last unity attempt on the part of the Communist Labor Party was made October 13th. The answer to the call for an unity conference resulted in another refusal by the national officials of the Communist Party. The Communist Labor Party now intends to give its full time to the important work of propaganda and organization and await the time when the membership of the Communist Party will force national officials into unity with our party.

In this state the Communist Labor Party is gathering strength at a satisfactory rate. As the committee knows, the constitution of the party adopted by membership vote, provides that the state organization affiliate with that section of the Socialist Party which adopts the left wing program. The Socialist Party national convention of August also split into left and right sections. That section which adopted the left wing program was subsequently named the Communist Labor Party. Therefore, by membership mandate, we are affiliated with the Communist Labor Party.

This does not mean that all locals in the state are so affiliated. The branches belonging to language federations, joined the Communist Party, first, because of lack of information as to the split in the left wing ranks. The papers of the federations, controlled by those who organized the thir party, the Communist Party, not being accessible to the comrades who followed the dictates of the majority of the left wing conference. And second, because these branches do, with few exceptions, follow the lead of their federation secretaries and executives.

The situation in this state in regard to Communist Labor Party organization is very favorable. New affiliations are being secured day by day. The comrades are beginning to understand, that it is the Communist Labor Party, because it is best adapted to conditions in this country, which will be the virile and active revolutionary party in this country. The Communist Party, divided against itself, first by having two executive committees and second by being a loosly federated party consisting of federations, each federation an autonomous group, will disintegrate because of internal differences, and the best of its comrades will join the Communist Labor Party in time, unless the membership of this party eventually forces unity.

The Ohio Socialist, the official weekly of the party in Ohio, still maintains its popularity and its large subscription list. The issues per week are of between 16.000 and 20.000 copies, the variation depending upon the number of bundle orders received.

The Army of Liberators, organized by consent of the state executive committee, has done much toward propagandizing the workers to act en masse to free political prisoners. Many contributions have been received, labor unions responding splendidly for this cause.

The financial situation of the party can best be judged by the financial report, which will be placed before you before you adjourn. The Ohio state party has assisted in financing the national office of the Communist Labor Party, and altho this was done without sanction by the state executive committee, the state office hopes to have your approval of this action.

The present state secretary, having been elected national secretary for the Communist Labor Party, desires to resign his office in the Ohio movement, O. S. Gal 6. this resignation to take effect at once. The national office of the Communist Labor Party will remove to New York next week, and this will necessitate the removal from Ohio of the present state secretary.

At least two organizers, well posted upon the party controversy, should be placed in the field at once. Information of party differences should be carried to the locals first hand, and by so doing the minds of many comrades can be cleared as to the party situation.

In closing we desire to again state that the new adjustments which are taking place need time to mature. Members need time to think. Eventually the party which shows the greatest activity along the lines of revolutionary principles will gain the confidence and support of the membership. We claim that in time, the party which will show most life and action will be the Communist Labor Party. In it are amassed the hundreds of Jimy Higginses of the old Socialist Party. It does not lack for either platform, executive or organization talent. Just as soon as this talent can be put to work, and this is being done gradually, the progress of the organization will be phenominal.

Fraternally submitted,
A. WAGENKNECHT
State Secretary.

The Three Parties - Which One Is Yours?

Three Parties are right now seeking your support. Your support means added power. Eaach Party wants more power. To which party are you going to add strength?

You realize that alone you are helpless before the organized strength of the capitalist class. You know that you must join with your fellow workers to achieve your emancipation. You feel that ALL TOGETHER the workers are strong.

Which one of the three parties is your party? Which one is the best instrument for the expression of the principals and tacticks you believe in? — WHICH Party can you depend upon not to support the capitalist State and betray you when the crisis comes? — WHICH Party has the form of organization that gives YOU the best opportunity to express yourself and to function for your class? WHICH Party has the proper tactic to avoid becoming a mere sect under the control of a clique of leaders? WHICH Party has a policy that will result in a great workingclass movement, competent to achieve victory?

HERE THEY ARE — MAKE YOUR CHOICE

The Communist Labor Party:

Accepts the principles of Communism.

Affiliates with the Third International.

Holds that employing class and workingclass have nothing in common.

Considers existing political state a ruling class instrument, whose sham democracies are useless to the workingclass.

Teachers that workers must develop their own power, abolish the existing political State and under their own dictatorship work out their problems.

Deems ballot box campaigns for this purpose of secondary importance. Makes the great industrial struggles its major campaigns.

Participates in political campaigns for purpose of propaganda, Has only ONE immediate demand: The Dictatorship of the Proletariat. ONE slogan: ALL power to the workers.

Propagandizes Industrial Unionism, Points out its revolutionary nature. Organizes shop committees. Actively helps to build the one big union.

Is the logical outgrowth of the revolutionary Left Wing Movement. Was organized in obedience to the decisions of the Left Wing Conference and the mandates of the Old Party's revolutionary membership.

Starts without machine politics or clique control. Permits no autonomous Federationss or groups. Develops highly centralized organization, capable of united action, Organizes its membership as ONE homogeneous mass, competent to meet the revolutionary situation.

Has a policy of INCLUSION. Constantly offers unity to all organizations that agree on the fundamental principles of Communism.

Has a nationwide organization, steadily growing in membership and power.

THE COMMUNIST PARTY:

Agrees with the Communist Labor Party on fundamental principles. (Not even the most othodox C. P. member has yet denied this).

Differs from the Communist Labor Party in ORIGIN, FORM of ORGANIZATION and POLICY.

Originated when the National Left Wing Conference refused to surrender itself to the complete domination of the Central Executive Committees of a few language groups.

Is the logical product of those that bolted from the Left Wing. Started as a THIRD Party by the Russian — Michigan group in violation of the decisions of the Left Wing Conference.

Began as a compromise between three political machines — the Michigan machine, the Russian Federation machine and the Fraina, Ferguson, Ruthenberg machine — under absolute clique control of "leaders."

Has practically autonomous Federations each a complete Party within itself whose [illegible] any time they [illegible] federation [illegible] action [illegible] situation, but TWO heads, an Executive Council and a Central Executive Committee, which are already at loggerheads with each other.

Has no centralized [illegible] capable of [illegible] class.

Builds its membership, not as one homogeneous mass, but as a loosely federated group of parties with nationalistic antagonisms, which must inevitably break apart.

Has a policy of EXCLUSION. Constantly refuses Unity Conference, since its officials are determined to perpetuate their clique control.

Can not now show one third of the membership of which it once boasted.

THE SOCIALIST PARTY

Rejects the principles of Communism. Refuses to affiliate with the Third International.

Holds that employing class and working class have some common interest in establishing "Freedom" and "Democracy".

Considers existing political State as a fit instrument through which the workingclass can emancipate itself. Teaches workers to place their faith in election of politicians, to secure "reforms" through the political State and establish Industrial Democracy by making a motion for it in congress and the legislatures.

Deems political machinery all sufficient. Supports industrial organizations only to garner votes.

Has a multitude of "Immediate demands." Continues its vote chasing tactics. Favors co-operation with the bourgeoisie. Balks at the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

Antagonizes the I. W. W. Denies the revolutionary signifiance of Industrial Unionism. Caters to reactionary A. F. of L. officialdom,

Will inevitably dicker, deal and compromise with Liberal organizations, Labor Parties and Non Partisan Leagues for political pie.

Is controlled by reactionary leaders, who called the Chicago police to their support at the national convention, and who still pull the controlling wires that move the puppets with new names.

Has officials that openly voice their hope that the Russian Revolution will not succeed, because it did not come by the "ballot box route."

Is the counterpart of the Kerenskys of Russia and the Scheidemanns of Germany, who turned the machine guns upon our Bolshevik and Spartacan Comrades.

Has lost nine tenths of its membership since last May.

DECIDE!!

If you still have faith in the palavering of politicians and distrust the workers on the job; — if you actually believe that the co-operative Commonwealth will spring full orbed from the ballot box, — if, you are afraid to join hands openly with the Bolsheviks and the Spartacans in the Third International, — then stay where you belong — in the old Socialist Party.

If you are the kind of Communist that blindly follows leaders, organized in a little clique for Party control, —if you are willing to waste your energies building a Party that has within its very form of organization the seeds of its own destruction, if you are opposed to unity of all the Communist forces, then you should join the Communist Party, until experience teaches you its costly lesson.

But if you want a Party that is solidly based on Communist principles, — if you want a Party that is uncompromising in its revolutionary tactics and that at the same time has a form of organization and a policy that makes possible the developing of a workingclass organization, militant and victorious, — then you should at once join the Communist Labor Party.

Do not delay. The laggard is lost. The compromiser is shoved aside. Make your choice. Take your stand NOW with the Bolsheviks and the Spartacans in the Third International. Become a member of the Communist Labor Party, and GET BUSY on the job among your fellow workers. That is the road to workers' power.

Pamphlets and Books You Should Read

Spread the Light—this should be the aim of every forward looking man and women. Induce the working class to read and it will work out its own emancipation. We give below a wholesale and retail price list of books and booklets which you should help place into the hands of those most need. War On The Reds

The war against the reds is on, if press reports of activities of the department of "justice" are reliable and they seem to be in this respect. Wars come so thick and fast these days it keeps one wide awake to keep up with them. They are somewhat confusing too. First there was a great war in which we were too proud to enter. But we got over that and got in-somewhat bewildered as to what it was about, but got in nevertheless. Of course it was a war for DEMOCRACY — wars generally are, you know. Lots of people were convinced that we would have democracy to lend and give away as soon as the frackas was settled. They are slowly coming out of this delusion.

But the big doings mere scarcely over before fifteen or forty-seven smaller ones started adding still more to the general bewilderment. Here at home of course, we were largely out of these little tin-horn scraps — except Mr. Wilson's personal onslaught against Russia — which certainly confused a lot of people who accepted Wilson's words and promises as genuine. This little war continues to date tho it's a losing game for Wilson and fellow "determiners of peoples."

A few weeks ago the hubbubo grew loud against the profiteers and another war was declared. It was the shortest war ever discovered. Also the loudest. Not a public "servant" in all this free land, but who vowed—in print, that he'd get the profiteers, the it caused him to miss a meal. The tangible results of this big-little war are about equal to those of the big one across the pond in so far as the victims are concerned-there aint none—not for them.

It seems necessary to start a brand new war about ever so often in order to make us common folks forget the promises made us by the proponents of the previous ones. So now we have a war on the reds. It seems that this great big country isn't big enough to hold a real man-sized idea any longer. So, in order that the idea may "squeeze" no one, it becomes necessary to bestroy it by jailing, deporting and raising general hell with the heads in which the idea has lodged.

And so, with the speed and judgement with which all our governmental activities are carried on, the war against the red idea proceeds. Houses are raided, men and women are jailed on charges or no charges. Meetings of workers are broken up, literature destroyed. Halls are raided and all contents carried into the street where an inspiring bon-fire is made in honor of the Goddess of liberty and democracy. Newspaper offices are raided, the plants destroyed, the editors jailed under the charge of "criminal syndicalism" — the wet blanket which was made to order to dampen the ardour of all who get too warm at the profit system.

So merrily goes the game. The funny thing about it all is, that the principles which you and we were taught to revere in our school days are being violated every day by this government which we were taught was established for the perpetuation of those ideas. Yes its a very bewildering world — unless you look at it from the standpoint of economic determinism. When you get that view-point you can see thru a ladder — even a governmental ladder.

Thru Persecution to Victory

No cause, it seems, can thrive without persecution snapping at its heels. "Persecution is the seed of the Church," wrote St. Paul. St. Paul knew, for he lived in rebellious times and witnessed the growth of Christianism thru persecution.

No organization ever had heaped upon it the amount of persecution which been heaped upon the I. W. W. No organization ever thrived as has it. None have affected the labor movement in the creating of class-consciousness to the extent as has it. None has given the workers such ground for hope as has this militant and agressive union of workers.

Winning by its clear cut class-conscious action the hatred of the ruling class, it has been the special target of the prostitutes of the hired press. Avalanches of oprobrium have been heaped upon it; tons of white paper have been consumed and barrells of ink spread in reviling it. Its organizers have been mobbed, shot and hanged. Its songsters illegally executed; its members jailed.

Thru it all, it has born the attitude of true philosophy. Never doubting the correctness of its fundamental teachings, it has unwaveringly stood before the onslaughts of the workers' enemies.

The truth of the recent occurrences at Centralia, Wash., are coming to light. When the full thruth is known, the I. W. W. will be cleared of guilt. The capitalist press has wallowed for a week in adjective vituperation against the I. W. W., but truth, like murder, will out, and the blood which was spilled at Centralia drips red from the hands of others than members of I. W. W.

When the history of the I. W. W. is written by future historians, the persecution which it has undergone will serve as a mark by which to judge this present era of "civilization."

Thru persecution its passes on to victory for the toilers and humanity

This deportation stuff gets our goat. This country has been hell on the foreigner for two years. He wants to get out but can't got passports. They try to get to Mexico or Canada but government agents trail them and throw them into jail. Jim Larkin is in jail in New York. He wants to go to Ireland but the British government won't let him in. Now he will be deported — maybe. And on top of that the Irish workers threaten to go on strike to force Britain to give him a passport. The quickest way to get the foreigner out is to hand out the passports — They WANT to go.

If some one will please tell us how to carry on the fight against capitalist exploitation by straddling a fence, we will be glad to take a seat along side. But until they can prove that a fence is an instrument of the proletariat, we will have to wander on our little way, doing what looks like effective work for our class.

Booze Reds and Water Reds

BY [illegible]
IN SEATTLE UNION RECORD

Everybody's worried
These days
Trying to find out
What makes the REDS GROW?
Is it BOOZE
Or the LACK of it;
Is it Russian gold
Or LACK of gold;
Is it a little germ
From Eastern Europe
Or from below Yesler?
Friend Gompers still repeats
His theory that BOOZE
Was the great saviour
Of the nation,

He says that prohibition
Upsets the worker's habits,
And so the man
Who formerly went HOME
To read and talk
In the evening
The CONSOLER
Of discontented workers!
Kept men AT HOME nights
Has now become disgruntled
And hangs about the streets
Meeting other disgruntled men
And talking Bolshevism!
I never knew before
That the SALOON
Instead of mixing
Downtown with other men.
But then it seems
We LIVE and LEARN!
For Gompers SAYS the reds
Thrive best in WATER
And booze is the [illegible]
Of the FAMILY
And so it MUST BE true!
But hist, here comes
A candidate for governor
In New Jersey
Who says he'll make that state
As WET as the Atlantic
In spite of ANY LAW!
That's RED enough, I think,
Defying law like that,
I guess that man must be
A BOOZE-RED
Instead of a WATER-RED,
For now I remember
Long ago in the Bible
It said that folks who looked
On booze when it was RED
Were likely to become VIOLENT!
And now the president
Of the Anti-saloon League
Declares, in spite of Gompers,
It's the WET towns
Where ANARCHY thrives best
Because when men drink booze
They get BEFUDDLED
And follow ANY leader!
It rather looks to me
These awful REDS
Will thrive most anywhere
Either in booze or water
Only the WATER-REDS seem To do more THINKING
Than BOOZE-REDS do,
And so I guess they are More DANGEROUS!

Schools or Cabarets

work hard, and there is no time left to watch the children.

"Formerly," —an Omsk Jew complained to me, "formerly the children at least used to attend school for half a day, and on coming home had to prepare their lessons; they were thus occupied for three-fourths of the day. Now they are absolutely free. The schools have been closed for six or seven months, they are all occupied by troops. And the children are all the time running loose on the streets, mingling with other demoralized elements. What can their prospects be under such conditions!"

Can you understand this? No new schools have been built by the Government; but as if this were not bad enough, they have taken away those that were in existence.

One school — for four thousand residents, and then this one has been requisitioned — for barracks!

And this is done by a government which pretends to be "democratic" and which decalres that it wants to see the Russian people free and educated.

That the Jew did not exaggerate is shown by these facts:

In Omsk, which is Kolchak's "capital," all the schools are occupied by troops. Omsk has five moving picture theatres, four cafes, and six cabarets, while the entire city has only one boys' high school, one girls' high school, two grammar schools, and three elementary schools, — that is, seven schools. But these seven schools were turned into barracks for the troops, while at the same time fifteen "amusement places" are open day and night.

To be sure, the Government gets a considerable income from these places. That is true! But I do not believe that this money plays any part in determining its policy.

It is more likely that the Government wants to keep the people in darkness for "political reasons," as in the good old days.

They prefer to open stores for the sale of strong drink. Because they believe that for a glass of brandy the Siberian people will sell all their ideas, Bolshevism, Menshevism, Christian and all other "isms". If only they will have brandy, they will be content. Such is the policy of the Siberian Government.

PETROGRAD FALLS

By Alden W. Welch

HAVE you ever seen Niagara, heard
the thunder of its power,
Never silent for an instant, irrespective of the hour?
Comes the roaring, roaring, torrent,
leaps the brink and hurtles down;
Would you try to still the turmoil with a silly human frown?
Would you try to turn the river from its ancient natural course,
Or would you, rather, harness up its vast hydraulic force,
Transform it into energy that skims
along the wires,
To light the lamps of Buffalo and still more distant fires?
There's a paper on may table and it reads, "Petrograd Falls!"
And I seem to see before me swift
Niagara's wat'ry walls,
Always falling, never fallen, ever tumbling, never gone.
Crashing in the dreary midnight,
smashing at the gates of dawn!
Would you try to dam the torrent that is gushing wild and free
From a hundred million human hearts that beat across the sea
Or will you, rather, do your bit to lift the yoke that galls?
Not try to dam — but rather, damn
the lie — Petrograd Falls.

MUSINGS

By Dr. Cowlie Cowles

While we have always advocated "Votes for Women", as a matter of simple justice, it does not follow that the granting of the franhise is a matter of expedience. There will now be again as many votes to count as previously and the opportunities for election frauds are increased that much. While it is true that women will never be able to make greater asses of themselves than men have, by voting for what they do not want, it is equally certain that, as a whole, the gentler sex is not intellectually superior to men and will be just as easily led into the political shambles called elections.

Aggravating as the capitalist system is, it is nevertheless doing more for socialism than all the socialists can do. In its desperation it is forced to resort to lie after lie. This is aggravating to us, but should not be so. The people have been humbugged they cannot digest and assimilate that many more and just at the psychological moment the capitalist press will find its influence gone.

Every ass who cares to bray says there are no classes in this country. According to an article in a recent issue of the Tampa, Fla. Morning Tribune, the government offered nitrate as fertilizer to the farmers at a certain price. But suddenly these sales were stopped without explanation. Investigation proved that the government was selling the nitrate in bulk and at a lower figure to a capitalist middleman who sold it to the farmers at a good big profit. If this is not a case of your capitalist government looking out for the interests of the capitalist class, then what class distinctions can a Hunky Dubb ask for?

[illegible]

L. M.— Oakland: The national office of the Communist Labor Party is moving to New York City mainly because that is the seat of several of its official publications, namely, "The Class Struggle" and the "Voice of Labor".

C. H.— Lima: The official organ of the German Communist Party branch in Cleveland, know as the "Echo", and published weekly, carried at the top of the first page, in black face comrades of the Communist Party to go to the polls and vote for "personal liberty" by voting "wet". At this same time the Communist Party had out a call to boycott the elections.

A. P.— Phila: The Greek branch of Chicago joined the Communist Labor Party subsequent to a debate between Katterfeld of that party and I. E. Ferguson of the Communist Party.

J. K.— Cleveland: Katterfeld of the C. L. P., has challenged Ruthenberg of the C. P. to debate the issues between the two parties. The latter comrade has not yet accepted the challenge.

J. E.— Boston: Hyman Bloomfield of the C. L. P. met John Ballam of the C. P. in debate in Worcester. John Ballam as editor of one of the C. P. official organs. From accounts received at this office Bloomfield won the debate easily, because Bloomfield had first hand knowledge of the origin of the present clique control of the C. P.

B. L.— Cincinnati: The Communist Labor Party now published the following pamphlets and books: Program of the Communist Labor Party of Russia, by Bucharin; Development of Socialism into Action, by Radeck; Old order in Europe and the New Order in Russian, by Price; Terror, Soviet Russia and Intervention, by Price; Crisis in the German Social Democracy, by Luxemburg; From October to Brest Litovsk, by Trotzky; Education and Art in Soviet Russia, by Eastman; Rader and Ransome on Russia; New Letter to Workers of Europe and America, by Lenin. Other books and pamphlets are on the press.

D. M.— Columbus: We have said and we repeat and we hold that we are right when we say that if you desire unity between the communist parties you should join that party and strengthen that party which demands unity. This is the C. L. P. To refuse to join either communist parties until they unite means that you thereby refuse to lend your efforts to unity, but would rather stand aside, an onlooker rather that a fighter for unity.

L. M.— Minneapolis: The criticisms of the Communist Labor Party and some of its officials made by Communist Party officials are most unjust. These criticisms are made to induce the comrades not yet affiliated with either party to join the Communist Party. The claim of 55.000 members is made for the same purpose, the Communist Party officials understanding that most people like to flock with the big crowd. Communist Labor Party officials are ready, yes anxious, to meet Communist Party officials in debate so as to face the criticisms launched aganst the C. L. P. which in many instances are not in accord with facts.

C. B.— Kansas City: Read the article headed "The Three Parties — Which one is yours" in this paper.

A. B.— Niles: The C. L. P. has suffered severely in the recent raids. From press reports we glean that the "Oakland World", the California C. L. P. paper, was practically wrecked by hoodlums and that numerous arrests have been made in every part of the nation. It is now the duty of every member of the C. L. P. to give dollars to make good the loss and for defense.

V. T.— Baltimore: The C. L. P. can not at this time divulge the source of its information relative to the deals made between the Russian Federation executives and the Fraina-Ferguson clique because more information is forthcoming from the same service.

It is these "behind the curtains" deals which are dangerous to any organization, for the membership will eventually become suspicious of officials who "fix" things behind the scenes.

SOW'S EAR

A clever chap named Will Shakespeare once got one off to the effect that "You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear."

This had a certain definite meaning in Will's day and was considered some wheeze. It was so well considered that countless notables, near comedians and others have repeated it for hundreds of years.

But lately it has an entirely different meaning. Show me the man extravagant enough to make of a sow's ear any kind of a purse!

Purses are out of fashion anyway and affected only by bloated [illegible]. The honest working man can put all he has left in an empty Durham sack, [illegible] per day. A little while later he doesn't even need the empty Durham sack.

[illegible]

THE BLACK SHEEP

[illegible]

A few days of [illegible] the [illegible] activity and gave to the [illegible] greater [illegible] It would be hard to conceive [illegible] intellect were so equally developed, altho the intelligence [illegible] by the two elder men with reference to life and its problems was of course far superior to that possessed by the boy. Yet the boy had something that the elder men lacked. He had a wide knowledge of life and living things as they are, untrammeled by the influence of civilization.

When they were seated on some feed boxes in a barn he told the older men that he considered civilization to be, but the logical outgrowth of over-population. He maintained that the earth with its flora and fauna could only carry a certain amount of individuals in each species. That when the species multiplied beyond the limits of its natural subsistence that then, one of two things was bound to happen; either the species ceased multiplication or they went into artificial production. Artificial production, increased the life sustaining power of the earth, which enabled the species controlling such production to multiply in greater numbers, thereby becoming a dominant power in nature. They upset what naturalists called the balance of nature and transferred the struggle for existence to an entirely different field. He illustrated it by saying that in the days before men had developed artical production his natural enemies were the animal world and climatic conditions; but with the advent of tools and the consequent multiplication of human numbers we had protected our-selves from climatic conditions, by means of houses, clothing and fuels. Also by the art of preserving and conserving food. We had enabled ourselves not only to live thru long winters; but with the aid of transportation the race was able to survive in un-favored communities, even long periods of nonproductivity. Man, he maintained had conquered nature and was now engaged in a struggle with his fellow men over the products of industry. This struggle goes on unremittingly between those who make it their business to own the resources and implements of production and those who, because they do not make it their business to own anything, have to use these resources and implements in order to live.

Artificial production, he contended, has taken the struggle for existence out of the domain of pure nature and transferred it to the marts of trade. Man has ended the struggle among species as far as he is concerned and has begun a struggle among types. I can see two distinct mind tendencies in the human race even as there are two physical tendencies among ants. One is the tendency to serve and the other the tendency to be served. One that has the tendency to be served is of course always on the lookout for atavisms of the serving type. That, to my mind explains the early death of the men you spoke of, I forget their names, Christ was amongst them I believe.

The two men looked at the boy in amazement. That is the only word that adaquately describes their feelings. In a few sentences he had practically expressed the sum total of what they had taught him and had drawn from purely economic data a conclusion of which they themselves had not been aware. He had pointed out that the relation of master and slave, beginning in the middle period of barbarism and coming upward thru the historical epochs of evolution in the Arayan race; thru many changes in form, but always the same in essence, was bound to have an affect upon the mind processes of the people. Into the brain of George there flashed two phrases from the literature he had read. The first was, special selection, and the second use-heredity. These two factors so powerful in the animal world surely must have had some effect upon that section of animal development which we are pleased to call "The genus homo."

Herman's brain was also busy. Jack had mentioned the fact of slavery among the ants. The ant masters have held their tenure so long that they have become physically unable to help themselves. And the ant slaves have been enslaved so long that the care of their parisitic hosts seems to be second nature to them. This evidently was not true to the full extent in the human race, either of the master or the slave; but was it not true to some extent? And if so, how far had this condition developed in the human race? And if it had developed was there a way out? And what was that way? These and similar questions flashed thru Herman's brain, as he nervously rolled a cigarette, while tracing heiroglyphics with his toe in the dust of the barn floor.

It was George who broke the silence. "The thing that differentiates the kid from the great mass of mankind, if the theory he has just outlined is true, is that he belongs to a biologic third estate in the human species. If I follow his reasoning correctly, he has come to this conclusion that long ages of enslavement during which it was to the master's interests to weed out the rebel types of both the speculative and atavistic order. They have succeeded "unbeknownst" to themselves in perpetuating the more or less servile types until a great bulk of the productive element of the human race has come to their [illegible] of intelligence, which they say, 'What ever is, is God's design.' On the other hand [illegible]

ing and the served gives rise to what I termed, while Jack was speaking the third estate."

"There is a story to be found somewhere in mythology that a Greek officer by the name of Pandora seduced a girl by the name of Miriam of Galilee and that the result of this seduction was the man Christ. Thus we have Pandora the master, Miriam the slave, producing Christ the rebel who was neither master or slave and therefore and undesirable citizen in the Roman world."

"From facts such as these we may explain a numerous variety of individuals who are not true to type, such as masters who delight in work and slaves who rejoice in idleness. Robbers, adventures, pioneers, idealists, prison-birds and martyrs are the various grades of mental manifestation in that human. No-man's — land that lies between the masters and the slave; the taker and the maker."

"But then, where would you put the middle class?" Herman objected. "Do not they comprise the middle ground, between mastery and slavery?"

"Yes, economically speaking, they are the middle ground of the industrial processes." Physically they work like slaves, and mentally they think in the terms of masters. Really they are economic hermorphidites. They are neither the one nor the other. The middle class are the Sociological bastards, fathered by capital, mothered by labor and despised by both.

"The middle class is not what Jack referred to. He referred to definite mind types. People having definite manifestations of intellect. But who in hell ever attributed intellect to the middle class?"

"Between the masters and the slaves' psychology there is a middle ground due to variations from the true type on both sides, as well as atavism, back to upper savagery or lower barbarism and lower civilization. The adventurers and robbers of Robin Hood's day, the Buccaneers of the middle ages. were a sort of a mental third estate, with strong master proclivities. The idealist of the Socrates, Christ, Savan-e-rola, Bruno, Spinosa, Robert Emmett, Lloyd Garrison, John Brown, Eugene V. Debs type are members of that mental third estate with leanings towards the slave psychology. The first mentioned group want freedom to acquire and destroy, the last mentioned group want freedom to develop and conserve, and it may be that in the blending of the two, may be found the secret of the redemption and resurrection of the human race!"

"Your philosophizing would make Charley Whiskers turn over in his garve. If your development of Jack's suggestion is correct then what becomes of the materialist conception of history, economic determinism, surplus value and the other bricks with which we have built the temple of our socialist faith? Seems to me that you kick it over rather thoughtlessly. Besides, both you and I have been trying to make Jack economical clear. I want him to be thoroly familiar with the works of old whiskers before he becomes a second Prof. Jordan."

"I do not see where his ideals logically worked out do any violence to any of our whiskered friend's theorems. Economic determinism force men to pick up the tool. The tool gave him protection; protection caused him to multiply; multiplication forced him to develop the tool; thru the further development of the tool he was forced to develop his social organization; with the development of social organization he conquered the earth, with the conquest of the earth developed the struggle between the types. It is this type struggle between the schemers and the workers that has developed into the modern class struggle of which to a great extent neither class is objectively conscious. The bulk of them do not fight over principles but over concrete things. The vast mass of labor, however, as yet does not fight, but accepts its lot in life as "God ordained". Between the two mental forces in the world, production at the bottom and acquisition on top, there lies a revolutionary ferment, made up of different germs. A very mild germ with very little acid producing power is the modern trade union movement. Avery rank smelling but comparatively mild germ is the anarchist movement, a more or less troublesome, to the masters, and to an extent inconvenient germ to the congential slave type, is what may be termed the socialist virus This may be likened unto pneumonia baccillus. There are three or four types of them, whose function in life it is to destroy the master and slave organization."

"They are all different but they're all bugs," interposed Jack. "But tell me who was Charley Whiskers?"

"Oh! That is Herman's pet name for Karl Marx, the man who discovered and expressed the laws that underlie our modern system of wealth production and distribution. His greatest achievement, however, was that gave us the law of Surplus Value."

"But who and what was he?" Jack persisted.

"Well, I might tell you something about his life, but that really is not important. He was a man and now is dead. What is important is that he showed us how millions lived their horrid lives by making other millions [illegible] How it happens that wealth is always concentrating in the hands of the few and poverty spreading out over the masses of mankind. He explains it by what he terms the Law of Surplus Value."

"What do you mean by Surplus value?" Jack asked.

"I think I have explained this to you before," said George, "but it is this, the difference between your [illegible]

THE SI[illegible]ION IN [illegible]FUL

[illegible] AND PROVISION [illegible] — [illegible] OF FOREIGNERS AN INTERVIEW WITH FREDERIK STROM.

Folkets Dagblad Politiken called on our Comrade Frederik Strom yesterday, to ask him whether he had any news from Russia.

"Is there anything new?" we asked.

"I have just received mail from Moscow," answered Strom.

"Well, how is the situation, in the opinion of the Soviet Government?"

"On the whole pretty good, and better than ever before. A portion of Siberia has now been freed from Kolchak's oppression, and the Red Army is full of enthusiasm and determined to settle this enemy once and for all. The Red army is now marching on Omsk, the seat of Kolchak's reactionary Government. Kolchak has already left Omsk and fled eastward. Turkestan has been liberated, and in the Southeast the revolutionary troops are approaching the Persian boundary. To no slight degree these victories are the result of the numerous uprisings that have broken out in Kolchak's rear and are spreading all over Asiatic Russia, even as far as Vladivostok. By his cruelty and savagery, by re-introducing the Czarist despotism with all its methods and governmental devices, the tyrant and devastator of Siberia has aroused against him all sections of the population, even the well-to-do peasantry, on whom he chiefly depends. Whole regiments, even whole divisions of Kolchak's armies desert to the Soviets or surrender after having captured their general and officers.

"Well, how about the [illegible] front, where Finns, Letts, Lithuanians and Poles are being instigated against Socialist Russia by the Entente?"

"The Poles advanced quite well during the summer, but have now been brought to a standstill and are in some places retiring. On the Lithuanian front there are no great fights. Dvinsk remains in the hands of the Soviet troops. On the Esthonian front, since the taking of Pskov by the Red Army, there has been on the whole no activity. The White Russian troops at Narva, reinforced by Noske's guards, are stationary, unable to advance on Petrograd."

"But how about Denikin's front, the South front?"

"It is true that Denikin's armies, led by Entente officers and extremely well equipped, have had certain successes and conquered certain important cities, thanks to treachery and vacillation among certain detachments of the Red Army, but the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs informs me that these successes are merely transitory, and that the Government is full of confidence, and declares that Denikin in a short time will be put to flight. This is made certain by the increasing uprisings and revolts in Denikin's rear. On the whole Denikin follows Kolchak's methods and introduces in all occupied territories the Czarist regime. Now that the population in these regions has had ocular demonstration of the counter-revolutionary art of government and has thus had an opportunity to compare the latter with the Soviet system of government, they may draw the inevitable conclusions. They will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the last support to the [illegible] [illegible]."

Conditions as to Provisions

"How is the provision situation now? Has the Moscow Government made any statement in this connection?"

"The shortage of foodstuffs in Russia is partly a matter of the past. The two most critical months — July and August — are now passed. Litvinov, Head of the Scandinavian Section of the Foreign Commissariat, has informed me literally as follows: 'While during the corresponding months of last year we were unable to offer anything to the populations of Moscow and Petrograd, we are this year in a position to give full rations throughout this period. The extraordinary good harvest now affords us great help! From another source I am informed that one can now buy, for example, in Moscow, as much meat, butter, milk, eggs, etc., as one may wish. In other fields also, the Soviet system is being consolidated and strengthened and productive labor is increasing and steading itself more and more within the forms of Socialism.'

Relations Between Russia and Sweden.

"Is anything mentioned about the relations between Russia and Sweden: What is the attitude of the Soviet Government on this matter?"

"Swedish industry has not succeeded in obtaining a breach in the blockade and probably the navigation period will be lost for this year. The consequences of this will hit Sweden just as hard as Russia. The policy of Socialist Russia should be directed towards a shaping of the foreign relations [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] of these [illegible] enjoyed special privileges. After breaking off relations, these privileges were gradually curtailed and their supplies in Russia were put on the same footing as those of native capitalists, i. e., they were subject to requisitions. The delegation of the Danish Red Cross was deprived of its special privileges for the protection of foreigners, since several of its members had been caught in counter-revolutionary activity, conducting anti-Bolshevik propaganda among the Russian prisoners of war whom they accompanied on their trip home from Denmark by way of Finland. In fact, they were conducting a recruiting campaign for the White Guards under Yudenich and Denikin. In addition, the Danish Red Cross delegation undertook to export Russian money amounting to millions, as well as other articles of value belonging to the Russian and foreign bourgeoisie. Finally, they served as an intermediary between Russian and Entente counter-revolutionaries both within and without Russia, forwarding their correspondence, even letters to members of the Czar's family. After all these things had been ascertained, the Danish Red Cross delegation found itself obliged to leave Russia at once."

Sweden in Russia

"Well, how about the Swedes over there; how are they acting, what is their position?"

"It is clear that when the Swedish Government so brutally severed its relations with Socialist Russia and banished the Bolsheviks from Sweden, this was not without consequences for Swedes in Russia, who had been very popular before that. I have, of course, done all that I have been able to, to help them, and have often written to Moscow to learn about their situation and only a few days ago tried to obtain permission for forwarding provisions to them from Sweden. But it is exceedingly difficult to get anything done, partly because the telegraph is shut off, and partly because the Scandinavians — some of them at least — in Russia are acting very badly. Thus, for instance, at the time of the treason at Krasnaya Gorka, and the English bombardment of Kronstadt, a military conspiracy was discovered at Petrograd and the clews led also to quite a number of foreigners. In the house-searches undertaken as a result, as well as in the inspections of the former foreign consulates, a very extensive material was found. Thus, for example, in the Swiss consulate at Petrograd and in the Danish consulate at Moscow, plans were found for a military conspiracy, extensive lists of counter-revolutionary agents in the Red Army, secret reports as to the movement of our troops and our provision depots, etc. Fortunately such gross violations have not been found in the case of Swedes. But considerable supplies were found, as well as valuables and money which the Russian bourgeoisie had delivered to Swedish officers for preservation, and had thus sought to withhold from the state. In this connection a number of Swedes were also arrested, but were almost all immediately freed again, although their trials were still in progress. While these trials are coming on, they are forbidden to leave the country. The Soviet Government is willing to send a Red Cross delegate to Sweden to deliberate with the Swedish Government as well as with the other questions involved in the status of foreigners in Russia."

BREAD AND ROSES

— BY ROSE PASTOR STOKES —

"Wear a red flower, tonight."

This was his invitation to the thousands of conscious workers who flocked to hear Gershuni a few years ago, Gershuni the Russian Revolutionist, who escaped from Siberia, arrived in New York and was to speak in Carnegie Hall that night — but a short while before he returned to the land of the Tzar, to die.

"Wear a red flower, tonight."

And when Gershuni stood before his vast audience in the evening, and saw Nature flaunting her scarlet beneath the multitude of pale faces raised eagerly for his message, he said:

"I wanted you to wear this symbol of the joy and beauty of life because we demand not only bread, but roses."

Yes, Bread and Roses! When the Revolution was successful, did our fellow workers think only of bread? No. Great and terrible as the need was, they lost no time securing to themselves in the fullest measure possible, — Roses! Roses! The flowers of Song, the Dance, the Opera, Drama. The flowers of Science — of Knowledge.

The Orchid of Culture, a hot-house plant nurtured exclusively for the Few has been transplanted in Russia to the fields and the meadows, where it blooms freely as the common daisy for all the common folk to pluck at will.

The king and queen of Belgium visited the United States. There is a great stir of interest in the ranks of the exploiters. The Opera House here makes a gala night of their visit to that temple of music.

The Workers take control of Russia. Their Opera becomes the Soviet Opera. There is a great stir among the common folk. The workers fill the Opera House. It is a gala night.

Just as it is natural for Capitalist America to give a special performance at the Metropolitan Opera House in honor of the king and queen — charging incredible prices for seats; so it is natural for Soviet Russia to give Opera daily for the Russian worker — where he is entitled to a seat by virtue of his useful labor.

The masses, lovers of song, inspires of all the great music that has ever been writen — it is for them that the great artists of the Moscow Opera vie with one another to give their best. For are they not themselves sprung from the people? And are not the people at last masters of all life? Tzars and Empresses, drainers of the people's life-blood, are no more! and no more do they "grace" the "royal" box. All space is the people's. They grace the house from pit to gallery. The sparkle of diamonds and precious stones, symbol of tears and slavery, have given place to sparkle of happy eyes, new-lit with the fires of liberty.

Not alone in music may the Russian worker now satisfy his hunger. Imagine yourself quitting after a half of a short day's work to hear a great singer of the people's songs — in your own factory, now become a fit place to learn and enjoy, as well as to work in! Or to get the instruction and entertainment of an illustrated lecture: or perchance it is a fete where you recreate body and spirit in the joy of the dance. Or maybe a troupe of Soviet players whose itinerary includes your factory, arrive to entertain or instruct you through the drama.

This is but hint of what the workers are doing for themselves in Soviet Russia. All who have anything of art or science or general knowledge or literature to give, are giving freely to the people and the people in turn support them in security. The doors are opened wide to the vast treasure house — the doors that once were slammed in the workers' face! The priceless gifts that the workers in bent backs have paintfully piled up, that the parasites have abused for the creation of a false and narrow culture, are now the heritage of all, to be used in the creation of a true and general culture.

Libraries, traveling on swift wheels to every village and hamlet in Soviet Russia. Books, books, books! brought to the doors of all! Traveling instructors, lecturers, professors and teachers giving courses in even the remotest parts, bringing knowledge to the workers far from the permanent centers of learning. Traveling picture galleries, theatres, concerts, touching the humblest in the land with the fairy-wand of Art. True Art, not that tawdry, cheap thing that parades in her name to corrupt the common taste in every commercial country in the world. Thus the masses, through their own government, are developing in themselves the highest possible conception of art, the keenest possible appreciation of true culture.

Art institutes endowed as never before by any government, in which the talented spirits among the masses receive the training they craved vainly for in the past; research laboratories open to all who show any real interest in using them; Universities no longer exclusively the province of the exploiter's son. The common school becoming the universal school, the college and university becoming the common school, the higher culture the general culture. Is it any wonder that Soviet Russia is spending more on education than any country in the world?

Industry, agriculture, yes. Bread, security, yes. But Roses, Roses, yes, a thousand times yes! Are we workers hungry for joy and beauty for art and culture? Today, Russia answers for us until the day when we shall answer for ourselves. The worker, starved through the centuries amidst the very plenty he created, is satisfying his hunger at last — in Russia. Having taken control of his own industrial and social destiny, he has in that same moment grasped with all of a creator's enthusiasm the tools of the old bourgeois culture with which he is already modelling for himself the art forms that will express the new culture — that of the Communist society, the Workers' Commonwealth.

Surrounded as she is by world-capital's armies, fighting for her very life on every front of her vast territory, Russia is still able, by virtue of working class rule to give to Art, Truth, Beauty a freedom they have not known and do not know in any other land, on the face of the earth. And we workers are invited, by every subtle blandishment, to join with our capitalist Governments in a war of extermination against our fellow workers of Russia.

We may not do the shooting ourselves, but we are no less guilty if their freedom is lost through the guns we make. Longshoremen load the guns on ships, railroad men bring them to the piers, sailors, workers too, carry them over seas, and soldiers, (also workers) receive them and use them to shoot down Bolshevist workers, (but what workers!) fighting in the front trenches of the world in the cause of the Social Revolution that will set the world's workers free! Yet despite this tragedy, than which there can be no greater in all history, the Russian worker, wounded, bleeding, half blinded with blood and tears, still marches erect, bearing aloft the standard upon one side of which is inscribed the appeal "Workers of the world, unite!" (This side faces outward to the fighting front). An on the other (facing in toward Soviet-Russia) the inscription "Art, Truth, Beauty!"

They are dying for us, and we are killing them for Capitalism! If the Russian workers and their culture are destroyed by us, we shall not only have played the Judas to our own Comrades, but we shall also by that same act bare our backs to the lash of exploitation for a period that Hope dare not contemplate. A lash that will be laid on with a more cruel hand than Master has ever laid on Slave before. And who shall then say that we are not receiving justice!

But this surely will not be! Everywhere the workers are awaking to consciousness. In Italy the workers forced their Capitalist Government to recall their troops from Russia. The transport workers refused to load the ships with goods or guns for use against Soviet Russia. In France and in England there is an awakening; here too, though less through, the protest is being made effective. There are workers everywhere who are refusing to destroy their own Hope of emancipation by destroying the freedom of the Russian Working Class. We are learning that if we rise to power, we rise by Russia, even as Capitalism has learned that it falls if Soviet Russia stands! The Associated Press and the Associated Powers may combine to lie about the Soviet-Government until they make old Ananias sound as truthful by comparison as a wireless message from Moscow. It will help them not one iota. If the Allies' workers stand by Russia, Russia stands — lied about or not. If Russia stands, Capitalism falls and the workers everywhere rise to power.

Stand by Russia, Workers of America! Stand by your own cause. The issue is joined; the fight is on. Unite, use your power. For Russia — for ourselves — For Bread and Roses! —

Haase Is Dead

BERLIN, Nov. 8.— As the result of three wounds received when he was shot by an Austrian Johann Voss, Hugo Haase, president of the Independent Socialist party, died yesterday after several operations had failed to alleviate his condition.

The shooting occurred October 8 as Haase was about to enter the Reichstag to deliver a speech charging the government with encouraging the retention of German trops in the Baltic and with fostering attacks upon radicals by "murder bureaus."

On October 27, Haase's right leg, which had been crushed by a bullet, was amputated. The three bullets lodged in the thigh, forearm and abdomen. Blood poisoning set in and could not be checked.

Haase, who had a record of indefatigable Socialist endeavor, succeded August Bebel as president of the German Social Democratic party, but broke with the party in 1915 on the question of voting war credits.

Entered Cabinet.

He believed it was necessary to refuse financial support to the government. After the fall of the imperial government he entered the first coalition Cabinet, where he opposed Dr. Solf.

He fought Minister of Defense Noske and the methods of the Noske guards in suppressing strikes and revolts. He declined to become Chancellor at a time when Germany was seeking a government willing to sign the peace treaty.

It is said that his assailant, Voss, was prompted by personal motives, because Haase was prosecuting him at the time for extortion.

Haase's position in the radical ranks is described as being the center of the Left. He was not only an opponent of Noske and Scheidemann, but also of Kautsky.

Was Friendly to Russia.

He was in strong sympathy with Soviet Russia, but opposed recognition of the Moscow government on the ground that such recognition would offer the Allies an excuse to invade Germany.

His acceptance of a position in the coalition Cabinet, which he is said to have regretted, was used to obtain support for the existing regime from his followers.

In his opposition to the Socialist-Democratic-Clerical government he did not hesitate to co-operate with the Spartacans.

The Independent Socialists, of which he was a leader, were credited with encouraging by underground means the discontent in the army and navy which resulted in the revolt of the German sailors in August, 1918.

Socialists in Military Prisons

[illegible] for medical treatment, and when I tried to go to my bed the captain in charge choked me and threw me to the ground.

"About half an hour later I was [illegible]ined and thrown into the latrine [illegible] where I remained about three [illegible]."

[illegible]don related how Majors Adler [illegible] [illegible]ett came to the hospital a [illegible] later and examined and questioned the prisoners. He said he had [illegible] following conversation with Major [illegible]:

"Why do you refuse to prepare [illegible] own meals?"

"Because I was taken away from [illegible] against my will, and it is up to the government to take care of [illegible] here. I want to be treated like a [illegible]. It is up to the authorities to [illegible] care of me or let me die."

[illegible]ver Chains—Steel Chains.

"Well, you are having good conditions here. You're not a prisoner, and there is no reason why you should not take care of yourself."

"Do you say I am not a prisoner? Does this mean I can go home whenever I want to?"

"Oh no. You have to stay around here, but you have the liberty of the camp."

"If you were to place silver chains on my hands instead of steel I would be chained all the same."

"What will you tell people when they ask you what you did during the war?"

"I will tell them I went to jail for democracy."

Brandon declared he now found out that a short time after his conversation with the major, his father received a letter from the War Department, in which he was described as an agitator. His theories on Socialism and his constant agitation, the letter stated, were the cause of he troubles.

One day, Brandon related, a company of 14 objectors, all branded as "radicals," were hurried out of their cells and forced to military marching. Joseph Kaplowitz, one of the objectors, who was tired and weary unable to march fast enough to keep up with the company, was thrown to the ground with a rifle and remained unconscious for a long time.

Because of this Brandon said, the 14 objectors went on a hunger strike as a protest, and were all thrown into a small cell. There, he said, a letter to the post commander, complaining of the treatment given to Kaplowitz, was drawn up and signed by every one of the 14 objectors, and because he handed the letter to a prison officer, Brandon continued, he was taken to solitary confinement.

Brandon related how Gen. Leonard Wood came to Fort Riley while Major Funston was interviewing the objectors, and spoke to Post Commander Colonel Waterman. The following evening, he charged, those who had been on hunger strikes were transferred to Camp Funston.

"Radicals" Transferred.

"I was included among those who were transferred" continued Brandon. "At first not one of us knew the reason for this, but later it became visible to us that all Socialists and those listed as 'radicals' were transferred, and that it was an attempt to subject us to cruelties again."

Brandon stated that he was not among the first to be transferred. He had been confined in the hospital with influenza, but a week later, although still ill, was also taken to Camp Funston. The sergeant who brought him there, he said, had the following conversation with the officer of the guard.

"He is a ringleader and agitator. Take good care of him."

"We know how to handle these fellows."

On November 27, 1918, Brandon was transferred to Fort Riley again, where he was court-martialed and sentenced to death. Practically every objector there was put into solitary confinement. A 13-day hunger strike was resorted to by the prisoners as a protest.

Driven Around Field.

While he was at Camp Funston, Brandon said, a 10-day strike was on. The officers refused to give them water on the eighth day, but the prisoners held out until the 10th, when they collapsed.

The method of treatment, Brandon charged, was issued by the War Department. He said officers often informed the prisoners that they were instructed to give them "[illegible]."

"If we did not want to walk when they ordered us they dragged us. They had no mercy on any of us," Brandon continued.

"One day, in a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] surrounded by a wild [illegible], we were driven around the field several times. Many people stood around the field grinned and shouted at us, and gave the guards commands to mistreat us which they obeyed.

"Food, cigars and other necessities were barred. Everything was thrown away instead of being returned to the senders, he charged.

The Black Sheep

as measured by the clock. You give him commodities which are the result of your efforts."

"What is a commodity?"

"A commodity is a product of labor that enters the market. It is produced to be sold. When you make something for your own personal use it is called a product. Now the thing that Karl Marx explained to the world is this: that the working class sells its labor power as a commodity to the capitalist class and gets from the capitalist class in return, a commodity called money with which to buy the necessities of life. The difference between slave labor and wage slavery is this, the slave is owned body and [illegible] by his master. The [illegible] [illegible] of the slave body and power at will, limited by the rulings of the humane society and his own economic considerations. The wage worker owns his body and can sell his labor power in the open market, for such price as he can get for it, in competition with his fellow laborers, all of whom must sell their energy, that is their labor power, in order to live. Slavery sells man, body and soul into bondage. Wage labor forces man into bondage in order to keep body and soul together. It is really a distinction without any great difference. What Marx did was to make us conscious of your position in society as propertyless wage slaves, dependent upon a market for our [illegible] energy."

"He made us conscious of our class position in society," added [illegible].

that altho during the past year, there h been instituted by the capitalist ruling clas of this boasted land of freedom a reign of terror against the workers paralleled only in Czarist Russia; and altho, in this desperate attempt of criminal capitalism to bolster up its falling ramparts, we have witnessed the death of free speech, free press and assembly for the workers and the rape of every Constitutional right heretofore believed an inalienable right of all free men and women;

and altho this annullment of Constitutional liberties has been brought about thru the connivance of armed mobs and the political tools of the capitalist class, in conjunction with the public press and other agencies of capitalism including the public school and and the church; and altho the workers' meetings have been broken up and prohibited, their halls raided, their property destroyed, their newspapers and printing plants wrecked, their editors jailed, their spokesmen mobbed;

and altho threats, intimidation, injunctions, police clubs, riot guns, in fact, the whole political and armed power of the State is now massed against the workers in its attem to throttle the revolt of the workers again inhuman exploitation–

LET US BE THANKFUL—

that in spite of all the criminal lawlessne of capitalism and its henchmen, the love o liberty still lives in the hearts of the world's workers; there are yet fearless men and women, who hearing the call of their oppressed class, step out from the ranks of the toilers, take their place in the steps of their fal len comrades, and with high purpose an courageous resolve take up the battle fo emancipation, bare the breast to the assas sain's bullet, offer the neck to the mob rope, enter the prison tombs.

PATRIOTIC HOUSEBREAKERS [illegible] CINCINNATI SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS.

By LOTTA BURKE.

[illegible] of terror was started in [illegible] Tuesday, November 18, [illegible]wing a meeting of the Robert [illegible] Post, of the American Legion, [illegible] Burnet House, A. N. Cooper, [illegible] to be an oversea fighter for democracy, incited a few other [illegible]ally insane creatures to march [illegible] Socialist Party Headquarters, to [illegible] an open attack upon the build-

[illegible] eye witnesses to the occurence (this eye witness is a member of American Legion, and has made [illegible]avit), that they arrived at the [illegible]quarters 1314 Vine Street, at 10:30 P. M. That before leaving the Burnet House at 3rd and Vine Cooper shouted [illegible] the meeting hall, "Who will go with [illegible] to get some I. W. W. literature; there will be a meeting there, and somebody will be there."

They entered the building by forming a pyramid reaching the awning [illegible] and opening a window. There were [illegible] lights turned on in the building, [illegible] the lights show in from the street. [illegible] burst open the door of the room. [illegible]ning down stairs they opened the [illegible]nt door, and let the crowd in. Then [illegible] proceeded upon their work of [illegible]molition. The American flag was [illegible]rn from the wall and carried away.

The International Associaition of Machinists No. 162, and Auto Mechanics Union No. 1042 have their headquarters in the same building. We are of the opinion that the purpose of the attack w.. to secure for the Metal Trades Association the membership file of the Machinists Union. The Machinists here are strongly organized, and actively engaged in fighting the Metal Trades.

The cowardice of those who made the attack is evident from the fact that they waited across the street until two comrades who were working in the headquarters, up to ten P. M. turned out the lights and went home. The message was then sent to the Burnet House, and the Cooper procession started gathering about two hundred people on the way up. The literature they secured was trown out the window into the wood block street and a fire started. (To start a fire on wood block street is a violation of a city ordinance.) About five men performed all the destructive work. Robert Marx, who was recently elected Superior Court Judge on the democratic ticket, by about 1500 majority, the only democrat elected to office in the recent election here, who won on his oversea reputation. for world democracy, was in the crowd. He is also a member of the American Legion.

[illegible] Dube, a teacher in the Hyde Park [illegible]lic school was also in the crowd, [illegible] member of the American Legion. [illegible] raiders failed at any time during [illegible] tack to rouse the sentiment of [illegible] lookers in their favor. A weak [illegible], to repeated efforts to raise [illegible] howl of approval, was all the crowd [illegible]ld give. On the contrary continu[illegible] expressions of disapproval were [illegible] by those present. Lieutenant [illegible]serschmidt with four policemen [illegible]ed calmly on. It is said that Lieute[illegible] Messerschmidt cautioned the mob [illegible] to break in the back door; for he [illegible]ld then have to arrest them. When [illegible]ed upon by chief of police Wm. [illegible]elan, to make an explanation of his [illegible]duct in the matter, he pleaded that [illegible] did not want to start bloodshed. [illegible]wds gathered at the front windows [illegible] day Wednesday, Wednesday eve., [illegible] all day Thursday. Papers placed in the window Wednesday morning, following the night of the raid, were eagerly read by hundreds of people. Upon an appeal from the policemen on the beat, acting under Lieutenant Messerschmidt, late Thursday afternoon we took the literature down.

This was done through sympathy for [illegible] policemen, who fear for their lives. [illegible] making the request the police[illegible], white with terror, tears in his [illegible], said, "we cannot be responsible [illegible] what will happen. Those who are [illegible]ing it, do not understand it." The [illegible] letter to President Wilson", [illegible]nds off Soviet Russia," and Cincin[illegible] News", were some of the litera[illegible] the American people cannot un[illegible]stand according to Lieutenant Messchmidt.

The officials of the city and the [illegible], were forced to admit there was [illegible] a particle of cause for the raid. [illegible]er openly defies them to make an [illegible]t. All of which shows that the [illegible]rican Legion has the police force [illegible]ed. Other raids are threatened in [illegible]pitalist press.Lawyers of the city [illegible] been instructed not to take the [illegible] in the courts. The Machinists [illegible] is determined to bring the guilty [illegible] into public disfavor. There will be no quitting now. As promoters of law and order we are on the job.At our regular meeting Thursday eve. money came rolling in from many organizations to assist us in our legal battle to suppress the mob spirit of the American Legion.

Other organizations, who are bitterly opposed to Socialist principles, contributed to a fund to keep the good name of our old country town clean of mob violence. A prominent member of the Friends of Irish Freedom voiced the sentiment of all decent people when he said, "I contribute, because if they are permitted to do this to you today they will do it to us tomorrow." We assume our new duty cheerfully. We will protect the policemen of Cincinnati from the mob, until they organize to protect themselves.

A cordial invitation is extended to the decent soldiers and sailors in the Robert Bentley Post, to visit with us at our headquarters, 1314 Vine St., where an unlimited supply of literature is always obtainable. We also inform them if they notify us of their coming, we will serve them with good coffe and doughnuts.

We dislike very much to impose upon them the hardship of being classed with housebreakers. But, we advise the American Legion to cut out mob activities directed against us. If it comes to self defense we are 100 per cent prepared.

Late Thursday, Hayes and McShane, city detectives, informed us we could have our flag. It was down at the American Legion headquarters. The Machinists flag taken at the same time was returned Thursday by chief of detectives Love. The service flag of the Machinists Union was probably burned.

Our case is in the hands of Jos. Sharts of Dayton.

o

Albert Rhys Williams on Bolshevism.

Standing room was at a premium in North church. St. Clair & 72nd St. Cleveland, a week ago last Sunday night when A. R. Williams, noted authority on Russia who spent 20 months there during the revolution, described the Russia Soviet system of government and afterward answered questions for an hour.

He began by distinguishing between the soviet system and communism, which exist side by side; described the revolution, and declared 98 per cent. of the Russian people are fully in sympathy with the soviets and that the allied expeditions against the soviet government will fail.

"Russia today is tattered and weary," Mr. Williams said, "but in spite of the blockade her armies drive forward with irresistible spirit because they have the hearts of the people behind them. The Bolsheviki destroyed the morale of the German troops and to them should go as much credit for winning the war as to the British army. Had the Bolsheviki not taken over the government, Russia would have been swept into disorder and anarchy.

Mr. Williams has written numerous pamphlets, his latest work is a larger work entitled "Lenine, the Man and His Work".

A paraphrase of questions and answers at the close of the meeting follow:

Q.—Are there any in Russia more radical than the Bolsheviki?

A.—Lenine is a member of the "right." There are the left social revolutionist and the anarchists who oppose the Bolsheviki on the one side, and the Mensheviki on the other side.

Q.—Why is Russia more free than the United States?

A.—In America we have the dictatorship of the bourgeois, in Russia they have a dictatorship of the proletariat. But the proletariat is 98 per cent.

Q.—Prohibition in Russia?

A.—Bolsheviki are dry. Denekine and other allied favorites are wet.

Q.—Is it true that the allies have used conterfeit money in Russia?

A.—That is the least of their crimes.

Q.—Where can we get the facts on Russia today?

A.—The Bullitt and Steffen report to the American government is reliable and can be had from any book store.

Q.—Does the government know these things about Russia?

A.—My testimony was taken by Col. House and President Wilson got some of it. When America embarked on the Russian expedition, President Wilson knew better.

A CRANE MAN[illegible]

ANISE, in Seattle Union Record.

"What's the use," he said,
"OF CARING
About the WORK you do?
And yet somehow
You can't HELP caring.
I guess all men
Are artists, more or less,
And put a little piece
Of THEMSELVES
Into the work of their hands.
I work in the shipyard
Running a CRANE,
And those CONTROLS
RESPOND SO to my skill
I can almost write my name
With the swinging hooks.
I'd like to manage a crane
For the rest of my life.
It picks such big things up
So daintily
it makes me feel like one
Of those old GIANTS
Or those ANCIENT GODS.
And then
The day's work closes
And I go home
Remembering suddely
That ANY MORNING
I may come down to work
And find a little SIGN:
'CLOSED DOWN'!
And then I know I am NOT
MAN, the giant
Master of Machinery;
But only a little COG
In the machine;
That SOMEBODY up above
Who has the MONEY
Just moves about
According to his whim.
HE doesn't even know
That I'M ALIVE,
And all the thoughts and dreams
Of a thousand men
Are NOTHING to him.
He doesn't deign to tell us
What he PLANS,
Whether it be tomorrow
Or next year
That he will choose
To chuck us out to hell
With a careless stroke
Of his pen!
So what's the use of caring
About your work?
It just HURTS MORE
When you wake up and find
That ALL the things you made
And put YOUR SOUL in BELONG
To some one else,
And even the right
To do your work tomorrow
Is only yours
At the whim of another man!
Oh, they buy a man's muscle
With MONEY
But the piece of HIMSELF
That man puts in his work
Can NEVER be paid for Except by a common SHARE
In controlling his job
And in owning the fruits
Of his CREATION!"

[illegible]

The representative of the [illegible] L. C. A. K. Martens, in a letter to the Hon. [illegible] has formally offered to provide [illegible] from the United States to Russia for all [illegible] who desire to leave America or whose presence in the United States is undesirable to the government of the United States.

Protesting against the "unwarranted and cruel treatment" to which many Russian citizens in the United States are subjected "by Federal and state officers, as well as by violent mobs acting without any authority," Martens proposes that the Soviet government be permitted to return these citizens to Soviet Russia. The Bureau of the Soviet government in New York has received thousands of applications from Russian citizens whose lives have been unbearable by the treatment to which they are subjected in the United States and who desire to return to their homes.

Calling attention to the reports in the press that it is proposed to deport certain Russians to parts of Russia under control of enemies of the Soviet republic, Martens points out that such deportation would mean certain death and would constitute a flagrant breach of all principles of international law.

Russians Only Too Glad to Leave.

"It is quite unnecessary," says Martens' letter, "for the government of the United States to take the trouble of deporting citizens of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic. They are only too anxious to leave... I therefore respectfully suggest that the United States government could be easily relieved of the presence of unwelcome Russian citizens if these citizens of Russia, whose lives are becoming unbearable in the United States, were premitted to leave. I desire to assure you, sir, that the government I have the honor to represent is ready and willing to provide means of transportation from the United States to Soviet Russia for every Russian citizen in this country who desires to return home, or whose presence in this country is undesirable to the government of the United States."

Martens' letter, in full, is as follows

In behalf of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic I have the honor to call your attention to the folowing facts:

Many citizens of that republic residing in the United States are at this time subjected to unwarranted persecution and cruel treatment by Federal and state officers, as well as by violent mobs acting without any authority. The government of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic has accorded American citizens in Soviet Russia civil and considerate treatment even in cases where active hostility on the part of such American citizens toward the government of Soviet Russia has been proven beyond all doubt.

Only in some exceptinal cases, where offenses of a particularly grave nature against the Russian government had been committed by American citizens, were they prosecuted by officers of the law.

Russia Holds No U. S. Prisoners.

American soldiers taken prisoners in the Archangel district, which was invaded by American troops without a declaration of war, have been treated in Soviet Russia with especial consideration, and were unconditionally released as soon as it was practicable to send them home, so that there remains today no American prisoners of war in Russia. Property of American citizens who have complied with the laws of the country has not been interfered with, and wherever any complications have arisen in this respect the government of Soviet Russia has been, and is, ready to adjust matters so as to safeguard the rights and the interests of American citizens.

This attitude has been maintained by the Soviet government toward the United states and its citizens resident and sojourning in Russia, notwithstanding the fact that Soviet Russia, against its will, finds itself in a state of war imposed from without and in the midst of a revolutionary struggle a struggle which naturally makes the conditions in the country abnormally critical. Yet, contrary to the comity of nations, citizens of Soviet Russia in the United States have in effect been denied the protection of the law.

Russians Persecuted Here.

The lot of thousands of Russians in the United States today is exceedingly uhappy, through no fault of their own. Through daily abuse in the press and the prejudice created by a virulent campaign of misrepresentation, their Russian citizenship has become a bar to employment and advancement.

They are indiscriminately accused in the most sweeping terms by government officials of criminal and subver- [illegible] intents against the government of the United States, of which they are quite innocent.

They have been arrested without warrant and subject to oppressive treatment, against which they have no adequate protection, being citizens of a country whose government is not recognized by the government of the United States.

Within the past few days great numbers of Russian citizens in the City of New York and elsewhere have been arrested and have suffered the most brutal physical violence at the hands of public officials. Their homes and the places where they associate were invaded by public officers and arrests have been made on suspicioun of alleged unlawful activities. No effort, however, had been made by the police first to ascertain the probable guilt of the Russian citizens who were to be arrested.

So, for instance, in the City of New York alone, according to press reports, over 1,000 persons were recently arrested, among them many citizens of Soviet Russia, and although these arrests were made in a manner which caused much suffering and physical injury to these Russian citizens, and although property belonging to them was wantonly destroyed during these raids, it developed that very few of them could be held for further investigation and criminal prosecution.

In behalf of the government of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic I deem it my duty to protest against such acts.

A number of affidavits bearing evidence to the fact that the lives and liberties of Russian citizens have been threatened without reasonable ground will be submitted to the State Department in a few days.

According to reports in the daily press, a number of citizens of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic are being held in custody by United States immigration officers, and it is proposed to deport them to parts of Russia which are under the control of enemies of the Soviet republic. Having no means to ascertain the truth of such reports, I still deem it my duty to call your attention to the fact that such deportation would mean certain death to these Russian citizens and would constitude a most flagrant breach of all principles of international law.

Moreover it is quite unnecessary for the government of the United States to take the trouble of deporting citizens of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic.

Life Here Unendurable.

My office has received thousands of applications from Russian citizens who desire to return to their homes. They had been driven by the political, economic and religious oppression of the Czar's government t oseek refuge in the United States which they believed to be a heaven for the oppressed of all nations.

They had hoped to make their homes here and to become useful members of the community. Now, however, that they are daily insulted in the press and by public officials, too, with intimations that their presence is not wanted in this country, they are only too anxious to leave. But they are prevented from leaving America by the authorities of the United States, who have made it practically impossible for citizens of the Soviet republic to receive the requisite papers without which they cannot secure transporta-
I therefore respectfully suggest that

Itherefore respectfully suggest that the United States government could be easily relieved of the presence of unwelcome Russian citizens, if these citizens of Russia whose lives are becoming unbearable in the United States were permitted to depart. I desire to assure you, sir, that the government I have the honor to represent is ready and willing to provide means of transportation from the United States to Soviet Russia, for every Russian citizen in this country who desires to return home, or whose presence in this country is undesirable to the government of the United States.

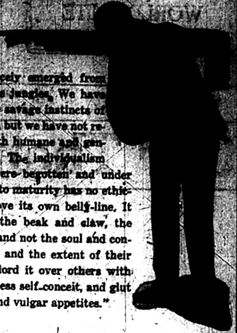
DEBS SAYS TO YOU



"We have scarcely emerged from the caves of the jungles. We have lost some of the savage instincts of our antecedents, but we have not replaced them with humane and generous impulses. The individualism in which we were begotten and under which we grew to maturity has no ethical standard above its own belly-line. It has developed the beak and claw, the fang and hoof, and not the soul and conscience of men; and the extent of their ambition is to lord it over others with arrogant, heartless self-conceit, and glut their own low and vulgar appetites."

TAFT STANDS ALONE IN CONDEMNATION OF DEBS.

We take the following from the editoriol page of the Dallas (Texas) Democrat of a recent issue. Is it not especially significant that of two hundred men in public repute but one, Wm. Howard Taft, stands alone in condemnation of Debs and attempts to justify the life time sentence imposed upon him by the ruling class of the coutry thru its courts?

T. B. Williams, president of the North Texas Manufacturing Company, of McKinney, has been writing letters to prominent men throughout the country, requesting them to use their influence with President Wilson to have him pardon Eugene V. Debs out of the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, where he is serving a 10-year Federal court sentence, because of speeches made against war policies of the government while this country was at war with Germany. Debs spoke as a Socialist. He had three times been the candidate of that party for President of the United States. In one election he polled approximately 2,000,000 votes. Debs has never been what could be classed as a violent-force disturber. He is much of an idealist; an earnest, sympathetic character. He believes in strikes to win what he regards as the rights of the working masses, but he is not an inciter to violence. He was once—about twenty years ago—sent to prison for violating a Federal Court injunction, while the late George M. Pullman, admittedly violated the same injunction, from the other side of the strike controversy, was permitted by the same court to enjoy his liberty and went on a visit to Europe, while Debs stayed in prison.

Mr. Williams wrote a letter to Ex-President Taft, urging him to intercede for Debs. Mr. Taft wrote Mr. Williams a reply. Mr. Williams has furnished The Dallas Democrat with a copy of the letter, with a request that I publish it. Here it is:

> New Haven, Conn., Oct. 29, 1919.—My Dear Sir: I have your letter in respect to Eugene V. Debs. I don't sympathize with you in your view of Mr. Debs. His is a most pernicious influence in the community. He did advise treason in seeking to paralyze the arm of the Government when it was needed to defend this country in her hour of peril; and not for the purpose of vengeance, but for the purpose of deterring other dangerous fools like him, a proper punishment had to be inflicted. I have no doubt that whenever the object of the punishment is obtained, the Executive will discharge his duty and exercise such clemency as may be proper.
> Sincerely yours,
>
> (Signed) WM. H. TAFT.
> Mr. T. B. Williams, President North Texas Manufacturing Co., McKinney, Texas.

In commenting on Mr. Taft's letter, Mr. Williams states that he has written to two hundred prominent Democrats and Republicans in behalf of Debs, and concludes as follows:

> Taft stands alone in the replies I have received. I was never so agreeably surprised as when the letters began to pour in, expressing such strong demand for the release of Debs coming from Democrats and Republicans.

Politically, I have no sympathy with Debs. Nothing in Socialism appeals to me affirmatively. Socialistic government in this country would be a calamity. But I am free to declare that my sympathies are all with Debs in the matter of his imprisonment. He ought never, in my opinion, to have been sent to prison, in the light of all circumstances. His imprisonment was not necessary for the public welfare, because he is not an advocate of fire-brand violence. He is sympathetically and altruistically opposed to war and uncompromisingly committed to free speech. His imprisonment has placed him in the attitude of a martyr, in the minds of many dissatisfied elements in this country. It has not had a tendency for tranquillity, but, on the contrary, has stimulated the industrial unrest that is country-wide and dangerous.

The speech for which Debs was sent to prison could not, by any stretch of consistency, be characterized as treasonable. He felt that the Espionage Act, passed by the American Congress, in some of its provisions invaded and annulled the rights of the citizen. He desired to test the Act in the courts and compel the Supreme Court of the United States to face the issue with a decision as to its constitutionality. Proceedings blocked him from his plan and he did [illegible] peal to the Supreme Court; but declared he wou[illegible] "app[illegible] higher court of public opinion" and went to prison

THE COMMUNITY CHEST.

Camouflage is becoming a national trait, or is it that we merely recognize it when we see it and give it a name which the World War left us as an addition to our language? "Community Chest" sounds much nicer than "Charity Chest". The idea of charity, you know, is becoming unpopular. It doesn't sound just right any more. While to be charitable used to be considered one of the virtues, one which our "most respectable" people could and did readily assume, it has of late fallen into bad repute. It is said that charity debases both the giver and the receiver. Besides it is now largely looked upon as means of camouflage for justice. Its upopularity, especially with the recipients is growing. They resent it. They prefer just plain every day justice and upon that basis deem themselves quite able to shift for themselves without the doles of debasing charity.

Just to what extent this idea is becoming fixed in the mind of the workers, is seen in the action taken by theCleveland Central Labor Council when the matter of contributing to Cleveland's Community Chest came before that body. The C. L. C. contributed $10.00 to the Chest—and $100.00 to the striking steel workers. Another union affiliated with the printing trades turned the Chest down flat and donated $25.00 to the steel workers.

The city of Cleveland is raising a charity, no, we mean community fund of $3,425.000 which is expected to last a whole year and to administer to the needs of all the various institutions of the city which carry on their work thru money subscribed by free donations. Everybody is expected to give to this fund—exempting of course, the recipients.

The promoters have learned the value of mass action—and camoflage. Mass action in this case is arroused by a coalition of all public educational and informative forces of the city. Newspapers, churches, associations of all varieties, are engaged in one great enterprise, to put the proposition over by sheer force of cumulative publicity. The camouflage consists in arrousing a "community" spirit by a substitution of "community" for "charity" and by the implied responsibility of all elements of the city in the welfare of the city's unfortunates.

But let us see if all elements of the city are responsible for the necessity of raising three and a half million dollars for the purpose of charity in the great industrial city of Cleveland? A poster used in this campaign is the most eloquent evidence we have to offer as proof of our contention that the "Community Chest" is a substitute for justice and an insult to the people whom it is calculated to benefit. Standing in the foreground of the poster, supported by her two crutches is the figure of little Mary Lamb, one of the unfortunate cripples of the city. Upon her face is a pathetic smile—a very appealing picture we assure you. A picture that appeals to one's sympathies, surely, and we hope also to ones responsibilities as a citizen and also to ones powers of analysis.

So much for the sympathetic appeal. Behind Mary, in the picture, is the Cuyahoga Valley, the manufacturing district of Cleveland, with its forest of smokestacks, belching their black smoke into the heavens. This, we presume is expected to arouse the "community" spirit, the local patriotism of the inhabitants. Some how or other, we are unable to grow very enthusiastic about those smoke stacks. Perhaps its because we have fed furnaces and watched years of our life go up in smoke as it were, while capitalists grew rich from our labors. Besides, the smokestacks do not belong to any who WORK there. They do not belong to the community, but to the exploiters of the community. We recall that for the most part these same steel mills, furnaces and rolling mills have for these last two months been idle, they did not pay the workers wages enough to enable them to care for their families—their little Marys and Tommies, and the hours were so long that not sufficient recreation was possible for them to live decent, human lives. They struck for justice. But Gary and his fellow profiteers have said "no".

The poster is emblematic of capitalism. The worker is exploited in the factory, the mill and the mine of the greater part of the wealth he creates. A vast army of propertyless workers is created by the conditions which permit of no accumulation of property by the workers. He is paid enough to keep himself in working order, and to replace upon the labor market another generation of slaves, very often crippled, either mentally or physically, and that is all. He strikes and the powers of government back up the employers associations.

Capitalism exists for the benefit of the few. Society at large, and the working class in particular, which make up the greater number of the world's population, are not beneficiaries under it. They are its slaves, its charity receivers, its cripples, its defectives. For them it gives no hope, no ray of light from it reaches into their broken lives. Between the workers and a decent human life and a world filled with joy and happiness, it stands menacingly against any advance by the workers toward a better and truer life.

And then it attempts to cast a mantle of charity over its crimes of robbery, debauchery and exploitation.

THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW.

The spectre of Bolshevism at home has risen to haunt the dreams of the Allies in their plans for the rehabilitation of capitalism in Russia thru support of the Kolchak-Denikin crowd of reactionaries. "Hands off Russia", which has been the rallying cry of millions of class-conscious workers of every civilized country, is now to be the policy of France and England, according to statements made by Lloyd George in the House of Commons last week.

Lloyd George sees national bankruptcy followed by Bolshevism in England unless a speedy retreat is made of British troops from Russia and a strict policy of "hands off" followed in future. Admitting that the Allies had been marching in a fog since intervention in Russia took place, Lloyd George now sees a rift in the clouds and standing upright, menneceingly in that opening is the apparition of workers' control of life and government.

That the forces of the Allies in conjunction with the reactionaries have met with sore disappointment in their adventures of conquest upon the Soviet Republic, is strikingly illustrated by George's citation of the fact that no invasion of Russia ever succeded. Doubtless Napoleon's historical "retreat from Moscow" is in the mind of the Premier when he explains the [illegible] of intervention and its dire consequences.

Intervention in Russia has failed to [illegible]. The Soviet government has been welded into a powerful instrument for defense [illegible] as an agency of the people in their struggle upward from slavery. Kolchak and Denikin have retreated to the end of their tethers. Kolchak's seat of government, Omsk, has fallen to the Bolsheviks. They are done for. [illegible] Allied munitions and food have enabled them to hold out this long against the Soviet power. This support withdrawn, their speedy annihilation will follow.

Every civilized nation is beset with terrific problems of [illegible]. The workers are restless, on the verge of revolt, demanding a larger share in determining the conditions of their lives. All governmental activities which ignore these demands are looked upon as evidence of the enmity of the government toward the workers. The end of Allied intervention in Russia is substantial evidence, not only of the impossibility of conquering the Soviet government, but is proof of the fear of working-class uprising at home. To the workers of the world goes the credit for the withdrawal of Allied aid to Russian reactionaries.

TWO RESOLUTIONS.

WORCHESTER, MASS., RESOLUTION.

WHEREAS, the rank and file of both the Communist arty and the Communist Labor Party accepted and ndorsed the principles of Revolutionary Socialism laid down by the 3rd Moscow Communist Internationale, and

WHEREAS, the great industrial strikes and other Militant working class manifestations which are now taking place thruout the contry are being sorely neglected because of our petty differences, and

WHEREAS, it is the duty of all class-conscious revolutionary workers to unite into one homogeneous body to quicken and to crystalize this revolting spirit of the working class, and

WHEREAS, it now gives aid and comfort to the Imperialists of America to see us divided into separate parties, quarreling among ourselves like petty politicians, and

WHEREAS, we communist comrades recognize that the present is the period of the dissolution and collapse of world capitalism.

Be it therefore RESOLVED

That the membership (the rank and file) of both the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party of Local Worcester, Mass., hereby demand that the central executive committee of the Communist Party and the National Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party meet on or before Dec. 15, 1919, in Chicago or any other place agreed upon, except New York, N. Y., or Detroit, Mich.

1st.—For informal discussion of basis for a formal Unity conference and a mode of procedure for such a conference.

2nd.—If a basis is then agreed upon, to then and there hold a Unity Conference.

Be it further RESOLVED:

That in the event that the above resolution shall not immediately be acted upon by the officals of both parties, we, the membership of both the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party local of Worcester, Mass., shall wihout hesitation issue a joint call for a Unity Conference of the rank and file of both Parties and will ride over the so-called leaders.

In all sincerity we await your immediate and favorable answer and remain

For a United Communist Movement
Local Worcester, Mass., Communist Labor Party, Local Worcester, Mass., Communist Party.

NEFFS, OHIO.
Resolution.

COMRADES:

At a meeting held Nov. the 6th, 1919, by the english branch (of the former old S. Party) at Neffs, Ohio, the members decided to send the following Resolution to both Communist Parties.

WHEREAS, the existence of two communist parties, both standing upon the platform of the 3RD INTERNATIONAL, organized at MOSCOW, is a crime and only tends to split the revolutionary forces of the American proletariat, and

WHEREAS, there is no difference in principle nor yet in tactics between the platform and program of the Communist Party and that of the COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY, and

WHEREAS, the chief cause for launching two communist parties appears to rest in the shallow personal activities and mutual hatred between socalled laders of the communist movement of America, and

WHEREAS, a division of communist forces leads to useless expense of means, all of which are contributed by rank and file, and in baseless internal strife between communists, thereby weakening the propaganda among the working class as well as disorganizing the communist forces in America, all of which will reflect badly upon the INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST movement, and

WHEREAS, the Communist Labor Party has declared its readiness to at any time unite with the communist party on the basis of equality,

THEREFORE, taking all this into consideration, be it resolved by the English branch of Neffs, at a meeting assembled, that we demand immediate unification of the Communist Party with the COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY.

ABOUT OUR CHANGE OF NAME.

Beginning with this issue the Ohio Socialist will appear under the name "The Toiler". This action is in obedience to the instructions of the State Executive Committee issued at the meeting Nov. 10th.

The change is made in conformity with the recent change in Party orgnanization and affiliation. We hope that the confidence which has been reposed by the comrades in The Ohio Socialist will be continued in The Toiler. We shall attempt to keep up the high standard which has made our state paper nationally recognized as one of the foremost socialist papers of the nation.

Subscription cards—and blanks addressed to The Ohio Socialist will be honored the change of name making no difference in this respect.

JUST A WORD.

Printing costs have risen. This weeks issue and all future ones as far as we can calculate will cost us $35.00 more than formerly. This means a big increase in costs in a year. But you can help meet it by gettin gsubscriptions, selling sub cards, agitating in your Local for more support for your own paper. Do it, don't wait for us to holler for help. Just get a sub blank and go after the workers for subscriptions. Do your part, we will try to do ours.

[illegible]

[illegible] Local at Dayton since the old Local seems to desire to remain on the fence for a while. Locals Coshocton and Urichsville affiliate.

The only thing a seat on the fence ever developed was a sore spot. Watch out you laggard Locals that you don't get one.

Herbert Vogt, socialis candidate for Mayor of Massillon, was elected by a plurality of 102 over the Republican candidate.

"Pulpit to plead cause of chest", reads a headline in the daily press. "Chest" seems to have been substituted for Christ in the pulpit.

Remember, for a $5.00 order of subscription cards, you get a free copy of "Lenin, the Man and His Work". Better send your order in now and make yourself a present.

Twenty one dollars for subscriptions was received from comrade Chas. Baker last week. Comrade Baker has been busy among the miners of Kansas and as usual, is getting good results and holding rousing meetings.

Three yearly subs were received from Nenana Alaska a few days ago. We expect a moderation in the temperature there from now on.

Comrade R. Weinghaus of Newport, Ky., not only boosts the sub list with an addition of four new names but donates a dollar to the press fund as well.

"Yours for a red world" signs a comrade from Huntington, W. Va. And he helps to make it do with six yearly subs.

How about your renewal, comrade. Have you filled out your yellow slip yet? Printing costs are high now days—and they have to be paid. And while you are renewing your sub why not give a little boost by writing in a friend's name for a three or six month's trial? Try it.

Seven new subs from comrade Ben Piggott indicates he's on the job for the emancipation of the worker.

A socialist in action is worth a dozen inactive ones. Just how you are rated, comrade?

And also, and paralleing, a distributor of literature is worth two dozen hole-in-the-corner philosophers. And to which category do you belong?

Comrade A. B. Hollenbaugh of Fostoria, O., remits $2.50 for new subs. He's a booster.

[illegible] LABOR PARTY BE[illegible] ACTIVE ORGANIZATION WORK.

Three Organizers in the field [illegible] things rolling for a big membership for C. L. P. in Ohio.

As you read this, three organizers are hard at work in Ohio organizing new Locals, lining up the old ones for more active and vigorous work, getting subs and selling literature. Following the instructions of the State Executive Committee given at the last meeting held Nov. 10th, the State Office last week started a vigorous campaign for a greater development of the Communist Labor Party in Ohio. Three organizers, Herbert Knecht, Carl Ulrich and J. H. Loucks are now in different parts of the state, visiting locals, Labor Unions and the members in the interest of the Party's welfare and the freedom of political prisoners.

More comrades will be placed in the field as soon as possible. While meetings in some parts the state [illegible] of the [illegible] the White Terror instigated by [illegible] that meetings are [illegible] necessary for the [illegible] of our movement.

Such reports as have reached [illegible] office since our organizers started [illegible] are very encourageing. We look forward to a great growth of our movement in Ohio during the next few months. Comrades are requested to render all assistance possible to our field workers. Help them in their work, help them organize meetings whether large or small, give them a comradely hand when you meet them. Buy their literature, if your Local has gone to smash, give them a hand in reviving it.

Back up the State Office and our organizers. Show that you are in the fight to win.

Our list at St. Louis, Mo., continues to grow. Reason, there's two or three live wires who know the value of good propaganda. Comrade E. Schwarz is one of them as his list of three shows.

Continuously our sub list grows in the number of new towns added to it. One of the latest is Barre Vt. Comrade F. O. Andereon of that city is responsible.

Get it now—"Lenin, the Man and His Work", by Albert Rhys Williams. It costs $1.35, or will be sent free to you for an order of subscription cards amounting to $5.00.

Five new yearlies comes from comrade Wm. Rapp of Portsmouth, O. Some comrades just naturally "keep at it", don't they?

Yearly subs are picking up and they seem to run along the line of five in a bunch. Here's comrade R. L. Thompson, of Charleston, W. Va., with that quantity on his order.

Comrade Anton Soukup of Neffs, is constantly on the job. Not a week passes the we do not see his name on the list of sub getters.

We are glad to notice comrade Horace Shank of Hamilton on the active list again. A list of four yearlies attests his able bodiness in the revolutionary ranks.

HENNACY ELECTED HONORARY PRESIDENT.

Permission was obtained from President Thompson to reorganize the Columbus chapter of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, October 17th. I was instructed to notify you that comrade Ammon A. Hennacy was elected Honorary President for life. We are arranging for the national headquarters to send us some of their speakers, and are also urging the professors to take part in our program.

Comrade Hennacy is now serving the last weeks of a two years sentence for distribution of anti-war literature.

MILDRED VERMILLION.

REMEMBER OUR PRISONEHS.

There is a large group of our radical comrades, political prisoners, incarcerated in the Federal Prison at Atlanta, Georgia. Eugene V. Debs is there, John Randolph, Walther Hirshberg, Nicholas M. Zogg, and a host of others.

These political prisoners will be allowed to receive gifts from their friends and comrades between December 10th and December 25th. They will be allowed to receive canned food, fruits, cigars, tobacco, and, now that the cold weather is coming on, sweaters and warm underclothing.

I shall appreciate it if you will be kind enough to bring this to the attention of your readers, and either have them send their donations to you, or, if you prefer, have them sent directly to me at the address below.

I shall be glad to purchase and deliver these things to our comrades. I see them frequently and learn of their needs. They will appreciate the friendship of all fellow comrades and whatever kindness is extended to them.

Do not forget that Christmas comes but once a year and that these prisoners go through a great deal of suffering and that we must do all we can to minimize it.

Again I thank you for whatever publicity you may give this matter.

Yours in comradeship,
SAMUEL CASTLETON,
312 Healey Bldg. Atlanta, Ga.

D SYSTEM HAS DIED IN EUROPE, SAYS WANHOPE.

Joshua Wanhope, former associate editor of The Call, is back from Europe.

When he left The Call to take his berth again upon a vessel, he parted with these words:

"The western front is nothing more than a large Socialist soap-box."

Yesterday, with a year gone since the armistice terms were thrust upon the defeated Central Powers, he reiterated that same thought, and brought with him from his visits to England, France, Italy, Spain, Holland, Scandinavia and other countries which have been a panoramic view of conditions that is a vindication of his own prophecy.

"Socialists", he said, "have always predicted that imperial capitalism must breed war. War came; we were horrified by the fulfillment of our predictions, and yet this war has brought an end to the system which we have continually warred against. Europe today is gone, and the old system can never come back.

"Frank Vanderlip came from there and threy up the sponge. He told them the game was up, and they won't believe him. Well, he's dead right. It is up.

"There is no peace today in Europe. There will be none. The world is not going to sink back into a rut again, and the process of erecting governments is to be in the hands of the working class."

Wanhope was asked for his interpretation of the recent French election and the municipal election which the British laborites won recently.

"In Position of Hunter."

"The French," he said, "are in the position of a lion hunter. For years they have lived under the terror of the brute next door. Clemenceau brought them out of it, but they don't know yet whether the beast was killed.

"They are supporting Clemenceau, and probably will for another year or so as a hunter would put two or three more shots in the jungle beast to make sure of its death.

"That's all there is to the French election and that is the sole reason why the Socialists did not again. The terror still exists for those people as it would for any other nation on whose doorstep the blood of their people for four years had been spilled.

"With the British it is different. England has been further removed from the terror of Germany. France stood between her and the actual horror of the war, and in England today, there is going on a process of coalition among the great trade unions which will mean working-class rule for the British.

"And to make that all the more certain, Englad today has her women standing solidly with the men. These municipal elections are a pretty far barometer of the trend in England. I attended meetings held by the candidates and the whole burden of the British working class was the workers' control of industry.

"In England today the Syndicalists, the trades unionists and the Socialists are all getting together and they will control the government. The workers have won every strike they have called despite newspaper reports to the contrary and this talk of compromise. Today the British workmen control their government and they are, for the first time in their history, realizing that they have the power."

Speaking of the newspaper reports, he laughed as he told of the fraudulent news carried throughout Europe by wireless. He said that on his ship they had received messages from the United States to the effect that Woodrow Wilson had been shot by anarchists, but that he was recovering.

It is possible, Wanhope feels, that the anarchist bullet was merely confused with the bombardment of the President by his former friends on liberal publications.

"Wilson the Same as Ever."

"Wilson," Wanhope continued, "is the same as he ever was. If you think he wasn't an idealist, you are mistaken. He came to Europe with his 14 points and ran against foxes like Lloyd George and Clemenceau, who allowed him the center of the stage for about eight months while he idealized the war and strenghtened the hands of the concealed diplomats.

"When the Allied cause was given its blazing and lustrous hue by Mr. Wilson, these other devils just pushed him aside and with him his 14 points. They all used his 14 points to further their own ends, even the Germans, who demanded their peace on them. Wilson was just a baby in the hands of practical men who knew their game."

Wanhope disregards the attempts of the Allies to crush the Soviet government and it is his opinion that the European statesmen are begining to [illegible] aware of their impotency.

"Lloyd George knows and has said so," Wanhope went on. "Russia is too vast for them and they'll come a cropper if they attempt to go into the country. Besides that, the Birtish are not going to put on khaki again to fight Russia, or to settle the Fiume or Dalmatian question or anything else.

"The Britisher is sitting tight. He doesn't give a damn and knows less than he cares about the Balkans. Russia can't be conquered by alien forces and whether the Bolsheviki stand or not, it won't be outsiders who will settle that question but the Russians themselves."

Wanhope, who has but recently been in Italy, said the church party, which for the first time since 1870 has taken a hand in politics, was probably badly defeated.

"They have lost out in Italy. Few of the people are really religious, whether there or anywhere alse, and the vote of the clerical party will show just how strongly the church does stand. I have been in their cathedrals, in those of Belgium and France, and I almost always found them practically empty with a priest talking to a handful in the great churches. This talk of a religious revival as a result of the war is sheer nonsense."

While Wanhope was speaking a revised return of the Italian elections showed that the church party had elected about 39 deputies out of about 500.

IN MEMORIUM.

Comrade Jennie Potter Boehm, a well-known Socialist speaker and agitator, died at her home in Conneaut, Ohio on Nov. 7th. from acut pyhorrea and a complication of other diseases.

Comrade Boehm was a well-known socialist of the more radical school, and her services to the movement will be appreciated by a large circle of friends and acquaintances among whom are many of the best known writers and speakers on the socialist rostrum.

Comrade Boehm was well qualified for the role of an educator on socialist doctrine. She was a member of the Lake Erie College Alumne class of 1899, and in 1905 took a course in socialism at the Mills School in Kansas City under Robt. Lamont and Geo. R. Kirkpatrick. Here she made the acquaintance of Kate Richards Ohare, Tom Lewis, Martha Beigler, and a host of socialist speakers who have since become famous as socialist educators, all of whom paid tribute to her exceptionally bright mind and her keen analysis of currant political events from a socialist viewpoint.

In 1907 Comrade Boehm attended the Rand School in New York City, and was assigned to many speaking engagements in the City and nearby towns. Her many friends here will learn of her untimely death with keen regret. While in New York she was married to Max Boehm and shortly thereafter the two removed to her home city in Conneaut, Ohio.

Comrade Boehm leaves to mourn her a six years old son her husband and wide circle of friends, thruout the states.

AN INDICTMENT OF CAPITALISM

WHAT, WHY, WHEREFORE OF GREATER CLEVELAND COMMUNITY CHEST FUND.

Amonut sought: $3,500,000.

Purpose: To meet every charitable need in the city by systematic effort, eliminating from Cleveland during this coming year any promiscuous campeigning for monetary donations.

Estimated life of the fund: Ene year.

Scope of fund nonsectarian and non-racial.

Date of the campeign: Opens Tuesday; closes following Tuesday.

Conducting campaign: A federation of Cleveland welfare organizations.

The abolition of the capitalist system of exploitation would deprive a lot of "good" people of the privilege of "doing good" to, and also doing good and plenty, a lot of other folks.

The Black Sheep

By Long and Lucky.

CHAPT. VII.

Commencement.

The threshing season had been a school of higher education as far as Jack was conderned. He had lost no opportunity to question his companions. He was always eager to elicit from them, what ever information they might possess, on the vast subjects of Sociology and Economics. He improved every opportunity. Even if it were out few idle moments when the machine was not running, or when they were moving from one job to another; Sundays, when they were hunting ducks and geese on the lakes, and the rainy days that made threshing imposibble, he changed into continuous lecture periods on these subjects.

Whatever George and Herman would teach him, or discuss in his presence, the boy would outline in a note-book which he kept, in his suitcase. Thus he classified and systematized for his own uses, what these men said.

The threshing season was drawing to a close. It was his commencement. He had to begin the actual application of what he had learned to the problems of working class existence. It was George who called this fact to his attention. Said he: "Well Jack, two more jobs and we are out. I'll hit the cushions for home, and so will Herman, what have you decided to do this coming winter? I would say, come East with us but the East is really no place for a young man of your type. It is too crowded. The West has the better opportunities for self development. It would be my advice that when this job is finished you try to get another, for the winter. Arrange it so, if you can, to have an opportunity to go to school. Remember knowledge is power. It is keeness of mind rather than depth of intellect, that wins in the modern world. Keeness of mind is a result of experience, and experience is bound to come. It will be good, or bad, for you in direct proportion to your wits. Of course this is not a general rule for in the end individual opportunity, and the general economic situation of the country plays the determining role."

"What you mean to say", replied Jack, "is that if I do my best, even then there is a chance that things will go against me."

"Yes that's about it. You have not enough of this world's wealth to compel success. You will have to coax it out of life by painstaking manipulation and damned hard work."

"What's the use? If I have fallen into the working class, it will be my destiny to be a wage slave."

"While it is true that you are in the working class, you should never let that fact become a symbol of despair. You are a type that can achieve, and unless you achieve, you will be miserable. Man can only be happy when he gives expression to that for which he is naturally adapted. I realize a working class existence is an impediment to the attainment of scholarship but it is not naturally a barrier."

"Now permit me to ask you just a few questions" the engineer continued, "let us see how well you have learned your lesson in socialism, for it will play no small part in your future activities. Give me your definition of a proletarian."

"A proletarian is an individual in capitalist society whose sole commodity is his labor power, which he is forced to sell under the penalty of starvation." Jack replied.

"What is meant by a capitalist?"

"A capitalist is a member of society who controls necessary resources and instruments of production".

"What do you mean by the class struggle?"

"The fact that one class owns what the other class needs, creates the social antogonism, which is known as the class struggle. It is a quarrel between makers and takers, over the product of labor."

"What is surplus value?"

"Surplus value is the difference between the value of the commodities a man produces in industry and the buying power of the money he gets as wages."

"What commodity has the working man to sell?"

"His labor power. That is his ability to work."

"How is labor power measured in the market?"

"By the clock. We get so much money, for so much time. But here I would like to ask a question. Isn't it evidently unjust to buy labor power by the hour, day or week, when one man works fast and another slow?"

"Your question is a natural one and grows out of your education and training as a child. You think in individualistic terms. Habitually you consider the 'I' the pivot of the universe. You define labor power, but the price of labor power is not based upon individual ability but upon the result of the expenditure of social energy. That is, how many men does it take in a factory, working at an average intensity to produce a certain amount of commodities.' The price of labor power, 'wages', is not your value to your boss as an individual. I might better say it is not the value of your time. It is an expression of the value of an average worker's time in your line of work. Let me illustrate. You are a darned good fireman. You get three dollars a day. Cotton Top on the Craig outfit couldn't keep steam up in hell, and he gets three dollars a day. Fireman's labor power sells at three dollars a day.

Modern industry is subduing the 'I' and developing the 'We'. The question of wages is one of supply and demand or of the organized power to demand. Your definition is alright Jack. Just add the world social and then she stands. Now tell me what is the result of labor power?"

"Wealth."

"What two forms may wealth take?"

"Products and commodities."

"How do you differentiate them?"

"A product is a result of labor power applied to resources, thru the medium of tools, that does not enter the market, but is used by the producers. Commodities are products of labor that enter the market. They are produced for sale."

"You have told me what surplus value is, now give me a definition of value?"

"I do not know that we have ever discussed that point," Jack answered. "But it appears to me that the value of a thing should be measured by utility."

"Then diamonds, rubies and gold should be very cheap" the engineer suggested. "That definition eveidently does not hold water. You will have to find something else by which to measure value."

Jack sat still for a few moments, as he looked out across the drab gray plains that stretched far out until they blended with the horizon. It was as if he tried to call his answer from the distance. At last he said "if utility does not determine value, then it must be supply and demand."

"Then bread would be worth little when you were not hungry. A knife would be less valuable if you happen to possess two of them. That won't do. Supply and demand may affect the price of an article temporarily, that is a great demand may force a price above the value, and conversely a great supply may force the price below the value which gives rise to the tendancy for commodities to exchange on an average at something near their value. You must not confuse 'value' with 'price'. Now tell me what value is."

"I'll be damned if I know."

"Well then I will tell you. Rather I'll make you teel me what it is. What is iron ore in the mine worth?"

"In the mine, it is worth nothing."

"What is it worth on the car?"

"Oh, about ten dollars a ton."

"What is the difference between the ore in the mine and the ore in the car? What has been added to it?"

"Labor power."

"Now then, remember this definition; the value of a commodity is determined by the amount of socially necessary labor, concentrated in its production."

"If what you say is true that commodities have a tendancy to exchange at their value, how then do business men get rich?"

[illegible] The store keeper sells store service to the public. The service is rendered by clerks who sell their labor power at the price of clerk time. Now if the store keeper in a little village makes profit enough on the work of these clerks in serving the public, that he can buy an automobile then he advertises to the people that he is making more than a living and the result is that another store is built in that village, and store keeper number one, has to bring down his monoply prices to compete with store keeper number two.

Store keeper number two must sell high enough to keep up expenses and make a living. Now the two stores are giving the same service that at first the one store gave. The only difference is that they have split the profits between the two. Temporarily it may bring down prices and in that it proves the Marxian theorem that on the average commodities exchange at their value. The profit of the store keepers being simply their pay for service rendered."

"That will do for the present, there are others factors still to be considered."

You can see how it is that the store keeper would rather pay a clerk ten than twenty dollars a week. The wages of the clerk comes out of the profit of the business."

"I can see the difference between price and value. Value is the cost of a thing in human energy, price is its cost in money."

It was this discussion that terminated Jack's economic education as far as these men were concerned. The threshing season was over two days later and the machine was put away. The time of parting had arrived, so it was up to Herman to speak the closing word, when they were waiting for their train at Anamoose. Said he, "I will tell you kid, George has told you a good deal about the philosophy of Charley Whiskers, but you will find out that life is the stuff that will put the whiskers on you. In a few minutes we'll be gone, and you will have the problem of finding a new job. It is not easy now that the treshing is over and the cold wind howls across the prairies. Winter is an inhospitable time for a homeless man in this part of the country. Just look at the geese. Great V shaped flocks are hurrying south. The snow is already falling from the lead graw skies. It is time that you decide where you are going to get under cover, and when you have succeeded in getting under cover I can only agree with George that it is up to you, to become so equipped for the stuggle for existence that you will at all times be able to compel food, clothing and shelter for your self."

"Let us go to the depot. It's about train time and the waiting room is warm. What I want you to do is this, put the biggest part of your wad between the lining and the outer part of your suitcase. There was a time in this country when the farmers would stick you up on your way to town and rob you of your earnings but now a days, a criminal element follows the working class like trout follow salmon for their eggs. They make it their business to relieve workers of their wad. Be careful of them, and once more let me tell you, get definitely located as soon as possible and make yourself a definite goal."

"You are in the years of life when a man is either made or broken. You must work for your self, for unless you make yourself strong you can't be of any use to any one else. There is nothing so tragically comical, so subblimely rediculous as altruistic weakling."

Turn a deaf ear to beggars of all ages and sexes. You will meet plenty of them. You understand the class struggle. It's natural result is a yawning abyss of poverty. Remember your pennies cannot fill the abyss. Giving can only drag you down into it. Charity will not redeem the world. Don't practice it. Among men as among animals those who cannot survive must perish. Survival does not depend on charity. It depends on intelligence and organization. You must know and act upon the laws and principles George has endeavored to teach you. Your business in life is to help your fellow men to stand upon their own feet.

The train whistled in the distance so they walked out on the platform and waited. While Herman had been speaking Jack had deposited the greater part of his money between the lining and out side of his suitcase as Herman had suggested. A small amount he kept in his pocket. He left his suitcase in the waiting room, and accompanied his friends out side.

While they stood there a group of thresher men came upon the platform, some of them carrying suitcases and others carrying rolls of blankets. Two or three were intoxicated with prohibition whisky; these were quarreling and jangling amongst themselves. The others talked quietly, except when they rebuked the erring ones, then they used forceful and picturesque language.

The train pulled in. George laid his hand on Jack's shoulder and said "This is commencement for you Jack, the real battle is before you. [illegible] from me, always keep your eyes open, and when in doubt, your mouth shut; keep your fist ready and your knees stiff, but be careful, do not close your heart. For what ever may be said there is more good in human nature than there is evil."

The train started and Jack was left alone.

SKYGAC'S COLUMN.

DEMENTIA CARDINALIS

or

ARE THEY ACTING THE BULL OR THROWING IT? BEING A CONTINUOUS FARCE PERFORMANCE

now being staged by the department which is misnamed justice.

A bull has a fit when it sees red. So too does the U. S. department which is misnamed the department of justice.

For over a century this country boasted about being the land of the free and the home of the brave. Now so far has it departed from that high level that the greater portion of its governmental energies are devoted to persecution of all the forces within its borders which are striving to keep alive that spark of love for liberty which makes a man or a nation famous.

Twenty centuries ago there appeared a fabled light in the east and men worshipped it. Its worship was encouraged by all the knaves of christendom, because its worship had a benumbing effect upon the mastes of the people making them mentally stupid and willing to trade all that they might get while here for a promise of more as soon as they died.

Two years ago another light appeared in the east, but this time it was not a light to herald the birth of a new God but a light denoting the birth of a new democracy — — the World's newest Republic of Labor.

Now all who dare to give expression to a note of joy over the fact that the new democracy has withstood the combined assaults of all the forces of reaction and still stands an object lesson and a beacon light to all the oppressed of earth — all who show by world or deed that they are glad that government by the people and of the people and for the people has not entirely perished from the earth, are hounded and persecuted by the department of justice!

The department's official mouthpieces say they are going to deport all the reds — but they won't. There is not a mill or mine or factory in all the broad land but what has its quota of sensible men and women who are class conscious and loyal to their class. There is neither men money or ships enogh to deport the reds from America.

And — besides the government does not want them deported. That is all bluff. The government refuses them passports when they try to go. What the mis-named department of justice is trying to do is to bluff them into quietly creating surplus values for the master class without protest.

Part of their activity is due to a silly case of nerves, a sort of fright over their own impotency to stop the spread of the red, and the other part of their activity is pure bluff, so their silly antics may be said to be, acting the bull and throwing it.

THE NEW FREEDOM.

Once upon a time
in the so-long-long-ago, here was going the rounds of the press
quite a long and wordy argument about whether or not a representative of this great young democracy should be allowed to wear a dress suit when he called upon a king.
But — —
that was so long- long ago.
Since that time, representatives of the U. S. A. have fawned upon kings
and queens and monarchs.
They have worn cute little knee breeches of purple plush cut in the Little Lord Fauntleroy style so popular with autocrats.
Once upon a time,
Congress used to pass laws that had to be obeyed,
but — — that was in the days before a court injuction became an object of riducle.
Now — — in the days of the New Freedom
the young democracy has made such strides towards royalty that representatives of the U. S. A. are bedecked with crosses and insignia contrary to the constitution.
Several prominent citizens now have a "right" granted to them by royalty to be addressed as "Sir" regardless of whether or not their actions merit such a mark of respect.
Now — —
aping the customs of Royalty is the chief American Diversion.
Where the constitution plainly says, "The right of the citizen to bear arms shall not be denied" they have written, No citizen shall be allowed to bear arms except he is in the army and navy or else is a member of the dominant class.
Where the Constitution used to say that the right of free speech should not be denied they have written their espionage act and their fool criminal syndicalist laws.
Where we used to pride ourselves upon our inaleniable right.
to utter an honest thought,
we now have the Americanized edition of the laws of Royalty making criticism of government or of the elected government officials the crime of lese majesty.
Where we used to offer the right of asylum to all the politically oppressed of all the earth
we now have a passport system
just like all the rest of the Royal Autocracies and instead of offering assylum to the persecuted we have grown to be the worlds greatest persecutor and have as fine a bunch of political prisoners of our own
as any autocracy anywhere ever boasted about.
Such is the New Freedom which has been brought about by the back-woods Bourbon Democrats
during the two-term reign of Woodrow the Hypocrite.

FLINGS AND STINGS.

B-r-r-rr! Woof-woof! B-r-rr!
Hearken to the ravings of the Department!
The mis-called department of Justice!
Department of Justice! Jesus! What a farce of a name!
Department for doing the dirty work for the dominant class!
That is its real name and its real function.
Br—r Woof-woof! B-r-r-r — —
Going to deport 'em all', Woof-woof!
Plain bluff and bull.
They are not going to do any such thing.
Fact is they wont give 'em pass-ports
when they try to leave'!

Passports, a new wrinkle in the land of the free!

Came into existence along with the espionage act, the doctrine of Lese Majesty and the criminal syndicalist laws. Heaven is now the only country you do not need a passport to enter and even there it is reported you have to pay the priest that holds the key.

* * *

American radicals are to be deported to some island in the Phillippines. Foreign born radicals are to be returned to the contry of their birth. No more shall the class war rage! But — If the law of the universality of [illegible] is true, will [illegible] crop of radicals produce a [illegible] crop? What is to prevent a new importation of radicals? And how will they stop making the home-grown variety?

* * *

In the kitchen of life one smells only the smoke and that is about as far as we can get so long as we allow the capitalist class to have undisputed possession and control of all of the necessities of life.

CHANGING TACTICS IN THE CLASS WAR.

Written for THE TOILER by W. E. Reynolds.

Ever since the days of primitive communism of barbarous times, all history has been a history of the struggles of one class to get and another class to keep, supremacy. The dominant class strove to keep its dominance, while the subject class sought supremacy. The machine age worked a revolution, i. o., made a subject class the dominant class, and transformed the home from an industrial to a social unit.

The war of the classes while always in progress, is sometimes carried on in the open, sometimes concealed. At the beginning of the machine era the weapons of the class war were almost exclusively intellectual. The dominant class secured control of the church and Sunday school, the public schools and colleges, the universities, the newspapers and magazines, the moving pictures and the lectured platforms. All these sources of information were controlled for one purpose and that purpose was an intellectual propaganda justifying the continued supremacy of the present dominant class.

Just how successful this propaganda has been in the past may be inferred from the fact that millions of bright scholars of both sexes graduate from the public schools and colleges in blissful ignorance of the existence of classes in society. The church and Sunday school teaches its biblical doctrine of "the poor ye have always with you," in such a manner as to leave the impression that having poor with you always was a divine injunction.

The intellectual propaganda of the dominant class was met by the class-conscious element in society, with an intellectual propaganda on the part of the workers, teaching and telling the truth of the class position. The two propagandas were far from equal, as far from equal as they must have been considering the class conscious workers were matching the pennies of the poor with the millions of the millionaires.

While the workers were halfheartedly supporting one small paper the master class was owning and supporting whole syndicates of newspapers with a retinue of paid artists, editorial writers and special writers. Where the class-conscious workers were putting a half dozen proletarian speakers upon a state lecture platform, to speak before a necessarily limited audience, on account of the dominant class being in control of nearly all of the mediums for successful advertising, the master class was in control of whole chautaqua systems with armies of prostitute lecturers.

Where the representatives of the master class was building a church and placing a Sunday school within the reach of nearly every inhabitant of the nation, lack of funds kept the classconscious workers from meeting this insiduous propaganda with a counter propaganda of fact to supplant faith and science to offset superstition. While lack of finance prohibited the building of temples of science to take the place of the josshouses for the silly worship of the supernatural, the social nature of the human animal asserted itself and the children of the classconscious element for lack of a better place to go, went to the churches and Sunday schools of the masters, not to worship the supernatural but to satisfy a social need. But the results were bad for the workers, the children often succumbing to the hellfire doctrine and thru faith and fear, became staunch supporters of the rule of the dominant class, because forsooth, did not their religion teach that "the powers that be are ordained of God"?

The dominant class had all the advantage in the intellectual warfare, but nowhere at no time is a master class satisfied. It must needs press on to new fields to conquer. The master [illegible] government from a representative [illegible] conquered the state and turned [illegible] subservient to the people's will [illegible] an executive committee to do the [illegible] of the dominant class. They con[illegible] the courts and the army and [illegible] and the police systems, and de[illegible] agencies, state constabularies. [illegible] not content they hired vast armies af private thugs and hired assassins and thus transferred the struggle from the realms of intellectual warfare to a class conflict on the basis of coercive force.

When the dominant class first began its campaign of coercive force, it had all the advantages as the classconscious elements in society still sought to combat the coercive force of the dominant class with the purely intellectual weapons of papers, classes and lectures. The Socialist party still labors under the delusion that the coercive tactics of the masters class can be met and conquered by the intellectual weapons only. But the papers are being suppressed, the halls closed to public meetings and the local meetings interrupted by the police or paid detectives of the dominant class.

A campaign of coercion on the part of the master class could only be successfully counteracted by a counter campaign of coercive measures, hence the class conscious elements organized the industrial union with its doctrine of working class solidarity, and its program of organized power.

Instead of a futile protest against the depredations of the dominant class they are quietly organizing the necessary numbers of the proletariat to control industry and thus meet force with force. The have no intention of meeting the murder of the master class with murder on the part of the working class. Far from it. The force which they expect to use is not a violent force of assault of person such as is ever used by the hirelings of the master-class but the control of economic force such as is being used today by the coal miners.

In the coal strike the master class ought to use force, the court injunction and later the court mandate to eturn to work, (all this in defiance of he plain and explicit provisions of the onstitution which says that involuntary sevitude shall not be allowed within the borders of the U. S.) The fficials of the miner's unions obeyed the court mandate and ordered the strike off—and now the master class with all its coercive forces at its disposal faces the condition of a strike fficially off but actually on!

At this stage of economic evolution he class-conscious workers should be more than alert, and not allow any atclass with violence on the part of the worker.

This would be playing into the hands of the master-class and give them the excuse they are looking for to exterminate with machine guns and armored tanks the rebellious elements in society. We must guard against any premature revolutions. But coercion has to be met with coercion, while the master controlls the clubs the worker should work for ECONOMIC control of industry. Once given the numbers in control of industry and all the coercive tactics of the master class will be as nothing.

While the class war was being fought with purely intellectual weapons the master class had all the best of the argument. While the class battle was of an educational nature solely, the master class had all the best of it because they had control of most of the sources of information. While the class-war was a matching of pennies against millions the master had the best of it because he had the millions, but now—since the master class has thrown down the new gauge of battle and transferred the battle from the monetary-educational-intellectual field to the field of coercive force, he has changed the whole outlook. Intellectual work is still needed, money is still needed, education is still needed, but with the fight transferred from the intellectual to the coercive field the worker has all the advantage.

The master class may pass criminal syndicalist laws to reach from here to palestine and still economic determinism will force the working class to strike for money enough to enable him to get back on the job. No longer can the threat of a lockout fill the worker with terror. Today the master class dare not declare a lockout in industry, because they know full well that once the industrial proletarist is denied an opportunity to earn a living they will seriously consider re-opening the factories for production for use istead of profit. The master class itself changed the tactics and in so doing they wrote their own death warrant as a master class.

THE SITUATION IN RUSSIA.

Extract from a letter from Prince Kropotkin.

"You speak in the Occident of restoring 'order' in Russia by the intervention of the arms of the Allies. I protest with all my force against any form of armed intervention by the Allies in Russian affairs. This intervention will have for its consequences an accession of Russian chauvinism, it will bring us the return of the chauvinist monarchy, a return of which already we see the beginning and—note this carefully, it will produce in the ensemble of the Russian people such an attide of hostility toward western Europe that the consequences will be sad indeed. The Americans have understood this well already.

"You imagine that in supporting Kolchak and Denikin you are supporting the liberal Republican party, but this is a grave error. Whatever may be the intentions of these two leaders the greater number of those by whom they are surrounded have totally different visions. Those of the Allies who read clearly the events in Russia must repudiate all armed intervention.

Give Us Bread, He Says

"If they wish really to come to the aid of Russia they will find an immense lot to do in another direction. We need bread; we pay 30 rubles for half a pound of black corn bread, but that is when we find the bread. We have no bread; it is a famine all around with all its horrible consequences. An entire generation is hungering—and they refuse us the right to buy bread in the Occident. Why is this? Is it to bring us the return of a Romanoff?

"Instead of playing the role of Austria, Prussia and Russia against France in 1793 the Allies should have done everything in their power to help the Russian people out of their miserable position. Moreover, much blood will be shed in the future to bring Russia back to the past, but it will be usuccessful.

"To construct a new future without delay I appeal to the Allies to come to the aid of our children, come and aid us in the necessary constructive work and for this work send us not diplomats and generals, but bread and tools with which to produce, and organized builders, those who have so well helped the Allies during those terrible five years to prevent economic disorganization and have repulsed the barbarous invasion of Germany."

RUSSIAN OPERA UNDER THE BOLSHEVIKS.

The russian stage under control of the Bolsheviki holds no terrors for the noted dancer, Eva Karsavina, whose pleasing statement appears below.

PARIS.—A new definition for the word "Bolshevist" was supplied today by Eva Karsavina, the famous Russian dancer and former resident of New York, who is just back from Moscow. She says the word means "gentleman."

"I had a perfectly deligthful year at Moscow," she told Universal Service. "I'm going to the United States on a two-year contract with the opera ballet.

"I met Lenine several time—he's a darling. He is very refined and perfectly honest, only misunderstood. His chief of staff, M. Drubujinsky, was awfully nice to me. He saw that I had plenty to eat and enough coal, and forced the theater to heat the dressing rooms properly.

"The Russian opera is now the property of the soviet government. The artists are paid just like soldiers. Admittance is free, and the front seats are reserved for workers, who are fast becoming opera lovers.

During the war I spent in Moscow I never once saw a woman insulted, nor did I read of any such case. I gathered the impression that while there are many undesirables in the soviet government, the Bolshevists generally are sincere men who desire to alleviate the lot of humanity."

HERBERT KNECHT.

Among the state's most aggressive field workers is Herbert Knecht. For the past several weeks comrade H. Knecht has been out in the state lining up members and Locals in the C. L. P. with splendid success.

Among the workers sent out by the State Office within the past three weeks, comrade Knecht has led them all in amount of members secured, literature sales and collections. This does not mean that our other field workers are lagging. We will have good tales to tell of them too as time the field and you will hear good news field and you will hear good news every week.

REDS CAPTURE THOUSANDS KOLCHAK ON THE RUN.

TIAGA, Siberia.—Eight thousand wives and children of officers making an eleventh hour flight from Omsk are reported to have been captured by the Bolsheviki ten miles east of Omsk.

The Bolsheviki announced the capture of another thousand prisoners during the taking of Tara, 135 miles north of Omsk.

The retreat of the rearmost units of the Siberian army from the All Russian capital became a stampede, the troops throwing away their guns and commandeering locomotives, trains and carts in which to escape.

Fifteen trains carrying officers and their families, besides scores of other trains filled with refugees, ammunition and merchandise, which were blocked by wreckage and lack of motor power, fell into the hands of the Bolsheviki, who followed up the Cossacks by a cavalry pursuit.

Street fighting occured in Omsk. Panic is reported to reign at Tatasskaya, 100 miles east of Omsk, which is overrun by fleeing soldiers. Polish troops who have been guarding the railways are leaving with the utmost haste. Admiral Kolchak is reported to be approaching Novo Nikolaevsk.

Thus, one year after assuming the upreme rulership, Admiral Kolchak today is on his way east ard, facing the necessity of re-establishing his seat of government on the shore of Lake Baikal and reconstructing his army, which has been badly shattered.

The evacuation of Omsk, althaugh viewed by foreign observersee as a ossibility after the failure of the Siberian offensive which reached the Tobol river, became virtually a foregone conclusion ofter the fall of Petropavlovsk and the surrender of the Ishim defense line.

A complete removal of the government from Omsk to Irkutsk, which was recommended by certain foreign diplomats on the Siberians in August, was urged by Gen. Diedrichs, and it was their conflicting opinions on the subject that caused his break with Admiral Kolchak and the resignation of Gen. Diedrichs as commander of the western armies of the Omsk government.

Becouse of desertions, the armies had dwindled to mere skeletons. Several units had been destroyed and some of the officers had gone over to the Bolsheviki.

LONDON.—"Impudent attacks by enemies of the revolution brought about a miracle. We have gained a ull victory over Kolchak which will be of historic importance for the peoples of the east."

This statement was made by Nikolai Lenine, the Bolshevik premier in course of an address to the second all-Russian congress of the Mussulman communist organizations of easterpeoples, according to a wireless message to Moscow today. He continued:

"At the same time attacks from the west are weakening. The Versailes peace is the greatest blow the entente ould inflict upon itself.

"The people see clearly that President Wilson is not bringing liberty to democracy, even for the victorous nations."

LOOT WAS BARGAINED FOR, SAYS MURPHY.

In a recent speech, Congressman Frank B. Murphy made the following pointed remarks concerning Wilson and world war.

"Our president went to Europe with his head in the clouds and his feet treading foreign soil and he came back here thinking to take the whole world under his wing through the league of nations."

Continueing he said: "We find that the allies have proportioned the loot of war between them, but what has America—nothing but sad homes as the result of the horrors of war." He pointed out that over 4,000,000 men gave up all they had; not only that but took out government insurance with deductions from their pay in Liberty bonds and other allotments, so that the people at home would not bear so great a burden of taxes.

"At the peace conference, the allies had fourteen bright, brainly men and we had one big egoist. Do you realize how the country has been managed? England got all she wanted out of the war, France got Alsace-Lorraine and other territory; England and Belgium received territory. It was loot that was bargained and bargained for before the United States got into the war, and the egoist who represented America said that he did not know anything about it. We did not send him; he sent himself and he did not take any one with him. Do you blame the United States senate for taking so much time to look over the proposition he brought back?"

CONFERENCE A SUCCESS.

The State Conference just held at Akron, Nov. 29—30th was according to many delegates' opinion, the best delegate convention ever held in Ohio. A delegation of 30 from 14 locals were present and also many visitors. That it was to be a live conference was proven the moment comrade Marguerite Prevey, as Chairman, sounded the gavel that started the business of the conference into action.

A complete report of the conference actions will appear in the next issue of The Toiler. One of the most enlightening sesions of the meeting was when comrade Prevey in a half hour's speech reviewed the past history of the Socialist Party, showing the reason for the split that has occured between the radical and conservative elements in it.

Sunday a splendid propaganda meeting was held. Tom Lewis gave a fine interpretation of the meaning of the Shop Steward and Shop Committee Movements. John C. Chase spoke upon Political Prisoners, and that his talk was received with enthusiasm, was proven when a collection of nearly $60.00 was taken.

The conference will have a lasting effect upon the membership. Delegates expressed themselves as entirely satisfied on this point. It was felt by all present that the C. L. P. in Ohio will now move forward with greater speed, as the comrades feel more assured than ever that the C. L. P. is the logical working-class Party. Watch for a full report in next week's issue.

METHODIST FEDERATION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE MAKES STATEMENT

The Industrial Crisis.

The nation now faces a grave industrial crisis. This crisis comes to a head over the issue of collective bargaining, first in the steel industry and then in the Industrial Conference recently held in Washington.

It is manifested that certain leaders of finance and industry, who have long and successfully denied to their employees the right to organize, are determined at any cost to destroy the gains in labor organization that have come through the increased application of collective bargaining in war industries. That these men believe the autocratic control of industry by capital to be a moral principle makes their attitude all the more perilous to democracy.

That irreconcileable opponents of trade unions are in the present situation strengthened by the attitude of others of more social vision who see the necessity of labor organization but are yet unwilling to face the practical difficulties involved in giving to labor the same extent of organization and the same freedom of representation that capital has.

The power of those who will not consent to any effective form of collective bargaining is also strengthened by the irritation of the general public ver the inconvenience experienced from recent numerous strikes and by a general impression unfortunately created by over-emphasis upon the gains that have come to a few special groups, that the financial position of all wage earners has been greatly strenghtened by the war.

If now, for any or all of these reasons, the gains made in collective bargaining during the war are to be taken away from organized labor he consequences to society at large will be extremely serious. The energies that are now sorely needed in production will be diverted into destructive conflict; there will be widespread and bitter industrial war with its resultant social waste and its legacy of hate to embitter the common life and delay the development of industrial democracy.

In such a situation we deem it our bounden duty in pursuance of the task laid upon us by the General Conference to recall to our ministry and membership the various official utterances of our church upon the question of collective bargaining.

General Conference of 1908:

> "The organization of labor is not only the right of laborers and conductive to their welfare, but is incidentally of great benefit to society at large.... Their efforts to improve their conditions should receive our heartiest co-operation...."

General Conference of 112:

> "The immediate application, in every industry, of the principle of collective bargaining, is not only essential to the protection of the modern industrial worker, but it is the first step toward that cooperative control of both the process and proceeds of industry which will be the ultimate expression of Christianity in industrial relationships."

General Conference of 1916:

> "The first method of realizing democracy in industry is through collective bargaining. This gives wage earners as a group the right to determine in conference with their employers the terms and conditions of employment.
>
> "The principle of collective bargaining being generally accepted, the urgent question is what method [illegible] the principle without supporting some method that will make it effective is but to mock the hopes and struggles of the workers with barren words and to deserve their indignation and contempt.
> "There are two methods of collective bargaining now in use. One unites employers and organized workers in agreements which require the employment only of union men. In the other they jointly agree that a preference shall be shown to union men, both in hiring and dismissal, without denying the right of employment to the non-union man.... Between these two methods it is not the function of the church to decide. To those employers and workers, however, who reject both of these methods as undesirable, the churches must point out that they are under moral obligation to discover some other form of collective bargaining that will make for the good of their industry and of society at large. The safety and development of the workers, the best interest of employers, the security and progress of the community all demand it."

The Board of Bishops: 1912:

> "We therefore declare our approval of labor organizations and other defensive alliances of all whose interests are threatened or invaded. Such united and unified action is their only recourse under present conditions.... Nor should any Christian deny to another person the right of individual choice in the disposal of his own services. Principles are greater than present personal exigencies, and no man can afford to violate the principle under which he himself claims protection."

The Board of Bishops, 1916:

> "We call upon our members as employers, investors, or wage-earners to do everything in their power to further measures such as trade agreements between employers and organized workers, minimum wage adjustments, profit-sharing co-operative plans, which look toward the maintenance of a living wage, the correction of unjust inequalities in the distribution of wealth, the increasing democratization of industry, the Christianization of the world's work in the name of that abundant life which our Master came to promote."

The Board of Bishops, 1919. (Special Message).

> "We favor collective bargaining as an instrument for the attainment of industrial justice and for training in democratic procedure."

These are the first principles of industrial democracy and if our ministry and members will now steadfastly insist upon their application and will constantly promote, in the Christian Spirit, discussion of the methods by which they are to be applied, they will render a real service to their respective communities and to the nation at large.

Speaking for ourselves, it seems to us clear:

1. That "grievance committees" and joint meetings to discuss conditions that arise in the course of employment do not constitute collective bargaining.
2. That if collective bargaining is to be an effective step toward a wider democratic control of industry there must be the closest possible approach to equality of bargaining power between capital and labor.
3. That there cannot be equality of bargaining power unless capital and labor can have the same opportunity to deal as federated units and to choose representatives.

In this judgement concerning some of the implications of the historic positions of our church, we are confirmed by observing the course which the industrial reorganization of Great Britain is now taking and the recent experiences of various industrial enterprises in this country.

A pamphlet, dealing at length the facts supporting this statement will shortly be issued from this office.

WHAT THE [illegible] OF SPEECH [illegible]

There were three of us, whiling away the [illegible] of a [illegible] court, smoking our cigarettes in a corridor at the county courthouse. The [illegible] constitutional right to freedom of speech.

It was a case of two against one—two radicals against one "regular." Both radicals contended that when the founders of the republic wrote into the constitution that congress should not pass any law which would deny or abridge freedom of speech they meant just what the words stated.

"But," said our "regular" friend, "what about the man who yells 'fire' in a crowded theater and causes a fatal panic?"

"Say, friend," blurted out W., in true radical fashion, "what is this—a high school debate? Where did you hear that argument?'

"Why, I don't know as I remember. But isn't it a fair example of freedom of speech?'

"You don't remember where you heard it, you say?" retorted the radical. "I'll tell you. It was used by that cheap tinhorn lawyer that prosecuted the case of Gene Debs for making that Canton speech. That lawyer also used the example of a man slandering a woman, and of the spreading of false reports of the solvency of a bank and causing a run on it which broke the bank. Every one of those alleged examples of frredom of speech is a cheap sophistry worthy only of a 22-caliber barrister."

"If a government defined the [illegible] a cheap lawyer construe it [illegible] knocking a man's [illegible] wooden club?

"Or when we speak of freedom of the seas does [illegible] lawyer ever [illegible] that freedom of the seas means to legalize drowning some one you have a grudge against in the ocean?

"The founders of this republic," continued W., with fiery, radical emphasis, "took it for granted that freedom of speech would be construed to mean freedom of discussion of matters of public interest and welfare. And, take it from me, they intended the the American congress should never enact a law which would deny or abridge that right. And they were only putting into concrete, constitutional form that which is an inherent nautral right — a God-given right, if you please.

"In an abnormal period, such as prevails in time of war, that right should be observed and maintained even more carefully than in time of peace. Just such sophistries as the one you sprung are the only possible excuse for such an espionage act as was passed by our congress during the last war."

Our cigerettes were burning our fingers, time was up and we went back to our places. The debate was over. The Forum, Spokane.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

BY THOMAS LEVISH

"I see by the papers," said Sandy to his pal, as they sat on a bench in Central Park on a sultry afternoon, "I see that the Russians have got a new law which makes is as easy to get a divorce as to get married."

"That don't concern me," replied Andy, sprawling forward till his feet almost touched the other end of the walk. "When they fix it up so's fellow can get married as easily as divorced, I'll get interested."

"Looky here," declared Sandy. "That may be all very well for you, but take it from me, an ex-married man what knows, a law like that might be a real blessing over here. If me old woman—rest her soul!—hadn't died eight years ago I'd 'a' had a fine time getting the court to grant her a decree in case we wanted to seperate. Mind you, I'm not sayin' nothin' agin the good dame, but to prove we were incombatable in temper I'd likely have had to get drunk and hit her over the head seven or eight times a week with a fryin' pan, or brick, or somethin' like that, and then some fine day I'd 'a' slammed her a little too hard and got sentenced to be hanged by the neck until dead, for murder."

"Anyway, you'd 'a' got freed from her," opined Andy cynically.

"H—,no!" said Sandy. "The next thing I knew she'd be bawling me out for the way I was shovelin' the coal into the furnace. Besides, even if I didn't croak her, and managed to get her before the court, the judge might simply put me on probation for a year, or figger we were both to anxious to get divorced, and dismiss the case because the evidence showed collision. To say nothing of the fact that purty soon it will be next to impossible to get a jag. So what is a poor henpecked husband to do?"

"But maybe the wife has got a kick, too," suggested Andy.

"That's just what I'm driving at," insisted Sandy. "Nowadays, to avoid the publicity and everything a married couple who ain't got nothin' in common, except a common kid or two, will keep on dragging out their miserable lives together, no use to themselves or anyone else. And women being naturally afraid of gossip, she will stand for anything before letting the other married folks, who are in the same fix, see that her married life is not exactly, so to talk, peaches and ice cream."

"If they're not suited to each other what did they get married for in the first place?" demanded Andy.

"There you go again. That's easy for you to say. But if everybody waited till the right one came along this lil' old earth would be depopulated before the League of Nations had a chance to begin its work. The trouble with people who fall in love at first sight is that they forget to take a second look. And even then they're liable to be googly-eyed. But when they've found out they made a mistake you wouldn't sentence them to repentance for life, would you, especially if they don't mean it?"

"Listen, Sandy," said the younger man, getting restless, "You may be a lot more experienced than me and all that, but you don't know everything. And I tell you that your dope may work all right when both parties want to divorce, but how about when one of them wants to remain married, and to the same fellow? Supposin' he's madly in love, or something, or maybe she has no other way to support herself, with a half a dozen kids, or some other misfortune, it ain't right to let 'em separate. Now—"

'Wait a minute," replied Sandy. "This paper says married women in Russia get a mothers pension of so much a month for every child. If she hasn't any kids she can get a decent job. I reckon that's easy enough when you see so many women in this country working who's got both husband and kids. As for being madly in love, what good is it if the party of the worst part don't return it? Selfishness don't pay. You know you never got no good out of that knife you borrowed from me three months ago and forgot to return, because—"

"Here it is," interrupted Andy in chagrin, pulling out of his pocket a weapon that had evidently seen better days. "Couldn't use it anyhow; its blades are all rusty."

"What did I tell you!" exclaimed Sandy in triumph, as he pocketed the knife. "When a woman hangs on to a man who has no use for her, or pro and con, both of them suffer. Now, in Russia all either party has got to do is to ask for a divorce, and theyll get it."

"The devil!" said Andy, getting more interested. "You don't need to tell me what that means. Any time a man gets tired of his wife he'll divorce her and get another one. It's nothin' but a legalized sanctification of bigamy, that's what it is."

"Don't you fool yourself," assured Sandy. "When a man or woman sees how easy it is to lose their mate they'll try a darned sight harder to keep the other's love and respect. That's human nature. As it is, nobody cares much for anything he considers a fixture, like the hatrack, or clock, or his favorite newsstand, or his wife. He takes it all for granted. Now if he wasn't so sure of his wife, he'd work a lot harder to please her. And of course she'd do the same."

"That's no argument,' remarked Andy. "I never was much strong for work anyhow."

"Not only that," continued Sandy, ignoring the irrelevant interruption, "but young people would take a heap more care about choosing their mates, when they saw how easy it was to lose them. I dare say the Russians are one hundred per cent happier since they adopted the new system." He paused, challenging a denial.

"I ain't saying nothing," said Andy.

"As for legalizing bigamy, and so forth, maybe in some cases wives would be changing hands a little more frequently than some people think proper," declared Sandy, waxing eloquent, "but at least it would be in the open. You know as well as me, Andy, that there are hundreds of thousands of homes in this land where husband or wife, or both, are leading double lives, or worse, and even committing crimes against each other, under the cloak of the stiff-necked marriage and divorce laws, all the time keeping outer respectability. If the bars were let down, and the truth was ever known, what a stench there would be!"

Andy pondered long and silently. He alternately crossed one leg over the other, scratched his head, and rolled his eyes. Finally he rose from the bench, and ambled off.

"Where you going?" called Sandy after the departing form.

"Me for Russia!" retored Andy.

Jimmie Higgins is neither broad-shouldered nor big-chested. He is neither pretty nor strong. A little, thin, weak, pale-faced chap. But he is strong enough to support a mother with equal disability. Strong enough to put in ten years of unrecognised and unexcelled service to the cause of Socialism.

What did he do? Everything.

He has made more Socialist speeches than any man in America. Not that he did the talking; but he carried the platform on his bent shoulders when the platform committee failed to be on hand. Then he hustled around to another branch and got their platform out. Then he got a glass of water for "the speaker." That same evening or the day before he had distributed handbills advertising the meeting.

Previously he had informed his branch as to the "best corner" in the district for drawing a crowd. Then he distributed leaflets at the meeting and helped to take the platform down and carry it back to headquarters and got subscribers for Socialist papers.

The next day the same, and so on all through the campaign, and one campaign after another.

When he had a job, which was none too often, for Jimmie was not an extra good workman and was always one of the first to be laid off, he would distribute Socialist papers among his fellows during the noon hour, or take a run down to the gate of some factory and give out Socialist leaflets to the employes who came out to lunch.

What did he do? Jimmie Higgins did everything, anything. Whatever was to be done, THAT was Jimmie's job.

First to do his own work; then the work of those who had become wearied or negligent. Jimmie Higgins couldn't sing, nor dance, nor tell a story—but he could DO the thing to be done.

Be you, reader, ever so great, you nor any other shall ever do more than that. Jimmie Higgins had no riches, but out of his poverty he always gave something, his all; be you, reader, ever so wealthy and likewise generous, you shall never give more than that.

Jimmie Higgins never had a front seat on the platform; never knew the tonic of applause nor the inspiration of opposition; never was seen in the foreground of a picture.

But he had erected the platform and painted the picture; through his hard, disagreeable and thankless toil it had come to pass that liberty was brewing and things were doing.

Jimmie Higgins. How shall we pay, how reward this man? What gold, what laurels shall be his?

There is just one way, reader, that you and I can "make good" with Jimmie Higgins and the likes of him. And that way is to be like him.

Take a fresh start and never let go. Think how great his work, and he has so little to do with. How little ours in proportion to our strength! I know some grand men and women in the Socialist movement, but in high self-sacrifice, in matchless fidelity to truth, I shall never meet a greater man than Jimmie Higgins.

And many a branch has one of him. And may they have more of him.

CHAPTER VIII.

The [illegible]

As Jack stood alone on the depot platform wistfully watching the smoke of the train that was taking his comrades away, pandemonium broke loose in the waiting room. The sound of blows, [illegible] mingled with angry oaths and fearsome cries [illegible]. The whole group of threshermen had suddenly locked in combat. Jack suddenly remembered that he had left his suitcase inside when he had gone out on the platform to take leave of his friends. It sat on one of the seats in the now battle bound waiting room, and fearing that it might be used as an implement of war by one of the belligerent proletaire he resolved to go in and rescue it. This was quite a necessary act seeing that he had put his money between ITS lining and cover. It contained more than two thirds of his wages or about eighty dollars in all.

Entering the waiting room, he was about to pick up his suitcase when he was struck on the head with a lump of hard coal, which sent him momentarily to his knees. When he arose the blood from an ugly scalp wound flowed down his forehead into his eyes almost blinding him. He knew who it was that had thrown the coal and the sight of him now sent the wine of battle singing thru his veins. He sprang to his feet, and charged the culprit like an angry bull. This was a mistake, for the gentleman who had hurled the coal was hired for that purpose and was consequently an adept at this kind of work. He was a specimen of that shady sort of harpies who fasten themselves on rotten political machinery. It was his business to assist rotten officials in trapping and legally robbing working men of their hard earned dollars.

The method by which this was accomplished was to have some human vermin guide a group of threshermen, who had been paid off into a "blind pig", (that is an illegal saloon) and get them intoxicated. When one on more of them were in that condition it was the business of these individuals to get the group into a fight when they would be arrested for disorderly conduct. They were seldom arrested for being intoxicated for the reaso nthat the officers of the small towns did not want to be accused of permitting an illegal traffic. So they arrested them for disorderly conduct, fined them for all that they possessed and then ran them out of town, and eventually out of the state. Thus they managed to get from the migratory working class more money than other states reaped from the sale of saloon licenses.

When Jack charged the bully who was fanning the fight between the drunk, semi-drunk and sober members of the party he received a well directed blow on the chin that sent him without ceremony into a dreamless sleep. The next thing he knew was that he was being led to jail by two be-whiskered constables.

The jail at Anamoose was rather a crude affair. It was originally built for an ice house, which made its nick name, "cooler" strangely appropriate. The walls were three inch plank with a ten inch space between filled with saw dust. It was about sixty feet long, by twenty feet in width; the walls at the side were about ten feet high; while the half pitched roof made the center much higher.

At the north end of this shed like affair about twenty feet was partitioned off for a cell house, reserved for those who were considered bad characters.

In the cell house were four cells or cages made of steel. Two on each side with a small corridor between. This was the Anamoose jail proper. The part beyond the partition was called the tank. It was a large barn like room, with an open toilet in the south east corner. Near it was a faucet where water might be had but no cup was provided. In the middle of this room was a small sheet iron stove. Along the west and north walls were trough like arrangements filled with rags, miscalled matresses, near the roof was a very small window thru which a murky gray light filtered in. In the east wall was the door made of heavy, plank in it was a little iron bar apperture.

Into this barn like place Jack and twenty seven fellow victims were placed after their arrest, but we might as well mention that before they were placed there they were relieved of all money and valuables.

Not being acquainted with any of the crowd with which he was now forcibly associated, and feeling sick with shame and chagrin at the turn events had taken, to say nothing of the pain caused by a jagged wound in his scalp and the blow to his jaw, he staggered toward the [illegible] bed and sat down. He [illegible] time in a vain endeavor to stop the flow of blood from his scalp wound with a soiled handkerchief.

All but one of his companions stood about the room in little groups. They were discussing their predicament. [illegible] a tall, blue eyed, blonde haired individual. He [illegible] sat down on the bed not far from Jack, and stared at the boy with an expression of mingled pity and contempt. It was evident that he was mentally not in accord with the way in which the rank and file discussed their difficulties. Yet there was something about him which attracted the boy's attention. Perhaps it was his very aloofness or the peculiar glint of his eye. He looked at Jack from time to time with a cold critical expression but the boy was too busy with his wound to enter into a conversation with the stranger. He took a mental inventory of this peculiar individual and realized that he and the stranger were very similar types. Both were blondes; tall and raw boned. Jack's eyes were blue or rather steel grey. The stranger's sligthly lighter. Of the two men the stranger was the taller by about an inch, stading fully six feet three. His head was large and well formed. He had an unkempt mop of blonde hair that hung storm tossed over his capacious forehead. His eyebrows were bushy and shaded a pair of small piercing eyes. His nose was equiline, almost extremely so; his lips thin and firm; he had a peculiar nervous twtich of the face muscles that at times revealed a splendid row of gleaming white teeth. His chin was full, firm and agressive. His body well proportioned yet considering his height he might be called slender. Jack's first impression of the man in his fighting mood was rather dubious. The stranger surely was far from attractive.

Presently he addressed the boy in a voice which was strangely pleasing even in the use of the roughest vernacular: "I see they sapped you an the bean."

"Yes," Jack answered, delighted to have a human being speak to him.

"And hit you in the snoot."

'Yah, I didn't know when I had enough.'

"How did you get into the fracas?"

"My suitcase was in the waiting room and I wanted to get it out. Just as I was picking it up, one of you fellows hit me with a piece of coal. I mixed, and here I am."

"Which one of us hit you, kid?" the tall stranger asked, in a voice that was not unkindly, but with blazing eyes.

"I don't see him here."

"No?" "Evidently he was not arrested, now I wonder why?" There was an ugly sneer upon his lips when he asked the question.

"I wonder too," said Jack.

"Can it be possible that he was a 'stool'?"

"What is a 'stool'?"

The tall stranger smiled, "good God, but you are green", he said. It must be your first year out."

"Yes."

"And mama's boy before that."

"Yes, that is so, in a way. I know that I didn't pay any attention to industrial conditions."

"I thought so. Well, a 'stool' is a 'rat'—a tout for the dicks."

"Excuse my ignorance, but elucidation does not elucidate. Tell me, what are dicks?"

"Dicks are bulls, policemen, marshalls, sheriffs, detectives and other vermin."

"I see," said Jack, simply, then lapsed into silence, while he communed with the momory of his friends, who less than a hour ago, had left him. Then he had been a free man, and now,—he was a jail bird.

It would have been dificult to describe his emotions during that [illegible] minutes of silent thought, at the end of which he asked the stranger, what his name might be, to which the stranger replied," it is not good form to ask a man his name under conditions such as these, at least not if you expect the truth, but I don't mind telling you. My name is Ed Collins. It fluctuates occasionally, as do the names of all migratory workers, but Collins is the straight of it—Ed Collins."

"I wonder why he hit me; I was ta

TURNING RED THE RADICALS.

Where shall a radical turn for solace in these days of a tightening of the class lines that with an ever growing clearness divide society into two great camps? How delightful it was a little while ago to call one's self a radical, it was considered quite a mark of distinction. It was quite the popular thing to do, in fact a very profitable thing to do often times. Many of our dilletante socialists made names for them selves in those days, got their names in print and scraped up quite a reputation by it.

So, how times have changed. You don't hear many going up and down the world with "radicalism" emblazoned upon their banners. Not much; more than likely, they would be mobbed as damned bolshevi, and picked up on suspicion by our valiant protector, the Loyal American League, or some one or other of its allied conspirators against human progress.

And yet, what shall they do? Silently — sometimes not so silently, social forces are at work creating radicalism, sowing it broad cast over the world. They are ever at work crumbling into dust the ideas of yesterday, building upon the dead past the structure of to-morrow; creating new social ideas to replace the ancient believes. Turning the radicalism of yesterday into the conservatism of to-day. Man is prone to remain as he is. The law of inertia keeps him in the rut; says, let well enough alone. Keeps him silent when he should speak, palsies the uplifted hand, drags backward the feet that would press on.

But man is a social animal, and social forces are stronger than all others. Man moves forward, not because he wants to, but because he must. He is the slave of forces within the world of human activities and as such must obey their dictates and will.

And in this kind of a world the radical is faring badly. He would prefer to remain a mere radical, but social forces are ever at his heels driving him on, lashing his back with the whip of necessity. He is kept in a ferment and turmoil of mind in which there is no peace. He must go onward, the times change fast; rushing past him he feels the tide of human events bearing him upon its bosom. Stop, he cannot . Reactionism may howl at radicalism. Its howls are wasted upon the air. As well, may it shout to the out going tide to remain in the deep of ocean's bed. It will not do so, it will rise again and again and beat upon the shores.

The radical must go the limit. He may not wish to, but his wishes will not be considered. One of the social forces which prevent him remaining a mere pseudo active radical is that of reactionism itself. Reactionism is a builder of radicalism. Its methods of warfare against radicalism are the methods of desperation, it attempts to win by sheer force of power, and power alone without moral justification cannot survive. And a moral concept is a social force. Consider the tactics of re-actionism in America to-day. Of what do they consist but the methods of desperation of a class morally bankrupt, socially useless, which feels the world slipping from its grasp as it seeks to encompass it with its iron claws?

In the extremity of its needs, it damns every thing and every one not wholly for it. It weeds out with an unerring hand the radical from the pulpit, the teacher from the school, the writer from his job. It directs thru the public press its campaings of misinformation and lies. Its methods are bestial and by its beastliness, it overreaches itself.

Of late months, reactionism in America has followed the line of active and open lawlessness against those not in accord with it. Aside from its practically complete control of the public press which is its most powerful ally—or rather tool, it has organized a nation wide force of house breakers property destroyers, murderers and thieves.

Not a state in the Union but has felt the monster's hands about the throat of the civil liberties of its citizens. Free speech is as dead in America as it was in Spain during the Inquisition. And the same methods, with variations, have been used to kill it. The entire machinery of the capitalist state has been subverted to the uses of that class which lives like a leech upon the mass of the people.

These extremes of reactionism are sowing a wind of revulvision among the radicals. The whirlwind of revolt is not far distant. More than one sign betokens the breaking of the storm. The excesses of reactionism are driving that great class of liberals and radicals that heretofore have stood upon a middle ground, against its will perhaps, but nevertheless, headlong into open and extreme rebellion against the monster, capitalism, that uses such means to retain its hold of greed upon a people struggling forward into a higher plane of human existence.

The radicals, and there are millions of them, may not desire the position they are being forced into, but social forces are the stronger, they will prevail. When the final accounting comes, their aid will be offered the workers in the rebuilding of a world for the use of the inhabitants instead of the profit of its parasites. The radicals will be made to turn "red" because no other recourse is being left them.

AMERICANIZATION?

An interesting sidelight is thrown on the Americanization question in the letter of resignation from the Americanization Committee of Ohio, tendered by State Representative George S. Myers. Mr. Myers charges that a political machine has gained control of the Americanization Committee of Ohio in the interest of the Republican Party. He states in his letter of resignation that the Americanization question is of too vital importance to allow it to become an object of exploitation for the benefit of any political party. Mr. Myers introduced the bill creating the Ohio Americanization Committee, which was supposed to be a non-partizan afair. Now that Mr. O. T. Carson, Republican, has been appointed state director at a salary of $5000 a year and expenses. Mr. Myers sees in his appointment the rise of a Republican political machine in control.

This will not be a surprise to any one familiar with the history of the two old parties. We can safely believe what ever they say about each other no matter how bad it is. One is as bad as the other, there is no choice between them as to moral qualities. If the Americanization matter should escape falling into the hands of the politicians of either party, it would be because the other beat them to it. Rest assured, the politicians are less interested in the question of Americanization than they are of gaining adherents to their own particular party. Politics first, citizenship last.

THE WORLD NEEDS HAPPINESS.

"So I returned and considered all the oppressions under the sun: and beheld the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter." Solomon the Preacher, Eccl. 1:1.

On the Siberian White front, a Red regiment has been captured. Their execution is about to occur. The sun is setting in the west, sending its long, slanting rays accross the open field where are assembled the soldiers and their captors. The air is still and laden with the scent of sweet northern flowers. The shadow of the village church with its group of sleepy poplars, their restless leaves now still in the evening calm, are thrown athwart the scene.

The Communists are made to dig their own graves, first being made to disrobe to save their clothes and shoes, (clothes are scarce and badly needed by the White Guards). At last the graves are dug and in the growing dusk a few are making their last requests, sending a last word to their wives.

"I ask one of them, what made a Communist of you? In a peculiarly stiff and cold manner he replies: 'The accursed life! The world needs happiness'.

"And on the side of their oppressors there was power". Oppression and powwer go together. Where there is no power there can be no oppression. This fact the Russian masses understood. For centuries they had seen the evidences of the power of their oppressors. Oppression of the masses was the chief method whereby their oppressors' power was made manifest. In peace or ware, oppression knocked daily at the doors of every workman and peasant's hut. He was the object of its oppression from his infancy to the hour that death ended his travail. And they had no comforter. The church took its stand with the oppressors.

At last the Russian masses threw off the oppressors' yoke. The Czar went down and out — it doesn't matter where, nor how. Kerensky, the compromiser, followed suit. The masses took upon themselves the direction of their own lives and the defense of their liberties. For two years they have maintained the government of their choice. Against capitalistic world imperialism, a national economy shattered by war and civil war against the reactionaries, they have not only stood their own but have grown to such power as to drive before them like chaff before the wind the last remnant of the armies of the White Guards.

Russia stands to-day the victor over her enemies whether within her borders or without. She is the master of her fate. For the first time in the world's history a nation of free men and women are working out their salvation, finding the road to happiness. The workers of the world may well rejoice at Russia's victory. Her victory is the victory of every worker. The oppressor has been stricken down, his power has been taken away. A nation of freemen now till Russias' soil, hammer at her anvils, sail her ships, sit in her councils, hold the power of Russia's and the world's fate in their hands.

Let the workers of the world rejoice, for the day of deliverance from all oppressors is near at hand. Let us inscribe upon our banners "All Power to the Workers", and under that banner march onward to the new world which has seen its birth in Russia.

DRAWING BLOOD.

Of course we know that many persons of doubtful character, such as editors of peanut capitalist papers, secret service men, gum shoe artists and other riff-raff of capitalism are on our mailing lists. We are aware that every thing we print, publish, or circulate finds its way into the hands of the reactionary elements who are attempting with the connivance of the government to throttle every exprssion of the workers for better conditions.

The Daily Times, Martins Ferry, O., an insignificant sheet which exists because of a generous use of "boiler plate" and borrowed editorials, expresses disapproval of us because of a circular letter from this office, which fell into its hands. We desire to express our appreciation of the little notice it gives us. We would much prefer disapproval from this source than approval.

The letter in question arouses the [illegible] patriotic flames in the editor's bosom, because of its demand for the release of political prisoners and its call upon the workers to unite in their support of the worker's press. The words "revolutionary Socialism" stirs the very dregs in the ink bottle of the Times' editor. The words, "Communist Propaganda League" arouses his most fervent censure.

We disclaim any intentions of opening the veins of any proponents of capitalism—our appeal was directed to those whom the present system exploits. But this evidence that we have drawn a little blood is proof to us that we are on the right track. When our acts are disapproved by those who desire a continuance of the profit system, we feel doubly certain that our life is not wasted. If the workers were as class conscious and as readily sensed danger to their class as do the capitalists, the class-war would soon reach a happy conclusion.

The good work of seperating all grafters and parasites from their victims will continue Mr. Times, and it behoves all such to get right with the workers while the getting is good.

PRESS FUND POINTERS

Press fund receipts have been rather lively these last few days. It is still a live matter in many comrades' minds, and therein lies a moral for some others. Never forget that we are going to have a printing plant of our own. Just put that under your hat band for it's bound to come true. Just keep it in mind—and boost the fund along with your donations. Remember this last.

Here are the latest donations.

Have you made the accquaintance of Mr. Block? Oh, yes you have met him in real life and now you should meet him in book form. One copy costs ten cents. Ten or more at 7½ cents each. Order ten and sell them.

Grand Rapids, Mich., is under the iron heel of despotism. Meetings are prohibited and the free American Kings are not allowed to assemble in numbers exceeding one. Nevertheless, comrade Vrector finds a way to aid the cause of industrial democracy. He remits $4.00 for various funds. That is the spirit that makes the Revolution speed. up

DEFENSE LEAGUE CELEBRATES DEBS' BIRTHDAY AT AKRON.

A very successful mass meeting was held here on Nov. 4th under auspices of the Workers Defense League which was the eve. of Debs' Birthday, in protest against the confinement and persecution of political and class war prisoners. Woodmans Hall was crowded and addresses were delivered by Sam Neuman, Holman and Charles Baker. All the speeches were good. Baker is always good but it is safe to say that he delivered a masterpiece on this occasion.

The workers are beginning to realize that their individual salavation depends on the welfare of the working-class as a whole and the imprisonment and persecution of one is bound to effect us all.

Yours for Industrial Freedom,
JAMES B. O'BRIEN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

GOVERNMENT WON'T RECOGNIZE BOLSHEVIK CONSUL.

From time to time efforts have been made to try to secure recognition by the Australian government of Mr. Peter Simonoff, the Soviet consul-general in Australia. So far, however, the Australian government has refused to do so. Mr. Simonoff is in the invidious position of having his mails stopped, and thus unable to get into touch with his country. He also stated that large sums of money cabled or sent to him have been withheld, while he is refused employment and has thus to rely on friends until such time as he can secure communication with his government.

MAN, RIGTHS AND LAND.

Man's rights and privileges should be as broad and liberal as possible, short of infringing upon or abridging the rights of others.

The rights of no individual should be allowed to abrogate that of another. If one man should own all the land of a nation, would it not interfere with the rights of others to own land?

If one man should own all the machinery of production and distribution would it not interfere with the rights of the rest of the people to own such machinery? Let use and occupancy be the only title to land and machinery.

SPARKS.

The Russian Branch of the Communist Party of Linn, Mass., consisting of 250 active members has withdrawn from that party and joined the Communist Labor Party.

On the day that the miners' officials stated flatly that the miners would not accept the 14 pet cent. [illegible] tendered them by the government and advertisement of one of Cleveland's banks stated that Americans should be thankful that the reconstruction in this country was not being attended by disorder and suffering like in other countries.

And the Plain Dealer lets the cat out of the bag after reciting the manifold blessings which had been showered upon the workers during the past year, by saying "response to charitable causes have been large, assuring necessities and comfort for the poor". Some "blessing" that! We hope the editor lives to get some of it.

We want to thank the many comrades for "The little boosts" they are sending in on the yellow slips with their renewals. Giving another worker a chance to learn what socialism is should be the first desire of every comrade. A trial subscription to The Toiler is a good way to do this.

Comrades J. H. Dickson and John Rehm of Springfield are still in the field for subscriptions we notice.

Local Toledo is on the job for subscriptions as a good big handful from comrade Toohey proves.

Many comrades who have become subscribers since the beginning of "The Black Sheep" are sending in for previous copies of the paper containing the first installments. This story is becoming more interesting with each chapter and we are certain it will be well liked by our readers.

Are your dues paid up? Better do it now comrade.

We don't know where it is, but we now have two subscribers there Sandyville, O. And all due to comrade A. C. Holshoy. Thanks comrade.

Comrade Berinhaut, of Jacksonville, Fla., orders 50 copies of Industrial Autocracy. Have YOU read it, it's by Mary Marcy, being so, it is worth your while to read it.

Just an even dozen subs from comrade C. M. Savage of Crookesville, O. Some boost, say we. And what comrade Savage has done in his town YOU can do in yours. Fill up that sub blank comrade. Get onthe job.

THE NEW DAY

A Constitution should limit a people in but one acknowledged liberty—the liberty to vote their liberty away.

Democracy is chiefly dependent upon intelligence. Granted—full liberty and justice, it would not take very long for an ignorant people to vote their liberties away under the cajoling of crafty politicians.

I am led to wonder why we have no better means of refuting the lies of the kept press. Weekly papers cannot complete with the great chain of capitalist dailies. But I hear many inquiries for a DEPENDABLE SEMI-WEEKLY socialist paper. Especially is this true in the country districts.

Among tests being sent out by various committees, endeavoring to learn what the American people really desire, none will receive such unanimus endorsement as accupational representation. By occupational representation of farmers for instance, they representing 40 per cent. of the population would be allowed that representation. The same rule applying to wage workers, legitimate and professional men.

The six hour day ond five day week are destined to become an established fact of American life. This would permit of making Saturady a national holiday for wage workers, giving them one day in the week on which to transact their personal business without loss of regular time. Now a worker can scarcely get a money order without loss of time and wages.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CENTRALIA.

Again the Northwestern Coast has been forced into the limelight of publicity by the tragedy at Centralia on Armistice Day. True to form, the capitalist press has sent broadcast its vilifications and lies concerning the occurences which took place there. It has attempted to place responsibility for the deaths of four men upon the I. W. W. Its statements have been as wide of the truth as it was possible to go and now that the truth is becomming known it has had to publish absolute refutations of its first statements.

Instead of the marchers being fired upon by I. W. W. snipers from roofs of houses, as stated in the capitalist press, we now know that no shots were fired until some of the marchers, led by members of the American Legion attacked the I. W. W. headquarters and kicked down the door. It was then that the secretary and other members of the I. W. W. defended their lives and the property of the organization by shooting dead within the doorway four of the raiders and wounding seven more.

DEFENDANT JUSTIFIED, SAYS LEGION COMMANDER.

Edward Bassett, Commander of the Butte Montana, Post of the American Legion, declares in the following statement to the press that the I. W. W. was justified in defending its property and the lives of its members against raiders.

> "The I. W. W. in Centralia, Wash., who fired upon the men that were attempting to raid the I. W. W. headquarters were fully justified in their act.
> "Mob rule in this country must be stopped and when mobs attack the home of a millionaire, of a laborer, or of the I. W. W., it is not only the right but the duty of the occupants to resist with every means in their power. If the officers of the law can not stop those raids, perhaps the resistance of the raided may have that effect.
> "Whether the I. W. W. is a meritorious organization or not, whether it is unpopular or otherwise, should have absolutely nothing to do with the case.
> The rports of the evidence at the coroner's jury show that the attack was made before the firing started. If that is true, I commend the boys inside for the action that they took.

Well may the reactionaries ponder the words of Commander Bassett, for he speaks the common mind upon the question of unlawful raids and mob rule. Workers are beginning to resent the supplanting of the legal machinery of the nation by mob rule. The action of the I. W. W. at Centralia is an example to working men to put a stop to the unlawful raiding of halls, the destruction of life and property of the workers to satisfy the insane and unsocial proclivities of reactionary lawless mobs.

The coroner's inquest over the bodies of the four dead Legionaries declares that the attack was made before the firing started. And there is other mute, but incontrovertible evidence of the nature of the assault. The blood stains from wounds of the dead are upon the floor of the I. W. W. headquarters—not upon the pavement of the street. Altho the front of the building was wrecked by the mob after the shooting in an ffort to destroy the evidence that the building was entered by assault, this blood testimony will irrefutably prove the lawlessness of those who lost lives in an assault upon the legal rights of a labor organization and a fellow man.

Wesley Everetts, the returned fighted from over seas, and his comrades who sat in the headquarters and defended themselves and their organization against the raiders with the weapons used in the war for democracy, struck a blow for real democracy when they turned the weapons upon their assailants. It is true Everetts paid the penalty with his life. In the darkness of night the mob hanged him and riddled his dead body with bullets after dragging it thru the street of the town. His comrades were taken from jail where they had been unlawfully thrown and made to dig his grave; and thus was covered over in hate the evidence of lawlessness.

The truth is coming out and when this Centralia tragedy is aired in the courts, and the full and complete facts published, we shall learn that the I W W lawfully resisted the invasion of its legal rights.

There is one aspect of this case that workers should bear in mind. Where the property and lives of the workers are endangered by lawless mobs and raiders bent upon violation of the law, and no other recourse is possible, the workers must defend their lives and their unions at whatever cost.. . .

Workers must resist mob violence with all the power at their command. The right of sanctuary against unlawfulness must be upheld and if the present reactionary movement in America takes recourse to violation of law in its desperate attempts to throttle the workers in their struggle against political and economic despotism, let the workers defend their rights and their legal status at all costs.

Workers, keep the law by defending yourself against unlawfulness.

Let Centralia be a warning to reactionism.

X-MAS GIFTS FOR PRISONERS.

Comrades and frieds of prisoners at Atlanta Federal Prison will be glad to learn that presents may be sent to prisoners for X-mas and New Year between these dates—Dec. 20th to Dec. 31st. Included in the list of articles which may be sent are—candies, fruits, chewing gum, cigars and tobacco in reasonable quantities in addition to articles generally allowed. Cigars and tobacco must arrive with revenue stamps unbroken. Cooked foods should not be sent owing to possible delay in heavy Xmas mails. Send your packages early. Remember the comrades at Atlanta.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

Our fathers—in the days when each man followed his plow and rarely met folks except on Sunday when he went to church and visited the graveyard for recreation—were not disturbed much by ethical social problems.

Today the economic compulsion to break the Ten Commandments is almost overwhelming, and multitudes of weak men go down before it.

What would you do if you were in the army and you were ordered to withhold food from starving women and babies?

What would you do if you were a longshoreman and you were ordered to handle munitions billed for Siberia, which you believed would be used to destroy your brother workmen?

What would you do if you were a traffic manager of a railroad and your heaviest shipper threatened to withdraw his business if you did not grant him rebates?

What would you do if you were an editor and big advertisers threatened to withdraw their "ads" if you did not change your editorial policy?

What would you do if you were a college professor with a family and a reputation if the regents gave you a hint to change your teaching or get the grand bounce?

What would you do if you were a school director and big business demanded the dropping of a teacher, whom in your heart you believed to be a first-rate teacher and a man maligned by selfish interests?

Verily, our fathers were not compelled to face such knotty problems! Strong men as well as weak are falling before such temptations.

And yet for a Real Man the path is so simple.

Will refuse to participate in the business of starving babies;

Will refuse to contribute to the death of his fellow workers;

Will refuse to grant rebates;

Will consign the big hold-up advertisers to the tender mercies of the "devil";

Will refuse to scrape to the regents;

Will refuse to fire a teacher at the dictation of big business.

Why will a Real Man act this way?

Because he intends to remain master of his own soul!—Seattle Union-Record.

RADICALISM RAMPANT IN DUTCH SCHOOLS

By W. J. L. Kiehl

AMSTERDAM.—A "bond" or union of revolutionary social intellectuals has been inaugurated and the names of the members of the executive board have been published.

This union works in conjunction with communistic teachers' organizations and revolutionary socialist students' organizations in Holland. From persons whose sons are studying in the Dutch universities I learn that many students are imbued with bolshevism and that the communistic propaganda is very strong.

Two professors in the Amsterdam university are known to be "Idealist Bolsheviki," and in the Delft Technical University communism is popular. The new union will seek connections with similar organizations in other countries.

CALIFORNIA EXECUTIVES UNDER ARREST.

Officials of the Communist Labor Party of California were placed under arrest by government agents last week and charged with violations of the state criminal syndicalism law. Those arrested are: State Secretary, James Dolson; J. E. Snyder, Editor of The Oakland World; Robert Whitaker, Edric Smith, John Taylor, former State Secretary, Cyrus Tobey and Max Bedact. Comrade Max Bedact was just preparing to leave for New York where he was to edit Communist Labor, the new national organ of The Communist Labor Party. Most of the comrades, we understand are now out on bail.

Gompers is now finding out from the government the same truths the reds have been trying to teach him for many years.

THE MARTYR.

Ye have made martyrs for me,
Gods of the false and true;
Ye have set great souls free
And lighted our lamps anew!
Ye and your priests have killed
Those whe defied your ranks;
I drink of the blood ye have spilled—
I drink and I give you thanks!

Down through the centuries, strung
On crucifix, gibbet and pyre,
Your scarlet pictures are hung
Of those who have dared your fire!
The Chirst, with His hands outhrust—
His dead by the Tiber's banks—
And now the arena is dust,
For the Martyr I give you thanks!

For every heretic burned,
For every heart ye have split,
For every key ye have turned,
A million lamps have ye lit!
And, lo! as the cities that flame
Where the blackened streams have their banks,
So your dead call us each by name—
For the Martyr I give you thanks!

Has your crucifix murdered Christ?
Have your jails swallowed up one dream?
Has Spain and the stake sufficed
To darken one lamplight's gleam?
I give you the world today;
Will ye gaze on the age-long ranks?
For the Martyr I give you thanks!
Is it Christ, is it Debs, ye would slay?

LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS, LET US HAVE THE TRUTH

Was the killing of four men and the wounding of several others at Centralia, Wash., on Armistice day, Nov. 11, 1919, a cold-blooded slaughter of inoffensive individuals, or were these persons members of an unlawful mob engaged in an unwarrated attack upon a peaceable place and killed by the lawful occupants of that place in the defense of their own lives? That is the question uppermost in the mind of every fair-minded person. That question will be threshed out at the coming trial of the 11 men indicted for the killing of Warren Grimm at Centralia.

The truth regarding what actually happened at Centralia on Armistice day is being suppressed. Facts considered favorable to the accused are not allowed to find their way into the news columns, eye-witness to the affair are forbidden to talk or fear to speak out, and legal representatives of the prisoners are denied the privelege of being in the town.

Centralia and nearby towns are no longer governed by civil authority, but are ruled absolutely by armed forces that are running things at the point of the gun. As an instance of the existing state of affairs the case of Reinhardt, an Associated Press representative, is worthy of note. He attended the coroner's inquest over the bodies of the dead men and sent out the story of the testimony of Dr. Frank Bickford, who swore that the I. W. W. hall was attacked by himself and others, and that only after the door of the hall had been kicked in did the shooting comence. For sending out this news Reinhardt was run out of Centralia, being compelled to leave his personal belongings behind.

Strangers coming into Centralia on trains are closely questioned and if an explanation satisfactory to the questionaries is not forthcoming they are not permitted to remain. In short the truth regarding the Centralia affair is beleagured by a circle of guns in the hands of usurped authority, and those who might speak that truth are compelled to silence. Later they will be heard, for truth will speak, even though ringed with walls of bayonets.

The men in jail sturdily declared that they defended themselves against attack. The capitalist press asserts that the prisoners deliberately fired upon the passing parade, without provocation and, as one paper says, "because the parade was made up of returned soldiers."

Outside of the facts that will be related by eye witnesses later on hand the testimony of Dr. Bickford, who swore the hall was attacked before any shots were fired, let us examine the contention of the capitalist press, that members of the I. W. W. fired upon the parade because it was composed of returned soldiers.

It is entirely beyond reason to suppose that eight or ten men would deliberately agree (as they must do) to station themselves for the sole purpose of firing on paraders from whom they had nothing to fear. Sane men would not do such a thing and for anyone to suppose that these men did fire from so slim a motive he must first judge them to be insane.)The authorities so far have raised no question of the prisoners' sanity.) And if they were insane how does it occur that so many insane people could come to an agreement on the matter of killing returned soldiers? How could they have curbed this insanity during the year just past when the streets of every town and city were filled with marching soldiers, returning from the war? Why pick out a small town like Centralia when the streets of Seattle and Tacoma were full of uniforms? Centralia, of all places, where there was no hope of escape.

Sane men, to the number of eight or ten, would not deliberately organize or plot a killing of harmless paraders—insane men could not. The contention of the capitalist press is ridiculous. It is beyond reason. It is a lie—told to shield the real criminals, who are responsible for these deaths at Centralia.

Let us now deal with a few things regarding the parade that marched through the streets of the town. First, it is well known that the parade marched in sections—a section composed of people who participated been active in those places against the anniversary of the armistice, and another section specially composed of specially invited persons, from Aberdeen and other towns, who had been active in those laces against the Industrial Workers of the World. These outsiders, together with Centralians likewise opposed to the I. W. W., were all in one section and marched near the rear of the parade. Bear this in mind; it is significant, when considered in connection with other

MOB RULE, THE NEWEST AMERICAN TERROR.

The reactionism that has swept over American civil life since the signing of the Armistice has now reached the stage of mob rule and mob law. During the war American workingmen and women laid aside their historic and vaunted liberties in order that the war might be brought to a successful conclusion for the Allies. Now they find that instead of their boasted liberties and Constitional guarantees of free speech and assembly and the right of santuary within their homes, being restored they have been practically annulled altogether. They are now not only denied these Constitutional guarantees, they are subject to mob violence as well.

Of all the manifestations of social unrest none are more menacing to public welfare, none are more destructive of civil liberty and civil rights than mob rule. It is the most debasing of all human activities, the most outrageously corrupt and venal. It is an open challenge to all order and government by law. Let us consider well, its meaning berofe we countenance it.

Reactionsm in America has welcomed it with open arms, has encouraged it with the corrupt press and other mouthpieces of the ruling class. The mob is the henchman of privelege, the handmaiden of corruption. The ruling class has enthroned it as an object of veneration and has condoned all its depravities in the name of Americanism and democracy. If mob rule spells Americanism, deliver us from it, for we prefer rule by law however unjust rather than lawlessness and irresponsibility.

To all who have the highest interests of our Constitutional guarantees at heart must look on with grave apprehension at the growth of the mob idea and the supplanting of legal processes by its insane and reprehensible activities. As surely as it is allowed to continue, so shall American liberties be at last laid to rest in the grave of reactionism. The monster must be slain. To allow its continuance is to court disaster and destruction of the few remaining liberties left an outraged and exploited class.

In every historical epoch it is the class that is down, the class that is attempting to rise from under its burdens of exploitation and injustice that holds aloft the torch of liberty. It is the class which is rising into power that offers to a stricken world the balm that shall heal its wounds, not the class that a social system has fattened, and rendered useless that bears upon its banners [illegible] emblems of hope and life for the world.

It is to this class—the wroking class—that we appeal to render harmless the insane activities of this implement of reactionism—the mob. It is the workers against whom its activities are bent. It is their homes that are invaded, their meetings that are broken up, their halls that are enterd and sacked, it is their leaders and organizers who are mobbed and shot and hanged. The remedy is in the hands of the workers. Meet the mob upon their own ground. Where it trespasses stand upon your rights. Where it breaks the laws, keep the law by defending yours and others rights. Demand and keep your legal status by refusing to countenance by non-resistence the encroachments of this monstrous iniquity and tool of the ruling class to further subjugate you.

We did not go to that School

We know a lot of people these days that are making a heap of noise about a revolution. They hear their own noise and think they hear the revolution — but we think they are mistaken.

Economic conditions force revolutions. Any single individual that thinks he can precipitate a revolution in any country where the economic conditions have not built up a public opinion favorable to a social revolution is not only badly mistaken but is positively a menace to the political and industrial organized labor movements.

The shouting of catch and revolutionary phrases has become an obsession of late in too many camps of the labor movement. It is true that a minority did engineer a successful revolution in Russia — and some hot heads are trying to tell us that the same thing can be done here. Let us examine the conditions a bit and see where we are at before we start something.

In Russia the strong centralist government had been overthrown by the combined labor forces and the small business element which desired a more democratic form of government. A provisional government was established but before it could become well intrenched it in turn was overthrown by a small minority — BUT that minority had the SYMPATHY and the MORAL support of the general public. In other words it had no opposition except for the bourgeoisie and the Allied governments interested in maintaining the stability of the old Russian bonds.

In addition to the foregoing, the ecohomic life of the country had broken down, jobs were scarce or not to be had, food was scarce and extremely high in price, the army [illegible] in a state of mutiny, in fact had mutinied and left the front for home — bringing their arms with them. Don't overlook that point, vast numbers of the Russian proletariat were armed.

Conditions here are slightly different.

Instead of four years of enervating war we had four years of war profits, increased wages and employement for everybody. Instead of an anti-patriotic wave as in Russia the American proletaria has had two years of intensified patriotic propaganda. Instead of the psychology of defeat, the American proletariat, forgets his sugarless days of high prices and wage slavery in the psychology of victory!

The American proletariat is unarmed.

In view of these differences in environment, it seems to us that any organization or anybody foolish enough to think the conditions in this country are ripe for revolution is an enemy of the class war, and by propaganda is harming more than helping the cause of the freedom of those who toil.

The great mass must be educated at least to a condition of class consciousness. They must be organized and by organized we mean welded into a force with powers of resistance so they may meet the capitalist on terms of equality, not as bluffers or as suppliants. This kind of an organization can only be builded through a systematic plan of study classes.

This talk of mass action by a minority is foolish.

If freedom from wage slavery [illegible]

Judge Insane, when he Jailed Texas Socialist

The judge who sentenced Flora I. Foreman, the Socialist teacher who is now serving a term at McAlister, Okla., under the Espionage act was insane at the time he tried her, a year ago. Immediately after imposing the five-year sentence he returned to his home at Fort Worth ,Tex., and from there was taken to a lunatic asylum in California.

This information reached the Workers Defense Union, 7 East 15th street through one of the attorneys who defended Mrs. Foreman in the Federal court in Amarillo, Tex. Because the judge is insane it has been difficult to perfect an appeal in the case.

Although President Wilson has reduced her term to two years, it is feared that the ordeal since her conviction and the months of incarceration before she came to trial may endanger the life of the woman.

Reported as 'Disloyal."

She is a frail woman and had gone South in the hope of restoring her impaired health. There she was reported to government agents as "disloyal," in consequence of remarks she had made in private conversation with another woman.

The story, as it reached the defense group, is that the charge was lodged by a soldier who had been jilted by a friend of Mrs. Foreman. The worst statement she was charged with having made was that she had refused to become a member of the Red Cross, and was not afraid to say so, and that they coul go and tell the "little school teacher in Washington" how she felt about it.

After her arrest, while in a health resort away from all friends, the government agents constructed a technical disloyalty charge, the lawyer said, upon which a demented Federal judge based his sentence. His attitude is evident in the following quotation from the lawyer's letter:

"Mrs. Foreman was tried at Amarillo, Texas, in the Federal Court, charged with violating the espionage law. The judge of that court convicted her. Of course, the jury might have convicted her anyway. It was a time of hysteria.

"Walked All Over Us."

"But the judge walked al lover us. We were not permitted to try the case at all. He took the witnesses away from us and cross-examined them, and then told the jury what he thought of their testimony. He threatened several times to put us in jail, and I left the courtroom to file a petition to have him examined for insanity. However, after the trial he went home to Fort Worth, and from there was sent to an insane asylum in California, where he has been ever since.

"I sent in to the President of the United States a petition with several long lists of subscribers. I also sent a personal letter setting out the facts and what took place at the trial. Since that time I have heard nothing. If anybody should be pardoned, this woman should be. Whether she was guilty or not, she did not have a fair trial."

AMNESTY DEMAND MUST BE ALL-INCLUSIVE

Roger Baldwin.

Of course I am with you in your efforts for a general amnesty. Every bit of agitation to that end is good. We cannot succeed by mere petitioning on the grounds of justice—but we can succeed by continuous and determined demonstrations of power. Our friends and Comrades will never be released until we force their release by our indignant resistance. Only the desire to allay the unrest which their imprisonment causes will move the Washington Defenders of Things-as-They-Are to action.

We must not neglect a single victim of the war persecutions in our demands. Let us not forget that the I. W. W. have been hit the hardest—that practically all their leaders and hundreds of the workers are in prison or out on bail. Their cases are practically the same as the others—and the wartime statutes were even more pervertedly applied to reach them. We must not hesitate to specify the I. W. W. class-war prisoners in our demands—as well as the victims of the Espionage Act and the military courts.

We must make our demands uncompromising, definite, all-inclusive. We cannot trust in the slightest any sense of "justice" on the part of the authorities. We can only trust the organized power of labor and the friends of freedom to make their protest so united, so resounding, that the powers that be will fear not to heed it.

AT LAST AN AMERICAN SOCIALIST REVIEW!

Of exceptional interest in socialist and radical circles is the appearance of the long awaited first issue of "THE SOCIALIST REVIEW" a monthly record of socialist and radical progress in thought and action the world over. The Intercollegiate Socialist Society, publishers of the new REVIEW, feeling its quarterly organ, THE INTERCOLLEGIATE SOCIALIST no longer sufficed to meet the growing public interest in socialism, decided to venture upon a monthly. THE SOCIALIST REVIEW does not pretend to be a propagandist organ. Its aim is to become an invaluable record and survey of significant industrial and political occurences, by which our present effete social system will eventually be charged to one more worthy of human effort. In this fact will lie the unique value and service of THE SOCIALIST REVIEW to all sections of the socialist movement.

52 CANDITATES ELECTED TO PARLIAMENT.

NEW YORK.—Fifty- two socialists will be members of the incoming Norwegian parliament, the Socialist Party at the recent general elections having polled 250,000 votes.

The party stands without reserve on the side of the Bolsheviki, and recently dispatched Egede Nissen, one of the best known of the Norwegian leaders, to Moscow.

The party is strongly anti militaristic. Some months ago formally ordered the constitution of soldiers' soviets by all men liable for military service.

MANY YANKS IN HOSPITALS.

WASHINGTON.—Altho a year has passed since the war ended for most Americans, there are still 18,000 war victims in army hospitals in this country and 1,900 in overseas hospitals.

For these wounded Americans the war is still a thing of reality. With them the cost of the conflict is not a mere memory.

Latest figures of the War Department show 18,500 patients in army hospitals in the United States, the majority, overseas cases, 977 in France, 515 in Germany, 403 in Siberia.

Most of the men still in overseas hospitals are those whose condititition is too serious to permit transfer to this country. Officials say they will be brought home as quickly as possible.

Keeping foremost the fact that 116,492 American soldiers died in the service since April 6, 1917, and that of these 39,585 were killed on the field and 14,742 died of wounds, figures show the burden of long suffering in hospitals and physical disability fell upon comparatively few men, officials say.

DEMOCRACY.

Democracy, Oh where art thou for whom our blood was shed?
Art thou in Atlanta prison with our beloved Debs?
Or perhaps in North Dakota,
where they have tried our Kate.
Surely not in San Quientin to share Tom Mooneys fate.

Democracy, Oh where art thou for whom we bought the bonds?
Pray tell us where to find you
if on this side the pond.
We have looked in all the civil courts where justice should be found,
And nothing but injustice to labor have we found.

Democracy, Oh where art thou
for whom we gave our sons?
Perhaps we were mistaken,
when we went and whipped the Huns.
We thought we were fighting for freedom of all the world as one
That men might write and men
Might talk but can't do either one.

Democracy, Oh where art thou
for whom our brothers fell?
If thou art present in this land that we all love so well,
Pray make thy presence known and to the public tell
Why so many of our loved ones
now occupy a cell?

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yakima county; E. B. Preble, judge.

Henry [illegible] was convicted of manslaughter and appeals. Affirmed.

Frank A. Luse and E. J. Snively, for appellant. J. Lenox Ward and Harold B. Bilbert for the state.

Parker, J. This defendant was charged by information in the superior court for Yakima county with murder in the first degree, by the killing of John Menbour. Upon a trial before the court and a jury, the defendant was convicted of manslaughter, from which he has appealed to this court.

1. Upon the trial evidence was introduced in behalf of appealant tending to show that the homicide was justifiable, in that it was committed by appealant in lawfully defending himself against an assault made upon him by the deceased. This called for instructions to the jury upon the law of justifiable homicide. Touching the grounds of apprehension of danger upon which the defendant might kill his assailant, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"A person attacked at a place where he has a right to remain need not retreat, but may repel force by force in a defense of his person against one who at the time is actually, or apparently, intending or endeavoring, unlawfully, to kill him or to inflict upon him great personal injury, and in such defense the assailed may lawfully meet the attack made upon him in such a way and with such force as, under the circumstances, he at the moment honestly believes, and has reasonable grounds to believe, are necessary to save his own life or to protect himself from great personal injury; and in such defense the assailed may lawfully kill the assailant, if at the time he is actually or apparently in imminent danger of death or great personal injury at his assailant's hands, and if, under all the circumstance, he honestly believes, and has reasonable grounds to believe, such killing to be necessary to save his own life or to protect him from great personal injury."

BOLSHEVIKS EXEMPT C. O's.

A remarkable document has been published in the Daily Herald, Lenin's decree relating to conscientious objectors, in which these are exempted from military service whose religious beliefs prevent them from taking part in, and alternative service if the United Council of Moscow Religious groups and Communities prove a satisfactory claim for such complete exemption to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee. This gives the lie to those who in the Times and elsewhere are at such pains to prove that the Soviet government is oppressing religious beliefs.

Even Kerensky, the discarded tool of Allied imperialism, is permitted to speak out against Kolchak, Denikin and Yudenitch, his successors in Allied favor, now themselves about to be discarded. "Arround these three", says Kerensky, according to the London Daily News, "are gathered all the scoundrels of the old regime . . . There is no crime that has not been committed by agents of Kolchak against the population. Documents, such as I have, illustrate the barbarous conditions in which the people are living under these savages. . . . The administration of the country is reduced to a shameless and unpunished system of pillage." An American official, quoted in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, adds this testimony after a two month's tour of inspection through Siberia: "I talked with a great veriety of people—the Czechs, our railway service men, refugees, and to people living in the villages, as well as to French and British representatives stationed in the towns between Omsk and Vladivostok. I did not find a single person who said that Kolchak had any popular support . . . His name is being used by the most disreputable lot of scoundrels that has ever got any opportunity to exploit a poor, starving, defenseless people." Finally, the Czecho-Slovaks, who were made the pretext of intervention, have publicly implored the Allies to allow them to leave Siberia: "Our army has been forced against its convictions to support a state of absolute despotism and unlawfulness . . The military authorities of the Government of Omsk are permitting criminal actions that will stagger the entire world. The burning of villages, the murder of masses of peaceful inhabitants, and the shooting of hundreds of persons of democratic convictions, and also those only suspected of political disloyalty, occur daily.'

Mr. Isaac Don Levine's recent dispatches have described the nature of Denikin's rule, whose pogroms were so horrible, says the London Nation, that the English soldiers "could hardly be restrained from firing on him."

Such are the men to whom the American and Allied Governments have been extending sympathetic support. That support is being withdrawn now, not from any humanitarian scruples, but because the Red Army has demonstrated the imposibility of all attempts to conquer the Revolution and because the economic and social forces of the world have overwhelmed the designs of the reactionary rulers.

NO NEWSPAPERS FOR DEBS.

To the editor of the Nation:

Sir: In behalf of Eugene Debs, as well as for myself, I wish to thank you for having had THE NATION sent to his prison cell. Ever since his removal to Atlanta all papers and periodicals, including the Nation, are denied him; and he is not allowed even newspapers clippings, enclosed in letters. The other day I enclosed in a letter to him a small newspaper cut of the proposed building to be erected at Indianapolis by the Comrades, which is to be known as the "House of Debs", but before the letter was delivered the little picture was removed therefrom.

It is quite evidently the purpose of the Administration to cut him off completely from the outside world in the ardent hope of breaking his spirit. Of course he is permitted to read light fiction furnished by the prison library, but in these days when history is being written as never before, this is as nourishing and satisfying to the mentality of a student of events as skimmed milk is to the body of a famished child.

Several years ago Gene planted a little peach tree in his yard. It struggled for existence, but with careful nursing it survived. This year for the first time it bore a few peaches. Knowing the care Gene had bestowed upon this little tree, Mrs. Debs packed half a dozen of the peaches and sent them to him in care of the Warden. They were not delivered, although at the very time he had just been removed from his cell to the hospital.

Philosophy.

"I know not whether laws be right,
Or whether laws be wrong.
All that I know who lie in jail
Is that the wall is strong;
And that each day is like a year,
A year whose days are long."

This in a declamatory voice at about five-thirty in the morning, from Rudolph's cell, awakened Jack and Collins from their slumbers. It also awakened the temper of the latter. Collins was not fond of esthetics when at his ease, and when irritated he shared none of the sentiments so dear to the average radical. Unless he happened to be exactly in the right mood, he had an absolute aversion for what he termed the aberrations of an effete culture. He often said that poetry and novels were written by men who had nothing better to do to be read by people who could do nothing better.

"Say, what in hell do you mean by spouting your wheresome poetry at this time of the night! Do you begrudge a fellow what little sleep he can get in this infernal hole? O, if I could get at yuh, I'd slou you in the mush," thundered the big man from off his bunk in the opposite cell.

"Oh, well!" retorted Rudolph," you don't need to be so peevish about it. Its nearly broad dayligth. Its time to get up." Then after a pause

"If you were in this cell all alone, you too might want to give vent to some sort of expression."

"Why don't you do like the rats—gnaw the bars. It will keep your jaws busy and not disturb us." This said, the big man turned over and drew the ragged quilt about his shoulder and once more attempted to sleep. This proved to be impossible. Rudolph's eloquence had banished the fingers of Morpheus from his eyes. Jack too, was wide awake, and in contradistinction to his cell mate, not peeved. In fact he was rather interested in the subject matter of the poem. The days for him had been rather short; his companions keeping his mind busy with a recital of the wonderful phenomena in the social world.

He asked Rudolph from what poem this stanza was quotted and received the information that is was a part of the ballad of 'Reading Gaol" by Oscar Wilde, who was, as Rudolph averred one of the lord's of language of the last century.

"Oscar is one of Rudie's heroes," sneered Collins who was still in bad spirits.—"One of your temperamental artistic gents."

"Yes, that's right. Oscar Wilde is one of my literary heroes, but for all that I do not appreciate your inuendo that I would want him for a cell mate," protested Rudolph.

"Who was this Oscar Wilde?" asked Jack.

"A degenerate," snapped Collins.

"An artist," explained Rudolph.

"Well in ninety cases out of a hundred it amounts to the same thing,," Collins growled.

"What you really mean is that Mr. Wilde awakens strong convitions either for or against himself. He must have been an interesting personality. Tell me more about him," remarked the boy.

"He was a great writer of poerty and drama," Rudolph explained. A man with a splendid sense of the beautiful, in nature, in language and in man, but this weakness got him into trouble. I might describe him best if I said that he wrote splendid books but lived a rotten life." Then after a moments reflection, "no the last part would be too strong. His life was not so bad, he simply had an abominable weakness."

"I might say of you Rudolph," Jack observed, "what Huxley said of Gladstone, that you retreat under a cloud of words. From what you say I cannot make out whether Mr. Wilde's weakness was worms or wiggles."

Collins explained to Jack in the commonest of common language just in what Wilde's weakness consisted. After which the boy wanted to know more about the man and his books.

Rudolph explained to him that the man was dead. That he died as a result of a prison sentence imposed upon him for his weakness but that his books could be found in every library public and private throuout the English speaking world; that they had been translated into nearly all civilized languages; that they were read and admired by cultured and rafined minds everywhere. To which Jack replied that in that case it would be well to consider the books apart from the man. To think of him only a great author, the products of whose brain had enriched the world and forget his weakness which after all did not enter into his books.

"Let us forget his life and remember his work for their beauties sake," said the boy.

"I cannot appreciate anything [illegible]," Collins said. "I cannot read a line he penned without thinking of his infernal degeneracy."

Oh, you Christian," sneered Rudolph.

"I am no Christian," the other retorted.

"No, you mean you're no Church Member, but you are as fanatic as any Jesus lover I ever knew. You are a free will Christian, and nothing else can be made out of you."

"You're crazy," roared Collins, "I hate christianity as much as you do and you know it."

Rudolph agreed that this was technically true, but asserted that when it came to showing the spirit of intolerance he was a regular Calvin. "Take your stand on the drink question, you are as extreme as a howling methodist," Rudolph said. Then continued "You know that the drink appetite is a physiological condition. That its victim cannot resist the temptation even tho he see the faces of his starving children in the glass. Cursing his weakness he gets drunk. He ruins his health, impoverishes his kids, while crying to his God for help. But he is a dipsomaniac; his body has an affinity for drink as ether has for air. He cannot help being what the forces of heredity made him. Yet, you who call yourself a radical and a liberal, curse your fellow worker whose appetite differs from your own. You call them every name on the calender as if they were victims from choice instead of from circumstance. Imitating the christians you make everybody but yourself a heretic. No Collins dear, you may not be a christian, but if you are not, then you are a Jew or a Mohammedan, or a Brahmin or perhaps a Voodist, but youre no radical, you are no scientist, you are no idealist, you are too damned intolerant; you are good at condemning but you never make an effort to understand for if ever you learn to understand then you would learn to forgive."

"Yes and you are Christian also, for you talk about forgiveness. Your consistency is something wonderful," snapped Collins, and he leaped out of his bed as a tiger leaps at his prey. "To forgive means to surrender, and surrender means death. You'd burden yourself with so much human waste that you'd be smothered in the filth of your own choosing. I've told you on several occassions that I don't hate these vermin, I only seek to eliminate them from my environment. I hate vermin, high brow and low brow. That's the reason I'm against them. They hinder me in the struggle for existence, that is all. That's enough."

Rudolph's sally had made Collins too angry to answer with his costumary coherence. He trailed off into mutterings about the inability of the workers to center their minds on a common purpose because they tolerated within their ranks these elements who placed their own personal appetites and ideas above the common good. "Try to hold a meeting for the purpose of fighting the boss with one third of the membership soused and the other third filled with poetic dream stuff and capitalist lies, you have just one third who are ready and willing to fight the master, loaded down with two thirds of their own numbers in the shape of physical and and mental nincompoops."

Jack, who had been listening to both of them now asked Rudolph what he had to answer the big man.

"You understand that drunkness is a result of a peculiar body chemistry which people inherit from their ancestors, therefore the owners of such bodies are constantly in danger of having their brain befuddled thru yielding to their inborn craving. I know that a drunken man is dangerous. But the bread and butter question is not an individual proposition; it is wholly collective in its nature. Drunk and sober must solve it together. I have told Collins many a time that if you don't take drunkards into organization they will scab on us and help break your power. Then where are you going to get men enough to build an organization who don't drink. We must deal with people as they are and not as we want them to be.

Jack, still wrapped in his blanket laughed good naturedly, "Oh, oh! you poor fish! You get on the track of truth and when you get in sight of it, you shy like a broncho colt. Neither of you have the necessary guts to be real scientists; both of you are seeking the light blindfolded; for fear that if you should find it, it would reveal to you your naked impotence. For two weeks I have listened to your arguments and tried to test them in the light of reason, and when all is

THE RIGHT TO RESIST INVASION.

The right of a man to protect his life is rooted in the first instinct—the desire to live. We do not think anyone, except some extreme Tolstoyans, question this right.

The right of a man to protect himself from injury is rooted in the second instinct—the desire for comfort. We do not think anyone but the extreme pacifist question this right

The only question that arises in the manifestation of these instincts is: How far may a man go in the defense of his life or the safety of his person?

We will all agree that a burglar that enters a house by stealth takes his life in his own hands and if, being discovered, he kills the householder, HE IS GUILTY OF MURDER, though he may have been defending himself from the assaults of the enraged citizen. The burglar was an invader and acting in the first place with an unlawful purpose and the counter attack of the householder was a justified assault, since it was in the defense of his residence.

But if the householder had slain the burglar he could at most be guilty only of a manslaughter and it would have to be shown even then that the citizen knew that he could have captured the thief with the use of ordinary force and strategy.

Where a man has been threatened, either with or without cause, if he retire into his house or other place where he may lawfully be, it is evidence that he had no desire for a brawl and that he sought peace by avoiding the opportunity for a quarrel. If, after threats have been made against a man, the place into which he had retired for the purpose of avoiding a brawl shall be attacked, then he may defend himself. The major question will be, was there an attack with force? And not, was the life of the man in danger, or was his bodily safety threatened?

It is a fact that no man may gauge the temper of a mob and a man attacked by a boisterous crowd in a place where he may lawfully be cannot be expected to enquire if their intentions be mild or violent—if he has been previously threatened, he may reasonably expect that the intention of the mob is of the most violent character and he is justified in taking measures for his own protection.

It is beside the question to say that the person assaulted could have avoided the assault in his lawful refuge by abandoning the place and seeking safety in flight. The question is, was an unlawful assault made upon the place and was it made in such force that the person taking a lawful refuge there would be justified in believing that he was about to suffer extreme violence at the hands of the invaders?

The question then may arise, what is a lawful refuge? If a man is attacked in the street and he steps into a store or other public place to avoid his assailants and the assailants follow him into this place and makes a further assault then the man so attacked may repel the assault and though it may be apparent that his life is sought he is not under the necessity of further flight, but may stand his ground and resist.

Any person, lawfully in any lawful place, may resist an unlawful attack upon that place, though he may have but a transient interest in the place—he is not bound to seek safety in flight, he may resist the attack.

All sane men are held to full accountability for the consequences of their acts. If crowd of men unlawfully attacked a lawful place they are held to intend all that occurs as a result of that attack and are guilty accordingly.

If members of the American Legion or other persons made an unlawful attack on the hall of the Industrial Workers of the World at Centralia, Wash., they intended all that followed upon the heels of that assault and are therefore guilty of the deaths of all who perished in that assault.

If there were members of the Industrial Workers of the World, or even strangers, lawfully in the said hall at the moment of the attack, they were justified in defending themselves from said attack and could use such force as was necessary to repel it, nor were they under the necessity of first ascertaining the intentions of the assailants, and if they were persuaded that their lives were in danger they were justified in taking such measures as they believed would preserve their lives.

We believe all the above statements of rights are correct and based upon the statutes and decisions of all the courts. If we are wrong, we are anxious to be set right, for we understand that no man may plead ignorance of the law nor seek to take advantage of his own wrong......

OVER 3,000 AUSTRALIANS UNDER WAR BAN

Now that the censorship regulations have been lifted in Australia we are permitted to learn that during the war no less than 3,474 citizens of Australia were prosecuted for various political offenses under the War Precautions Act—the equivalent to "D. O. R. A." in the United Kingdom, and the Espionage Act in the United States. In 100 more cases fines and punishments in prison were inflicted, while in 185 other cases there were imprisonments without the option of a fine.

Most of the prosecutions arose out of the opposition to the Government during the time it was trying—unsuccessfully—to fasten conscription on to the country. On the other hand, many of the most uncompromising opponents of the anti-labor government were not penalized, owing to the fact that the Government feared the strong union support which stood behid them. In fact, it was openly admitted that several very prominent labor journalists and speakers, would have been prosecuted or interned only that the Government feared the militant organizations to which they were attached.

WHY THE PEASANTS ARE AGAINST DENIKIN.

The Dalnyevostochnoye Obozryenie (The Far Eastern Review), of Vladivostock, in its issue of July 20, 1919 quotes from the Svobodnaya Rech, a Denikin organ, an admission that the success of his troops has been seriously impaired by the hostility of the peasantry. The reasons for that hostility are stated by the Denikin organ as follows:

"With the gradual advance of the Don troops some sort of 'punitive' detachments would usually assume full control in the rear, frequently overstepping the bounds of their authority, broad as it was. The requisitions which sometimes assumed the form of open robbery, the flogging of the population, and the despotic and contemptuous treatment accored it—such is the common picture of the activities of those detachments."

MINUTES

It was decided by motion to elect a Resolution Committee of five: Koope, Chase, Bonsall, Bilan and Young — chosen by acclamation.

A Constitution Committee of three, composed of Bronstrup, Toohey and McPherron, was chosen.

The Resolution Committee was instructed by motion to bring in a resolution on the subject of Unity.

The Temporary organization was made pernament.

A rules committee composed of Comrades Hoge and Allison was instructed to submit draft of rules at opening next session.

The aggenda submitted by the State Executive Committee was approved and adopted, two minor changes first being effected.

It was decided to elect a separate committee of three to consider organization. Comrades Bertram, Tribbey and Clifford were chosen.

Session adjourned until 2:00 p. m.

Reconvened at 3:15 p. m., the delay being due to the continued session of the various committees.

A paper on the subject of the "Contemporary International Situation" received from Comrade John Brahtin was read and applauded, and opened up a lively general discussion, Comrade Bilan contributing much information on the relative interntional influences, and giving an historical review of the growth of American capitalistic imperialism.

The Resolution Committee reported three resolutions as follows:—

POLITICAL PRISONERS

Whereas: Hundreds of loyal and faithful members of the working class have been thrown into foul and Vermin ridden Jails and federal prisons for voicing their conscientious and fearless opinions of existing conditions industrially and politicaly,

Whereas: By these outrages committed by subvenient tools of the imperialist capitalistic masters, on the spokesmen of the working class, all rights to free speech, free press and free assembly have been abrogated.

Whereas: Not being satisfied with imprisoning these hudreds of Men and women in the attempt to throttle every effort at peaceful organization of the working-class for the emancipation from capitalist oppressions, but are now engaged i nthe attempt to deport every radical or progressive thinker of foreign birth.

Whereas: These acts show unmistakably, the class consciousness of the capitalist class, and its determiaation to perpetuate its reign of oppression, and tyrany over the workers of the United States.

Therefore be it resolved: That the Communist Labor Party Conference of the State of Ohio calls upon the workers to organize to the full extent of their strength for the purpose of resisting these determined attempts to fasten upon the American workers the chains of an industrial and political Oligarchy.

And be it further resolved: That we call upon the workers of the state to support financially and morally the Army of Liberators Organization in its endeavor to aid and to free those who have already been victims of a ruthless master-class.

STATEMENT OF THE COMMUNIST-LABOR PARTY of Ohio on the MEXICAN SITUATION.

WHEREAS;— Once more the capitalist class in the United States is planning intervention in Mexico, in the name of "law and order", but in reality with the intention of subjugating the Mexican workers to the most brutal form of exploitation, i. e., exploitation under colonial administration, or under the hypocrisy of a dummy government by the capitalist interests in this country, and

WHEREAS:—For the third time within the last five years the capitalist press and all its means of publicity and education are concentrating their efforts upon the propaganda of intervention, and, as formerly, the occasional murders of American citizens in the remoter regions of Mexico are being played up in the newspapers with a wealth of exaggerated detail, and all the explanation or denial of the Mexican Government are either minimized or deliberately mininterpreted; while at the same time, the mistreatment and even murder of countless American workers in this country by the gunmen of the capitalist class is not even reported.

But with the intensification of the class truggle during and succeeding the war, the interventionists no longer conceal their real motive. The present attempt to bully the American workers into war against Mexico is based chiefly on the fact that the Mexican Government is attempting to control the disposition of the national resourses of that country, and thru taxation, is trying to retain in the National Treasury some portion of the national wealth of which that country has been consistently looted by boreign capitalists in the past, and

WHEREAS:—The Govenrment of the United States, has, so far, supported the demands of the American capitalists that Mexico change her constitution and abrogate her laws concerning her own internal administration, and this for the sole purpose of permitting foreigners to exploit the Mexican working class, therefore be it

RESOLVED:—That the COMMUNIST-LABOR PARTY of Ohio, in Conference assembled, demands that the Government of the United States withdraw its support from the American capitalist interests in their attempt to force an imperialist war against Mexico, and Failing this, The COMMUNIST—LABOR PARTY of Ohio appeals to the workers to oppose this war by all means within their power.

We urge all workers to refuse to fight in the war which in reality is a war against the Mexican workingclass. And we reaffirm that the only struggle which can justify the workers in taking up arms is the great struggle of the working class of the world to free itself from the economic exploitation and political oppression.

The COMMUNITST-LABOR PARTY of Ohio extends its sympathy to the Communist Party of Mexico in its work of arousing the workers of America to the dangers of intervention, and we promise the Communist Party of Mexico our heartiest support in preventing a conflict between the workers of the United State and Mexico.

To our comrades of all countries affiliated with the Communist International we appeal for the defense of the Mexican workingclass by every possible demonstration of solidarity.

The Committee report was received and the committee continued. The Conference adjurned until 7.00 p. m.

RESOLUTION ON MOB RULE:

WHEREAS: Workers Organizations both industrial and political have been prevented from functioning by lawless and law abrogating bands of irresponsible persons masquerading under the guise of Law and Order and

WHEREAS: The Unions and radical minority political parties are prevented from meeting, by coersive methods their meetings have been broken up; the members and those in attendance cruelly, man-handled and jailed on baseless and unfonded charges,

And WHEREAS: All this is done in contradiction to the capitalist class made laws and are violated whenever they deem it necessary.

And WHEREAS: Extra — Constitutional bodies are endorsed by governmental institutions such as the so-called Loyal American Legion, — Knights of Liberty and others who are vested with the power of state and municipal law and are exercising those rights deliberately for their own narrow, terroristic aims

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED: That the Communist Labor Party Conference of Ohio go on record as unalterably opposed to and is ready to fight such methods of coersion and terrorism with the organized power of the workers.

Reconvened at 7.10 p. m. and the Committee on Organization reported as follows:

ORGANIZATION

The question of organization of our party is at this time paramount to all others, the systematic terrorism that has been carried on for some months and now generally prevails thruout the state, has resulted in our local organizations being discriminated against in the use of halls and all public places for purposes of propaganda and organization.

New organization tactics are therefore necessary where the organization as such is not permitted to function, individual effort must be put forth, more personal methods must be used for the upbuilding of our organization.

The time has passed where the organization can delegate to a few of its members the carrying on of its work, from now on every member must consider himself or herself a propagandist and organizer, by personal solicitation of individuals. By the passing of literature from hand to hand and constant personal effort by our members must we now carry on our work, members must be made to realize the responsibility resting upon them. They must be responsive to all demands made upon them by the organization.

The S.E.C. and the State office have outlined a plan of organization work that is now being put into operation thru out the state. We beleive this plan will meet the demands of the time. While it is a radical departure from methods used in the past we urge comrades and local organizations to lend their assistance to the field workers sent out by the state office. We are convinced that this method of organization will result in a great upbuilding of our party and we urge the fullest possible co-operation of comrades and locals with the organizers sent out by the State office.

Action was deferred after hearing the report of the State Secretary, and later referred to the Resolution Committee.

Comrade Prevey addressed the Conference on the subject of the History of the Socialist Movement in the United State, and brought out many points of information new to the younger and new members. Adjourned at 11:00 P.M. to cenvene at 10:00 a. m. Sunday morning.

Convened at 10:45 a. m. Sunday morning and comrade John C. Chase was elected Chairman for the day. Reading of minutes of former session was dispensed with.

The Resolution Committee reported two resolutions of Unity:

UNITY RESOLUTION.

We realize the essential necessity or Unity between the two Communst organizations to clear the way for ur message to the working class and he strengthening of our efforts for mancipation, and recomend that whenever the Communist Party members evince to desire for Unity, we urge upon our members that they issue a call for a joint conference with them for the purpose of discussion of grounds of Unity.

AFFILIATION RESOLUTION.

WHEREAS:—The Communist Labor Party from the day of its organization has stood for and demanded Unity, and has used its utmost endeavours to accomplish Unity and

WHEREAS—A large proportion of the rank and file of all Communist elements are in favor Unity

WHEREAS:— The officials of the Communist Party stand in the way of Unity and thus prevent the will of the rank and file from being carried out

THEREFORE Be in resolved: — That the C. L. P. conference of Ohio calls when all Communist Locals and comrades to accomplish Unity by joining hands with the Communist Labor Party, the officials of which stand interested to obtain Unity in order that one strong communist organization may result in the state of Ohio.

Both resolutions were adopted.

The Constitution Committee reported favorably their draft of a Constitution as follows. This report will be submitted to Locals later.

This session adjourned at 12:10 p. m. to reasemble at 1:30 p. m.

Convened at 1:40 p. m. and comrade Allison spoke on "The Party Situation in Ohio", outlining in detail much necessary work to be done in the immediate future. The State Secretary was instructed by motion to notify all Locals not yet affiliated with the C. L. P. that after December 31st., that they will be dropped from the roster and new locals organized.

The Organization Committee report was read a second time and adopted as offered. (See report above).

Comrade Tom Lewis spoke upon "Shop Committees", their development methods of functioning, their growing power and unlimited possibilities. His speech was eagerly listened to by the delegates and a half filled with vistors.

The Resolution Committee reported resolution No. 7, reading as follows:

WHEREAS, a campaign of organization of the Metal & Machinery Workers Industrial Union No. 300 of the Industrial Workers of the World has been planned throughout the State of Ohio, and

WHEREAS, the Communist Labor Party believes the above said organization is a revolutionary industrial union, so be it

RESOLVED, that we the delegates of the Communist Labor Party assembled this 30th day of November 1919, do hereby pledge our cooperation to this and to similar industrial organizations which work of the abolition of the wage system.

Resolution adopted as read.

All Committees were discharged and the Conference adjourned sine die.

LAWRENCE A. ZITT
Conference Secretary.

CENSORSHIP STILL EXISTS.

Though it is officially stated that the censorship has been abolished in Australia, it has come to light that since the official lifting a more vicious scheme of censorship has been introduced. Lists of well-known labor advocates—writers and speakers—have been compiled, and instructions issued secretly that their correspondence be held pending perusal by the secret service agents. It is also stated that the correspondence so held is secretly steamed open, perused, and re-sealed in order that the censorship might not be detected.

When the matter was brought up in the Australian Parliament it was officially denied, but against this, the "Australian Worker" (Sydney) holds irrefutable written evidence that this system of censorship does exist.

Conference Report of Delegate Bonsall.

Salem, Ohio, Dec. 1, 1919.

REPORT OF DELEGATE elected by Columbiana County Socialist Party to the State Conference. of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio, held at Akron, Ohio
Nov. 29th and 30th, 1919.

The Convention consisted of a goodly number of delegates from various parts of the state, chosen by those Locals which had affiliated with the Communist Labor Party, It was a splendid and earnest working body of men and women.

The resolution which was drawn up at the meeting of the County Committee held in G. A. R. Hall, Salem, Sunday, November 23rd., was presented by me at the Convention and I requested the delegates to express themselves concerning it without offering a motion for its adoption. About one hour was then consumed in considering it and nearly one half of the delegates present expressed their views upon the proposition embraced in said resolution. I wished very much that the comrades of Columbiana County could have been present and heard the objections against its adoption and the reason for such objections. Comrade Tom Clifford of Cleveland and many others who were well informed concerning the attitude of the officials of the Communist Party in refusing, repeatedly, the overtures of the C. L. P., looking to unity, affirmed in a calm though earnest and positive manner, the utter futility of arriving at such unity except through the methods that may be brought about by the rank and file of the Communist Party. Indeed, quite a number of the Locals of the Communist Party have already broken away from the arbitrary actions of their officials and have alligned themselves with the C. L. P.

So far as the old Socialist Party is concerned, the unlawful action of the the old committee and secretary heretofore made known to the comrades generally throughout the country together with the great falling off of the payment of dues etc., have so completely crippled the old organization that there is little left of it to affiliate and function with. For these and other reasons too numerous to mention here, the said resolution providing for a referendum vote on the matter, was not adopted.

Your delegate was agreeably surprised to see the thorough, earnest and charitable manner with which the Convention considered all the vital questions that came before it. Comrade Margaret Prevey of Akron gave a masterful, interesting and instructive address on the history and development of the Socialist Party in all of its phases, during the past eighteen years.

Comrade Chase of Akron, who, twenty years ago was elected Mayor of a city in Massachusetts on the Socialist ticket and who has been a splendid and courageous worker and speaker in the movement ever since, gave a magnificent address on the subject of "OUR POLITICAL PRISONERS"? It was brilliant, eloquent and thrilling and was given on Sunday afternoon when the hall was filled with visitors. The mention of Comrade Debs and Comrade Kate Richards O'Hare was responded to by storms of applause.

Comrade Tom Lewis, the "little giant," entertained the large assemblage by a report of his recent work and travels over the state for the purpose of instructing and organizing the Workers of various shops and factories in which each trade or craft consists of a unit and elects its own steward or chairman. These several stewards then meet whenever necessary and jointly consider and discuss the needs and desires of their respective trades. This system embraces all of the helpers or laborers and also the office force. This is along the line of the present system of Russia where each trade or craft elects its own representative to the legislative body known as the Soviet.

It is the settled purpose and determination of the C. L. P. to push this movement vigorously throughout the industrial centers of the United States, including the agricultural workers, until the Congress of the United States shall be composed exclusively of men and women coming directly from the wealth producers of the nation. It is now plainly evident that the workers of the nation must use the two weapons of political and industrial action combined, in order to accomplish the ultimate aim and goal of unseating the capitalist retainers and hirelings who have brought destruction and mob-rule in this Republic; and to establish in its place an Industrial Democracy which shall embrace the interests, happiness and protection of every man, woman and child however humble and to establish in this nation the Co-operative Commonwealth and the Brotherhood of Man.

In concluding this brief report, let me say that my judgement and conscience impel me to recommend and urge every Local througout the state, to allign itself with the Communist Labor Party before January 1st, 1920; and to enlist in earnest and courageous work to the end that the world-wide revolution which the forces of the present epoch in human history have brought to our very doors, may be guided along peaceful lines.

Fraternally submitted

CHARLES BONSALL
Delegate.

KOLCHAK'S CAPITAL FALLS TO THE BOLSHEVISTS.

Bolshevik claims of the capture of Omsk Nov. 15 were confirmed by official dispatches received today at the department. These said the soviet forces had advanced thirteen versts beyond the Kolchak capital and had destroyed bridges and railroad tracks.

LONDON.—The Bolsheviki claim the capture of ten generals and more than 100 other officers at Omsk, according to an official statement issued today by the soviet government at Moscow.

Kolchak's army is being pursued in an easterly direction, the statement adds.

Mr. Rockefeller, jr., is head of the committee representing the public to see what can be done about bringing the dead labor conference to life. His job is to make capital and labor love each other.

Meanwhile, "trench guns" which are shotguns sawed off for quick handling, have appeared on the streets in Gary. The trench guns are intended to make labor RESPECT capital, whether it LOVES capital or not.

Now that the "Casey" have armed and equipped a hundred of their number and sent them to war against the Russian workingclass government, no one ought to be in doubt as to the attitude of the Catholic Church towards the workingclass. But we have no special enmity against the Catholics. The protestan churches are every bit as bad. All the difference is the protestant churches are divided into so many warring factions that they can not develop the power of solidarity the Catholic church does.

comes by mass action it will come by action of the mass, not by the term mass action in the mouths of a few phrase mongers.

We have a lot of hell raisers in this country. Don't mistake them for revolutionists who are seeking a social revolution. Some of the hell raisers are to be found in the loyalty leagues and other allied bodies. This type of hellraiser does his hell reising in defiance of the law of the land, but gets away with it because he has the moral support of the courts and judges and the negative support of an indifferent public opinion.

Other hell raisers are to be found in the ranks of the returned soldiers. They are not to be blamed for their attitude of mind. Millions of dollars were spent in the past two years by the Democratic Administration to place the kind of propaganda before the people that would create the hell raising state of mind. The fact that it was designed primarily against the Germans as an aid to help win the war dos not alter the other fact — that that hell raising state of mind was created and is here, and will vent itself upon anything and anybody that offers an opportunity "for a little action and a chance to treat em rough!"

None of these hell raisers are class conscious, hence none of their hell raising can be of any benefit to the working class.

Any attempt to "pull off a revolution" at this time amongst the unorganized and non class conscious wage-earners is simply the folly of blindness, or of madness.

America is headed hell bent for a revolution. It will come far too soon — long before we are organized and ready for it — come because it has to come. The economic conditions are shaping themselves toward that inevitable conclusion, but instead of encouraging the workers into actions which at this time can mean nothing short of cold blooded massacre we should bend all our energies to organization and education.

Let us have less rrrevolutionary phrases and more action towards building a strong and stable organization. Let us hear less of mass action and more of CLASS action.

A Study of British Labor Strategy

By G. D. H. COLE.

It is not easy to form a correct estimate of the strength and orientation of the labor movement in Great Britain. It all depends where and how you look. There are reactionary streaks in British labor hardly paralleled elsewhere unless in the United States; but there is also a strong and growing leftward movement which may at any time sweep along with it a big proportion of organied labor. Viewed as a whole, the British labor movement seems about the most chaotically organied in the world; but in this chaos there are great groups and industries which are effectively united in practically blackleg-proof combinations. If the extreme left is only a small minority, so is the extreme right; and, while British labor is not "class-conscious" in any full sense, it is certainly still less conscious of any unity with the capitalist system, such as a few of its own leaders and most of the press set out to preach.

American observers, perhaps owing to a deep sonsciousness of their own troubles, have been apt in recent years to appraise British labor at too high a value. They have taken for accomplished facts what are only tendencies struggling to overcome opposition and inertia, and some of their estimates of leading personalities in our movement seem to us in Great Britain almost ludicrously exaggerated. In particular, they have almost fallen over one another in acclaiming 'Labor and the New Social Order," the pamphlet which Mr. Sidney Webb drafted as a statement of the policy of the reorganied Labor party, whereas the left wing here has, to say the least, not got very excited over the latest exposition of Fabianism in politics.

Greatly as the Labor party has strengthened its political position since its reorganization, the developments which really count for most have taken place in the industrial sphere. The war resulted in a huge increase not only in the membership but also in the strength of trade unionism. It also gave an impetus to new ideas and better organization which is only now beginning to make itself felt. Amalgamation of rival and overlapping unions and an approximation to the "industrial" structure are slow in coming; but gradually the movement in that direction is taking shape, and important amalgamations, impossible during the war, are entering into the sphere of practical industrial politics.

The mere amalgamation of trade unions, however, though it helps to provide a better instrument for carrying on the struggle, is far less significant than the growing change in trade-union orientation. Before the war, the idea of workers' control in industry was struggling against huge odds. It was advocated by a few unions, by the few scattered organizations of industrial unionists, and by the then wholly unorganized but influential group of guild socialists. Apart from these, it was opposed by the trade-union leaders and ignored by the most of the rank and file. The idea was still in the early stages of propagandist activity, and had certainly not reached the stage of formulation as a definite programme by responsible labor bodies.

The war has changed all that. Several of the largest and most important unions, including the Miners' Federation, the National Union of Railwaymen and the other two railway unions, the principal societies in the post office, and others, have formulated definite proposals for the assumption of control jointly with the state as owner, while in other industries, such as engineering, shipbuilding and building, the control idea has made enormous headway, although no concrete proposals for a complete system of control have yet been officially put forward. The "rank and file" organizations of the district councils among the railway men, and of the shop stewards' and workers' committees among the engineers and kindred workers, have been the most active unofficial agencies in pressing forward the control idea.

The strategy of the class struggle in Great Britain centres largely round this question of industrial control. The capitalist system in industry is manifestly breaking up, and it is becoming more and more difficult for the capitalist employer to ensure either continuous operation of his works, or efficiency (ever the capitalist standard) even when his works are running. This is because he finds his workers decreasingly willing to go on working for profit, or to exert themselves in order to pile up profits under anti-social conditions. Great Britain is therefore confronted with the same problem which is troubling the greater part of Europe—the fact of decreasing production as a factor making for unrest, high prices, and perhaps finally revolution.

There can be no doubt that this danger is understood in capitalist circles, and that all manner of schemes are being discussed whereby the workers may be induced to cooperate in increasing production and the capitalist class may at the same time retain all its control over industry and the social power dependent upon industry. The Whitley scheme, or rather the manner in which it was taken up by the Government, was the first definite attempt in this direction; although it has manifestly failed to achieve any sustantial results, or to enlist the support of the main body of labor, it is still assiduously pushed in capitalist circles—for example, by Mr. Lloyd George in his last speech to the House of Commons on the Government's industrial policy. Similar "sprats to catch mackerel" are being thrown out in other directions by those whose object it is to maintain at all costs the old industrial system.

Despite these attempts, and despite all the talk about unity, there can be no doubt that the two parties in industry are getting steadly further apart. In almost every industry there is the possibility of an explosion, and in many of them actual explosions are now prevented only by the unfavorable condition of the labor market. This does not mean, of course, that the British trade unions have one and all determined to end capitalism—still less that they have formed a concerted plan with this end of view. The discontent is still primarily with particular abuses and only secondly with capitalism itself; and a concerted plan of action is almost entirely lacking. There are present only the elements which may later be worked up into a coherent attack upon capitalism; at present they oply make the capitalistic system of production work more and more inefficiently without providing a better system to take its place.

Moreover, generally speaking, each industry, and sometimes each separate craft, goes its own way largely disregardful of the rest. Except for the Triple Alliance of Miners, Railwayman, and Transport Workers there is hardly any attempt at combined action. The Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress, the only body which professes to represent the industrial movement as a whole, steadily eschews industrial disputes and industrial action, and takes great care to avoid responsibility and indeed decisive action of every sort. The industrial movement is, indeed, too largely leaderless and uncoordinated, and the Trades Union Congress remains a mere debating society, with more than a suggestion of the beanfeast about it. It neither acts nor organizes nor undertakes propaganda; the only form of action at which it excels is obstruction.

Accordingly, there is always a strong temptation for the "rank and file" left-wing trade unionist in Great Britain to kick over the traces, denounce the existing unions and combinations as useless, and set out to create new bodies or unofficial bodies sid by side with the old. Nevertheless, it is safe to say that attempts to create new unions on a class basis are entirely futile, and that unofficial organiations can succeed only as temporary bodies influencing the existing unions. The I. W. W. is and will remain negligible in Great Britain. The Socialist Labor party, which once tried to promote the One Big Union as a rival to existing unions, has abandoned the attempt, and now contents itself with stimulating and permeating such movements as that of the shop stewards. If the main body of British labor is chaotically organized and is lacking in constructive ideas for a grand assault on capitalism, it is none the less stably organized and incapable of being broken or superseded. It may possibly be led gradually leftward, and made to develop a greater class consciousness and a more definite plan; but short cuts which aim at arriving at the ideal by substituting one organization for another are doomed to failure from the outset.

This fact affects not only the industrial but also the political movement. The Labor party is based upon the trade unions, and separate political and socialist organization plays in it only a small part. The British Labor party is often denounced as a hybrid, neither fish, flesh, nor fowl; but, whatever it is, it derives from its trade-union basis a stability second only to that of the trade unions themselves. The left wing may and does grumble justly at the slackness and lack of ideas of the Labor party in Parliament; but it is not likely to succeed in launching sucessfully a better party. The relation of political and industrial labor in Great Britain is a clear case of the dominance of economic over political organization under capitalist conditions.

These facts also determine the international attitude of British Labor. As an effective force, the British Labor movement can make itself felt internationally only trough the Labor party and the Trades Union Congress. Many will hold that this is tantamount to not making itself effectively felt at all; but it is at least clear that there is no other way. Even though the Second International is unsatisfactory. British labor is not in the least likely to join the Third. It will only, as the leftward tendency in the British movement grows stronger, begin to push the Second International itself to the left.

In fact, the orientation of British labor as a whole depends finally upon the attitude of the big unions which form the basis of its organization. The only way of moving British labor to the left is by moving these organizations, and the only way of moving them is by securing from within the adoption of more radical programmes of industrial control. The emergence of the demand for control into a clear practical issue for the miners apd, to a less extent, for the railway men has done more to push them leftwards than any issue not directly affecting their own industry could have done. British labor is learning the strategy of the class-struggle as a whole only by learning it first in its particular relation to each industry. When this lesson has gone home to the workers in most of the vital industries, a coherent plan will begin to emerge, and a real leftward movement will be possible for labor as a whole.

The criminal syndicalist laws are an acknowledgement on the part of the master class of the power the working class potentially possess. The pity f it is,the master-class discovered this potential power before the workers did. — But the workers are learning.

The same government that allows one man to do the work and another man to reap the reward is now busy rounding up the reds! Why? Because the reds were teaching the truth about this work and reward.

The dominant class has great hopes of controlling the American Legion and having it do the dirty work for them, but our guess is that they will have another guess coming. Thousands upon thousands of the A. L. are class-conscious and more are becoming so every day. The American Legion has already served the master class with notice that they will not do police duty in the interests of the master class. Our guess is that the A. Legion will be the backbone of the social revolution in America.

GOMPERS AS HE IS.

It is hard to believe that the great capitalists and managers of industry really understand conditions among the workers of this country, or they would scarcely continue to play with dynamite as they are doing. They ought to listen to Samuel Gompers, for they have no more genuine friend and servitor than he. "We demand" he says, "a voice in the determination of the conditions under which we will give service . . . We have never made an assault, — and it is furthest from our thoughts — upon the rights of property or the right of management; —no revolution for Mr. Gompers, not even an unkind look at the present God-given industrial order—but if the employers break the steel strike, says Mr. Gompers, and men go about preaching "the tyranny which they experience and the injustices which have been meted out to them, then, whatever betide, you have sown the seed and will bear the consequence." We are not often able to agree with Mr. Gompers, but we do unreservedly commend his warning to that large body of American employers who appear to believe that we are still living in the middle of the nineteenth century. The words we have quoted should carry the more weight in such quarters because there is nowhere to be found a more sincere and consistent supporter of the old capitalistic order than the president of the American Federation of Labor.

said it appears to me that your ideas would be screamingly funny if they did not lead to such painful conclusions."

"What do you mean," the other two gasped almost in one breath.

"I mean what I say. We belong to the working class. You say the working class must be organized. One of you say soberly and the other says generally. Now why don't you ask can they be organized. Collins says yes, at least that part of them who do not drink. For this Rudolph calls him a Christian. How are Rudolph and Collins going to work together in the same organization, when it takes a steel cage to keep them from "beating each other up," yet both of them are sober men. Colins wants to eliminate the weak and let them die, Rudolph wants to forgive the weak, which means that he must carry them. For it is logical that if a man is weak he will have to lean on you. Now if you are fighting the boss who has both of his fists ready with a drunkard in one arm and a mental defective in another, then who is going to get rich."

"That's what I say," roared Collins.

Jack ignored him, "Both of you say that acquired characteristics are not transmitted, yet you try to give to the race a mental tendancy which by nature it does not posses except for purposes of battle. There is no tendancy toward productive solidarity in the human race that I can see. They do not organize for production. They bunch together for strife. The brainiest and brightest of the race are continually crawling upward over the duller and the weaker. That is the law of life, and it appears to me that your endeavor to set up a republic of the weak will always be successfully thwarted by the strong."

LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS

pass center, about six blocks long and three blocks wide. A parade in Centralia is a rare occurrence—a thing in itself that adds point to the contention that this parade was not designed by its promoters so much to celebrate the armistice as to be used as a shield in wrecking the I. W. W. hall and mobbing Britt Smith, the secretary, who, everyone in Centralia knew, was the one they wanted to get. Further this parade marched fully two blocks beyond the usual point of countermarching of all previous parades— the I. W. W. hall was four blocks beyond the outside limits of the business things.

Centralia, Wash., has a small business section of the town—and,why the belligerent attitude of many of the paraders; why were vile epithets freely shouted; why the cries, "Let's go get the —— — ———!" "Let's clean 'em out!" shrieked by individuals apparently carrying out a program. The attack followed when the rear of the parade pushed on to the vicinity of the hall.

Those in the hall must have observed this offensive conduct, but in the face of a designed assault it must have appeared aqually as dangerous to abandon the place as to remain within its shelter. They stayed. The attack came. They defended themselves. That they defended themselves only and did not attack is selfevident. That they were the victims of a premediated assault is borne out by events occuring prior to the parade on Armistice day.

The Commercial Club of Centralia, the Elks and other organizations, had held meetings at which the I. W. W. had been denounced and violent language used. At one such meeting, reported in the Seattle Union-Record, a speaker, in condemning the Centralia chief of police, is declared to have said that he (the speaker) would clear the I. W. W. out of the town in 24 hours and another, one Scales, is alleged to have made the frank statement that no jury in the country would convict anybody for "cleaning out" the I. W. W. hall.

Thomas Lassiter, a sales agent for the Union-Recvord, was seized on the town, warned never to return again and threatened with bodily harm if he did.

Britt Smith, secretary of the I. W. W. branch of Centralia, repeatedly received warnings that he would be mobbed unless he left the town.

Many other events leading up to this afair, will be presented in due time. To one familiar with the situation and the circumstances leading up to this tragic event, the guilty parties are as apparent as is the difference between black and white. The I. W. W. charges that the secret forces back of the Armistice day demonstration are the instigators and responsible agents. They deliberately organized a mission of violence against men, who, under the circumstances, could do nothing but defend themselves.

We suggest a few questions for fair minded people to ponder on. Why was a town like Centralia selected for the Armistice day celebration instead of much larger places nearby, as Seattle, Tacoma or Aberdeen? Why were certain people (known I. W. W. haters) from other towns, invited to Centralia and why did they arrive in Centralia with sidearms? Why were detectives from the Seattle police force and reporters for a Tacoma newspaper conveniently on the scene when this thing happened? Did a Tacoma newspaper reporter go there merely to write up a smalltown parade, and did Seattle detectives go there to hold back the crowds from the line of march in a town of such size?

Why was a censorship placed on the telephone and telegraph that night?

Where did the many guns and pistols come from that everyone stamped as "loyal' had possession of immediately after the occurrence?

Why was the Seattle Union-Record suppressed? Was it feared that it might give the other side of the story?

Where did all the booze come from with which certain elements seemed to be well supplied?

These and many other questions are vital to a true knowledge of the Centralia affair.

Circumstances point unerringly to the real instigators of this [illegible] thing. Reason rejects the plain falsity of the capitalist press in its story that the I. W. W. planned this shooting.

We will get at the truth of this affair, just as we did in the [illegible] massacre. We will fix the responsibility where it belongs. The truth will be vindicated and the guilty agents of plutocracy will be pilloried in the judgement of an awakening working class.

RECOGNIZE SOVIET REGIME OR WORKERS' TROOPS MAY ENTER BERLIN, SAYS MINOR

"Recognize the Russian Soviet government, and thereby end bloodshed in the numerous private wars directed against Russia. The ultimate triumph of the Red army seems certain. It is the only organized army in Europe today, and, unless the Russian workers' government gets recognition the Red army is going to march right through to the North Sea."

Thus Robert Minor, cartoonist and writer, who was in Soviet Russia for nine months during the formative stage of the present government, and who in his travels saw the White Terror as it swept over Finland, Russia and Germany, yesterday summed up the situation in Europe for The Call.

Minor arrived in New York yesterday, having crossed the continent of North America twice since his adventures in Europe, addressing workers of America. He asserted that an awakening of labor was taking place in this country and that the minds of the workers were being clarified as the Iron Heel of the bourgeoisie was stamped down upon them.

He said the development of the Soviet idea alone could prevent a world cataclysm since only the socialization of industry, which is the foundation of the Russian system of government, can meet the unrest of the workers throughout the world.

Soviet Troops May Enter Berlin.

Any army that the Allies or the newly formed buffer states can place before the Soviet legions will vanish, Minor declared. He said the Soviet troops might soon occupy Berlin with the acclaim of the masses.

Russia is about to settle 12 wars and make peace on the Baltic fronts, he said. These border states will be scrupulously avoided by the Russians in their onward march, but they will go through Poland like a mouse through Camembert cheese, Minors asserted.

Once in Germany, the masses who are horrified at the brutal Noske regime will rise to welcome the liberating troops of Soviet Russia, Minor believes.

Minor was emphatic in saying that he had no connection with the Soviet representatives in this country, but that he had his own sources of information. The British have already entertained the peace offer of the Soviet government, as have many other European nations, he said. He felt certain that the artificial barrier arround Russia would soon fall to pieces.

Idea to Continue Working.

Should a peace be arranged and the Russian republic recognized, the dynamic idea of socializing industry will continue to work in the minds of the intelligent workers in every country, but it will then be allowed to work peacefully without any more killings, he declared.

> "Every time I think of violence, I get nausea at the stomach, for I remember slipping on the blood of dead men of Berlin," Minor said.

Minor continued as follows:

"The Soviets will not make any aggressive war, they will succeed through the workers of each country. If it is necessary to continue fighting, I think one big battle will settle it for all Europe. The Red army is equipped to do it, having supplies that were intended for an army of 15,000,000 men. They have but 1,500,000, but they are the only disciplined and trustworthy troops in Europe today.

Soviet Forces Gain Wheat.

"They are now in Omsk, the heart of the wheat country, and this opens for all of Russia a wheat supply that has been garnered and hidden for the last six years."

Minor said that the world needed the Soviet idea, which was the only hope for the present disrupted state of society. Its acceptance he termed the only thing that could avert a smash of the present cosial structure — a cataclysm accompanied by more bloodshed and misery.

WHY THE ARREST OF MINERS AT CADIZ

One Editor's Version and Our Answer

Cadiz, O., Dec. 4 1919.

The Ohio Socialist,
Cleveland, Ohio.
3207 Clark Ave.

Gentlemen:—

I am enclosing a clipping from this week's issue of the Cadiz Republican showing that Mr. Sharts omitted some very important facts from his write-up concerning the arrest of nine men at the coal mines near Cadiz. I have talked with miners and miners' officials regarding the matter of weighing the coal, and find that it had nothing to do with the arrest of those men, but the Prosecutor here showed me a great deal of incrediary literature taken in conncetion with the arrest of those men, and that literature and practically advocating the overthrow of the government was the real cause of their arrest. You do not realize the number of real Americans who resent foreigners trying to upset a government they did not help to organize in any way.

Sincerely,
H. B. M. CONNELL.

(Clipping from Cadiz Republican.)

Real Cause of Arrests—Spreading Red Literature

Several weeks ago we received a copy of "The Ohio Socialist," with a two column article marked referring to the arrest of the seven men at Duncan, who are now out on bond. The names of these men are Wm. Makarus, Joe Vegh, Jr., Ottone Alterio, Julius Simon, Joe Haborka, George Kaari, Joe Toth, Jim Domasley, and Steve Bogo. They were indicted for criminal syndicalism, but the Ohio Socialist tries to show that their arrest was a sort of conspiracy on the part of the coal operators to have them arrested for complaining about the way the coal was weighed. The party who sent us the copy of the Socialist carefully erased the name on the label, evidently not wanting to have it known that he took such a paper, and underneath the marked article the words, "How much of this is true?" were written.

Another paper, "The Cleveland Citizen," a labor publication, has been sent to this office, containing a paragraph about the arrest of the men in question. It speaks of these men as having been arrested for violating an "infamous measure that was sneaked through the Ohio Legislature last spring for stamping out sedition, anarchy, etc." We will quote a little from the Socialist, the date being October 15.

The Army of Liberators has again come to the rescue. It has sent attorney Jos. W. Sharts to the coal fields of eastern Ohio, to rescue seven miners from the clutches of capitalism. Not content with the BIG steal, that is exploiting the workers as wage slaves, the coal operators have been caught stealing from the miners by not giving them full weight for the coal they mine.

The miners, as soon as they found out that they were being robbed, quit work. And that was treason. Immediately a charge of violating the Freeman act was placed against the committee which attempted to secure action from other miners for a strike

His ever present Companion.

The Miners Go Back -- But as Rebels.

The coal strike is settled—for the present. The miners have shouldered their picks, swallowed the bitter pill of partial def eat at the hands of their officials and the government, they have again resumed their labors of furnishing the coal that makes industry and civilization possible. But hey have done it in a spirit of rebellion that will not be quieted by after-explanations and conferences of their officials and the government.

The smallness of the gain made by the strikers is due to the spineless actions their officials at Indianapolis, when they have faced with governmental bluff and swagger in the form of a court injunction ordering them to call off the strike. Never in the history of labor unionism did a group of labor officials crumble with more ridiculous and shameful alacrity before a groundless bluff than did these labor "leaders".

If the miners' officials at Indianapolis had stood their ground like men and called the government's bluff—gone to jail for contempt if necessary, there would have been a different tale to tell to-day. Their hypocritical pretense of patriotism in the face of the court injunction is the most shameful instance of backing down on record. "We are Americans, we cannot go against our government," they are credited with saying in extenuation of their spineless conduct. What they should have told the miners, and what they probably did say to themselves was—we are afraid to go to jail, it's uncomfortable, besides, it will give us a "bad name", and then of course it isn't really necessary that the miners win—also, if we show the government that we are "patriotic" we may get something by a "compromise"—and stay out of jail."

Just how strong their supine knuckling down was resented by the rank and file of the miners was immediately seen in their unanimous refusal to go back to work at the orders of the government and their officials. But the door having been opened to compromise and the miners now being placed on the defensive instead of in an aggressive position, the fight could only be carried on to its logical conclusion—a partial gain with a governmental "promise" from Wilson that the demands of the miners would be "considered" later.

The miners came out of the mines as strikers—they go back as rebels— rebels against an unfriendly government and treacherous union officials who had not the courage to carry thru the job they were morally committed to. The miners have received an object lesson in the capitalist class character of the government which from the first moment of the strike assembled its legal machinery to force the miners back to their underground dundgeons and keep them on the job of producing coal for the profit of the operators. How well the coal barons' profits were guarded is seen in the fact that the whole efforts of the govern- would insure a profit to the mine owners. Their profits are gauranteed, they stand no chance of losing. The attitude of the government proves this to the miners—that when it is a question as to who shall win, the workers or the owners of the industry, the strength of the government is thrown to the support of the owners without equivocation or as much as the batting of an eye. The government has lent its support to the operators and by its attitude toward the miners in this struggle shown its true capitalistic character and proven true the assertion of Marx, when he said, the capitalist state is but a committee for conducting the affairs of the bourgeoise. The truth of this statement has been branded into the minds of the coal diggers, the class lines have been drawn taunt and the true character of the government is seen for what it is.

The miners go back to the mines dissillusioned of the paternalism of the government. Its frankly outspoken unfriendliness has turned to bitterness the faith of the miners in the impartiality of the government and has shaken their faith in the labor-protecting qualities.

They go back, but they go back groping for a weapon that shall enable them to "come back". The strike is not settled, only a truce has been established. The miner will find the weapon to win with in greater solidarity of labor, in the breaking down of craft lines and the amalgation of all labor in industrial unions and the close affiliation of these in One Big Union and the class-conscious use of his political power.

The weapon is here and the miner will find it even in his under ground chanels. He goes back to the mines a rebel but he may come out again—a revolutionist.

Trades Congress Demands Britain Treat with Soviet

LONDON.—The Trades Union Congress adopted a resolution today calling upon the Government to consider immediately the peace overtures of the Soviet Government and raise the blockade between Russia and the outside world. They also demand the right for an independent inquiry into political, industrial and economic conditions in Russia.

ROME.—The Socialist deputies moved in the Chamber today a resolution for recognition of the Russian Soviet government. Restoration of trade with Russia also is demanded.

WORKERS' PAPERS RESUME PUBLICATION.

The Seattle Union Record has resumed publication after about ten days of non-appearance. At the time of the Centralia tragedy it was suppressed by federal action, its editor, E. B. Ault and other officers of the paper were jailed on charges of criminal syndicalism. Mailing privelege which were taken away by authorities have been returned to them.

The Industrial Worker, northwestern organ of the I. W. W. also suffered being compelled to cancel publications for two weeks. It is now out again and we hope no further difficulties will prevent the publication of these two weapons of industrial democracy.

SOVIET OFFERS PEACE TO ALLIES

The Toiler is enabled to publish this week the most important public document since the terms of the armistice with Germany were signed a year ago.

It is the full draft of the terms on which the Soviet Government of Russia is ready to make peace with the allies, as brought back by Colonel Malone, M. P., from Russia and first furnished by him to "The Herald" the London Socialist Daily.

"This document I have brought back," Colonel Malone informed the Daily Herald, "is a provisional agreement as a basis for discussion.

"America has not been lacking in signs that she is willing to enter into negotiations with the Soviet Government. The French Government must decide soon.

"Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Finland have two alternatives: (a) complete independence and co-operation with the Soviet Government, or (b) reabsorption as a vassal State to an autocratic Empire. There is little doubt which they will choose. They have, in fact, already made up their minds.

"What course will England take? Will she base her policy on financial ventures or the cause of humanity? I believe that the majority of the British people are in favor of peace.

Colonel Malone has already made a strong appeal in the House of Commons for immediate peace with Russia. In the Russian debate he declared he had discussed the question of the peace with the leaders of the Soviet Government and he believed it was possible to arrange peace on substantially the same terms as those published by Mr. Bullitt. He had in his possession a draft on which such a discussion could take place.

He believed it would be possible to call a Peace Conference of the war factions in Russia, and by meeting round a table bring this orgy of death and bloodshed to an end.

WHAT NEXT?

(High Spots in a Lecture delivered by Prof. Scott Nearing at Akron, (Nov. 11th 1919.)

By A. C. Blanchard.

"The times are out of joint." All periods of revolutionary changes are characterized by this feeling.

WHAT WE WOULD LIKE TO HAVE NEXT.

Natural resources should be utilized for the whole human race. Natures gifts are the heritage of all the peoples of the U. S. The total income of the United States per annum is approximately seventy-four thousand million dollars or between thirty-six or seventy-seven hundred dollars per family.

Steinmetz, the wizard of electricity has estimated that if our working population worked two hundred days and five hours per day the production of the U. S. would be as much as it is now. This would mean that we could have a month for Holidays, a week off for Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, and work five days a week the rest of the time.

WHAT WE HAVE GOT

It is estimated that there are thirty millions of people in poverty in the U. S. In the New York Schools 21.6 percent of the children are seriously undernourished, with a bank deposit of $5,800.000.000.00. It is true that there are 16,100 people in the U. S. receiving a salary of $10.000.00 and over.

Liberate people from ignorance.

The Russian Government is the new basis of organization. The U. S. Oil interest in Mexico are protected by the Press of this country. The advertising agent is paid $20.000.00 to take care of the oil interests in that country. Carranza will take action against foreign invasion to get control of Maxican capital, by forbidding foreigners to come into that country.

It is for us to eliminate fear and hate. Capitalist interests deliberately foster fear and hate and make poverty a necessity. During the war they made us feel that we must buy liberty bonds, war stamps, and contribute to the Red Cross, or loss our jobs. It was this fear made many do what they would otherwise not have done. They controlled the Press and told of the atrocities of the Germans, and the Bolsheviki, many of them lies, and many of the same things that were told of the Allies were written with pride in big lines. These lies were a war necessity.

This false method of organizing society puts all Europe under suspicion —fear, hate, famine, disease, undernourishment, no coal, and no work.

Brotherhood is our ideal. As the result of fear and hate, 8,000.000 boys died on the field of battle or of wounds — 20,000.000 died of famine, with $2,000.000.000.000.00 spent in money. This because the basis upon which they tried to build society was wrong.

EACH FOR ALL AND ALL FOR EACH is the new basis upon which Russia is organizing, and which will eventually come to pass. The New York Times and Chicago Tribune also the Cleveland Leader denounce us as dangerous to society.

WHAT WE ARE GOING TO GET.

Unless unforeseen events hasten a change it will be thirty years before this new basis of organization will overtake the U. S.

This country will be last because the employing class are so well organized to forestall any progress. For thirty years in the U. S. the free lands have been gone. As long as there was free land we still had a right to work; but without it we lost that right.

In 1890 Rockefeller, in the Colorado coal mines began to dictate when, where, and the conditions under which we were to work. If you don't believe this just try going to work at ten in the morning and work till five and see what will happen. J. D. R. Jr. owns today 250.000 jobs and also owns

MOB TERRORISM IN OAKLAND

One would think to read the capitalist papers that "The Reds" of Oakland California are being hunted down with machine guns or else tared and feathered and burned at the stake.

Such is not the case. There is however a coetsion going on by mob threat and police raids that make it very difficult for the freedom of speech, press or assembly to prevail.

On Armistice Day the American Legion was holding a parade and ball at the Civic Auditorium, Oakland. On that day and the proceeding day, warnings were sent to Loring Hall. The Headquarters of the Communist Labor Party and The World that a raid would take place that night at ten P. M. At 8:30 P. M. a committee of two went to police station and warned the police of the threatened raid and at ten thirty a committee of the Metal Tradesmen went and reported that a threat had come to raid both the Loring Hall and the Labor Temple. A number of party members were at the hall until eleven P. M. mailing World Bazaar tickets and the Metal Trades strike committee was in cession until eleven and a large number of the members stayed around until half past eleven. There are several of them who say they say no policemen in that neighborhood during the whole evening.

At twelve fifteen a mob of about twenty came, broke in the glass doors, smashed furniture, an expensive show case, burned and damaged about eight hundred dollars worth of books and magazines and tore down the charters of The Ladies Auxillary of the Herman Sons, a very respectable German Lodge that had been meeting in the hall for many years and who were 100 percent American when it came to buying Liberty bonds and functioning in other patriotic ways during the war. If we were writting headlines for a sensational newspaper we would tell a few things that they did in this way. "The mob of midnight marauders that wrecked Loring Hall broke the American Flag pole, trampled the bible under foot and burned the constitution and the Declaration of Independence", all of which really took place among the other depredations that night.

The police came in time to view the bon fire but could find no trace of any of the mob. Police do not find it so difficult to arrest "Reds".

After the raid a warning came that something would happen if we attempted to hold any meetings or issue The World. We refrained from holding meetings but as The World has second class mailing privileges we went ahead and got it out as usual.

Threats began to come thick and fast and both the printer and the World force demanded that police guards be put on duty at the print shop and Loring Hall. Then came the warning of tar and feathers for any one caught at Loring Hall on Tuesday night following the first mob raid. On that night Editor J. E. Snyder, State Secretary James H. Dolsen and Ex state Secretary John C. Taylor were arrested and charged with organizing a party that advocatage. On Wednesday when C. A. Tobey a business man of Oakland, who had acted as chairman of the convention of the Communist Labor Party on Sunday November 9th at Loring Hall, came to bail Snyder out he was arrested and that evening Edric B. Smith a former member of the State Executive Committee of the Socialist Party and active in organizing the Communist Labor Party was also arrested when he went up to see Taylor.

While these arrests were going on in Oakland the home of Max Bedacht a member of the national executive committee of the Communist Labor Party was invaded. His books and papers seized and himself taken to the city jail and the next morning transferred to Oakland where he was released along with the rest on two thousand bond. We should have mentioned that the home of Edric B. Smith was also raided by the police while no one was at home but his little children.

When "The World" came out Friday of that week it contained the National platform, labor program. National and state Constitutions of the Communist Labor Party. For this Snyder was again arrested and held on $4,000 bond. Saturday P. B. Cowdery received a decoy phone call that Snyder wanted to see him and walked right into jail. Cowdery is circulation manager of "The World."

The printer, Franz Roepcke, who publishes The World, was warned that a warrant would be served on him and his place wrecked if he published the paper again and so he served notice that under the circumstance he would have to obey the order for already his insurance had been cancelled and the employing printers had threatened to expell him from the organization if he printed any more radical literature.

"The case of holding up "The World" was taken to Commissioner Morse, the head of the Public Health and Safty department of the City Council and he refered it to the Chief of Police who forbade the publication of the paper, giving as his reason "The unsettled state of the public mind." In other words Oakland police force stands helpless to protect a regular newspaper that is not out-lawed by the government because a mob of irresponsible people threaten to raid the premisses of a print shop and a hall both within four blocks of the police station. We took our case before the city council and the matter was turned over to the police department once more where it is still pending. The council refused to hear our case at all.

A committee, presumably from the American legion, is waiting upon our advertisers and ordering them to take their ads from the paper. The back numbers are being seized from the news stands and not a single act of the Czar's police but what is being duplicated in Oakland.

And now comes the arrest of Anita Whitney on the charge of Criminal Syndicalism and Sabotage. She has been the storm center at the Civic Center Society for the past three weeks. She was billed to speak before that organization on The Negro Lynchings in The United States. But her membership in the Communist Labor Party and the fact that she is treasurer of The Labor Defense League that is organized to defend anyone arrested under the Criminal Syndicalist law brought a storm of protest from the conservative elements of the society, as well as from the American Legion and the police force of fthe city. The more liberal minded members of the Center won out however and Miss Whitney spoke to a packed house at Hotel Oakland after the Center folks had devoted two hours to discussing the question. The vote in her favor was 94 to 49. The police inspector took the floor and warned the ladies that Miss Whitney is a dangerous radical and helped to organize a party that stands for the Third International and subject to arrest under the criminal syndicalist law. But the warning was not heeded. Miss Whitney has been very active in club and social welfare work for years and is highly respected.

After the meeting Miss Whitney was arrested, taken to prison and bailed out the same evening by a number of the Center women.

All the cases come up in police court for a hearing on December 17th. The test will come then whether a political party can be arrested or not and whether it is criminal syndicalism to stand for the working class and its right to size political power and run this country for the men and women who toil.

On the night that Editor Snyder was arrested the second time a raid was made by the police on "The World" Office and a couple of auto loads of books and other belongings were carted to police station. All the stuff they took was material purchased by Local Oakland while still a part of the Socialist Party and was transfered when the local voted itself into the Communist Labor Party.

During the past two months The World has devoted much of its space to the strikes and has fearlessly published the names of the struck firms and the people scabbing in their places of business. The tailors sold The World in front of the struck store. We have made a special drive for food for the striking tailors and done what we could to help them along by furnishing a dining hall and a meeting place ot Loring Hall. We have also backed the Metal Trades Strike. We are not far from right when we claim that much of the persecution is due to this support of the strikers. We have however drawn the spleen of the reactionary central Labor Council as well as the big business interests and it is hard to tell which hates us the most.

Whether The World lives or not the good cause will go on and the Comrades will unite in stronger bonds to fight the capitalist system. Whether the party and World force go to jail or not the cause will not be asleep and others will step in to carry on the good work. We can freely say with Whitman. "Liberty let others dispair of you, we never despair of you."

Pay em today—Dues we mean.

Comrade H. Miller of Lronton takes $5.00 worth of sub cards gets a free copy of Lenin—. You can do the same. Send the five, please yourself and your family.

And here is four dollars more from comrade F. W. Hoffmeyer of Akron.

Why the Arrest

against this robbery. These miners, seven of them, all members of the party except one, are now lodged in the Harrison county jail.

It will be remembered that we announced that Attorney Sharts was one of the lawyers who tried to keep Debs out of prison for his work in trying to thwart the government while engaged in the war. Sharts made a lengthy report to the "Socialist" about the men whose names appear above, but his report dealt with the matter of weighing the coal, and he made no mention of their activities as charged by the indictment in their case.

The Ohio Socialist speaks of "labor taking over all industry, both manual and mental, to be managed and operated by themselves," and informs us that the "spirit of liberty is being crushed and the people deprived of the last vestige of freedom," and "Woe to the country with no Debses and Emma Goldmans," so "Join the Communist Propaganda League."

Why did Mr. Sharts, in his lengthy article, fail to quote the language of the indictments which he handled. The indictments charge the men with "circulating and selling literature teaching the doctrine that political and industrial reform should be brought about by crime, sabotage, violence, or unlawful methods of terrorism," and they are also charged with "organizing or helping to organize a society to teach such things," and also that they "did assemble with others to advocate such doctrines."

Prosecuting Attorney Barclay Moore has huge bundles of literature which was to have been distributed among the miners, packages of it being addressed to some of the men, spoken of by Mr. Sharts as "fine, clean, intelligent men, who speak English intelligibly and have taken out their first papers." The literature seized was partly printed in English, and is regular I. W. W. propaganda. A sample paragraph is enough, and it tells that by strikes for shorter hours and more pay, labor is to constantly weaken capital, so that finally capital will surrender to labor, which really is entitled to everything, being in the first place unjustly deprived of land, factories, mines, etc. And if that method does not succeed labor is going to take over everything, and does not intend to pay for it either.

There are miners who have been misled into believing that their Union is greater than the Government. Imagine their union, or any union, being able to muster 4,000,000 men for overseas service, and 4,000,000 more if necessary, and they ought to realize that they are up against it if they come into conflict with their Uncle Sam.

We have not the space to give all the details about the matter of weiging the coal, but the miners have a check weighman to watch the weighing, and there are times when the coal comes from the mines in a wet condition and some of it sticks to the sides and corners of the cars. At the Shortcreek mine the coal is dumped into a metal weighing pan and it is tilted so that even the dust slides onto the scales. Weighing canditions were a little different at the Three Forks mine, where the complaint was made, but there the company after the complaint was made offered to have a man to look after scraping the coal along the shute, so that the miners would get the full benefit of all that was mined. When a person wants to find something wrong and wants to believe something is wrong, it is not a difficult matter to find some cause for complaint. The average American citizen, made up of 80 or more per cent of our population who are engaged in agricultural pursuits, or who are in no way interested in labor unions, or socialism, (and this class is the real bulwark of this country), the average American citien, we say, will have some doubts about "robbing the miners," when they have been making as high as $80.00 a week, which is better than most business and professional men have been able to make, with thousands of dollars invested in their business and education, while the miner has nothing invested but his labor. Mighty few farmers are making miners wages, taking account of the upkeep of the farm and interest on the investment, and they are not asking for a six hour day, with 60 per cent increase for their produce.

Do you want foreigners, agitators and the I W Ws to take over the product of your labors?

OUR ANSWER.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec 12—1919.

The Candiz Republican
H. B. McConnell

Dear Sir:—

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your communication of Dec. 4th and the clipping from the Cadiz Republican and herewith is my answer and I trust that since you have given your version of the arrests of the miners near Cadiz, so much attention, you will also extend the courtesy of printing my reply to the same.

As an American citizen I resent your attitude toward the foreign element in America and marvel how a man by the name of McConnell could pen such a fulmination against those of foreign birth.

I am not at all surprised at the version of the arrests given you by the miners' ifficials. If there is one thing worrying the officials of all of the A. F. of L. Unions more than another, it is the growth of the One Big Union among their mambership. The officials together with their employers are in perfect agreement on this point. Both realize that once the idea gets a hold upon the rank and file, the officials' control and the employers' graft are gone forever.

It may be correct that the distribution of literature by these man led to their arrest, but did not the fact that they opposed the robbery of the miners in the weighing of coal set them apart at persons worthy of being spied upon by the gum shoe artists of that locality and thus their arrest was sought?

It resents your whole attitude towards these men, as indicated in your article. One of the principles of American law is that the accused are to be considered innocent of charges against them, until found guilty by regular process of law. And the public is also supposed to extend the same leniency in forming its judgement of their acts. Yet your whole article is an implied accusation of guilt. You attempt by inuendo to make these citizens-in-the-making violators of the law simply because they have had in their possession literature of an organization not yet popular and which has as its one purpose the organization of the workers into sufficiently strong unions as to break the power of capital to exploit the workers.

By quoting the words of the indictment against the men, you seek to further prejudice the case of the accused. An indictment is an indictment, nothing else. A charge of murder could as well have been placed in the indictment, but it would not have proved them to be murderers. The criminal syndicalism law is a very handy weapon for the capitalist class in its warfare against the revolt of the workers. It is being used, or rather misused by this class to intrench itself in economic power over the mass of the people of America, both the foreign and native born.

You express a profound ignorance of economic conditions and the philosophy of Revolutionary Socialism and the aims of the I. W. W. when you ask your readers if they "want I. W. W.'s, Radicals and foreigners to take the fruits of their labors." "The fruits of their labor" indeed! Who gets the fruits of labor in this country or any country where capitalism and the profit system rule? Your government statistics will show you that labor receives a very small portion of the fruits of its labor. The rest is taken in rent, interest and profit by the leeches that fatten upon the toil of the masses. Socialism will take nothing from the masses except their chains. The I. W. W. will take nothing from the masses excepting their ignorance of their economic slavery. It will give them class consciousness in place of nationalism and race hatred.

You offer your readers a "sample paragraph" from some of the literature found. Are you so ignorant of the provisions of the criminal syndicalism law as to believe that propaganda for the purpose of urging shorter hours and more pay for the workers as means of acquiring an advantage over capital to be a violation of the same? Since when were strikes for shorter hours and more pay declared illegal? Since when were American workers deprived of the right to stop work when their working conditions were objectionable? Since when were the workers so reduced to slavery that they cannot exercise the first right of free men? If the criminal syndicalism law means this, means the abrogation of the workers right to cease work when their wages and working conditions become intolerable, then it is high time they took such action as to wipe that law out of existence, else we are slaves indeed.

You express a doubt as to the exploitation of the miners and state that they make as much as $80.00 per week. Living in a mining district you must know that this is a false statement which you cannot verify. How many weeks in a year do the miners make $80.00. Ask the miners, —they will tell you that their weekly wages for the past year were nearer $8 than $80. You are perfectly well aware that for months after the armistice was signed and when the mines should have been running full blast, and would have been had not the mine owners sabotaged upon the people by refusing the workers the right to work, that the mines produced but two or three days per week. You know that the miners cashed their liberty bonds and thrift stamps in order to keep their families. You are perfectly aware of this, but you attempt to throw odium upon the men who have produced the fuel that keeps you from freezing, by making false statements.

Of course, it is expected that you would value dollars above men. Dollars invested in business must bring returns in form of interest, but a life invested need bring nothing. The "miner invests nothing but his labor." How about the thousands of deaths that occur in the mines? Let me tell you that they invested more than the coal operators have the courage to do. They invested their lives—and lost. They invested the happiness of their wives, the rights of their children to a parent's protection,—they invested their own right to a better guarded working life, and they lost, and will continue to lose, while sycophantic editors pen lying fulminations against society's most valuable asset—the laborers who make civilization possible.

One would think to read your letter that Americans had renounced the right to revolution. I am not aware that such is the case, nor do I admit they should do so. Americans have been taught from babyhood up and for all the generations of the nation's life that the right to revolt is ours, sanctified by the revolution which gave us birth and also by the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. I, as an American, am not ready to disclaim that right. And I may add that a people which does renounce it is lost to the purposes of human existence.

As to "real Americans resenting the efforts of foreigners upsetting a government they have had no part in organizing"—that is simply a phrase coined by reactionary capitalistic influences and mouthed by practically every apeing lickspittle who hears his master's voice. Capitalistic influences are seeking to divide the workers by the cry of "foreigner" at the same time robbing both foreigner and native born with strict impartiality.

I regard your letter and the article sent as splendid propaganda for Socialism and am publishing same in this week's issue of The Toiler, copy of which I am sending you.

Sincerely yours
E. T. ALLISON.

The Death Ship Returns

The Chicago Herald and Examiner recently took up the fight for the withdrawal of American troops from Siberia and northern Russia (Archangel) in the following language:

"The 111 bodies of American soldiers brought from Archangel by the funeral ship Lake Daraga are not all the bodies of American Soldiers who gave their lives in that bleak district in northern Russia. More than as many more lie buried in nameless, snowtopped graves, which had to be abondoned when the allied column was beaten back by a superior force of natives.

"Not one of these 256 sacrificed Americans knew why he was sent out to suffer and die in far-off Russia, in a war not authorized by the American congress, against a people who never were at war with us. Nor does any of the surviving relatives of these sacrificed Americans to this day know why it was.

"It was a private war determined upon by a few men in secret conclave for purposes they did not care or perhaps dare to make public.

"And it has failed. The American army sent there is out. The big British Army, with its elaborate supplies, equipment and sheduled plan for the capture of Petrograd, is out, together with the force of armed Chinese coolies which it took along to do the rougher work.

"All these lost lives have been wasted and much of the $500.000.000 of appropriated allied treasury.

"Nor is there an accounting. For it was a private war, and nobody, it seems, is responsible."

The Black Sheep

CHAP. II.

The Stuff of Life.

There was in the crowd a young Jewish radical, who upon hearing the conversation between Jack and Collins, made himself part of the company without the formality of an introduction. These men were natural democrats and prison has the effect of intensifying this spirit. It is one of the contradictions of life, that jails, penitentiaries, gallows and fagots have ever been the cradle of Liberty. —The Jew's name was Rudolph Rosen, a small swarthy type of a man, with black hair and large soulful brown eyes. He was an enthusiast on the subject of the "social revolution," an idealist who was ready to die for his convinctions even before he had calculated the market value of his life. This proved him to be of rather an atavistic type harking back to the time when his race was selfsustaining and free.

We might have been described as an incarnation of one of the ancient prophets. His radicalism might be called religious rather than scientific. No Mohammedan ever sought Allah's holy hill with more fervor, never did Christian pray with more earnestness, then this youth preached the doctrine of revolt.

He was unmindful of the fact that he was often hopelessly inconsistent; that he advocated the redemtion of the world thru the destruction of the strong and the multiplication of the weak. It was his own consciousness of weakness that made him plead for the weak and the erring.

He was almost a complete opposite of Collins. He was short and dark while Collins was tall and fair. He was emotional and excitable, while Collins was cold and anaytical, yet in their ultimate aims and hopes these were one. They disagreed not on the facts of their problem, but rather on its solution. They were perhaps best described by calling them the positive and negative pole of the radical movement.

Addressing Collins he said, "well they have us in their net."

"Yes and whose fault is it," retorted the Big man.

"I knew you were going to say that," Rudolph remarked. You will tell me that it is their own fault, and in the next breath that we are not free moral agents. You know that they cannot help it. It is their chemistry that makes them drink, then why blame them?"

"I don't blame them for their damaed depravity, I only blame myself for the sentimentality that makes me stick to the vermn. And I will say more, than that: You and I should be kicked all the way from Frisco to New York and back again for having the softheartedness to stick with them. They are a bunch of human swine, whose highest ideal it is to get their belly full of rot-gut and then to make fools of themselves. They know what it leads to. Have'nt you and I told them all thru the season why the damned rubes tolerate the "Blind Pigs." Have'nt we told 'em of the [illegible] are in it, simply because we lacked the good sense to [illegible] ditching them as soon as they began to guzzle the stuff."

"There you go. Did'nt you say that you did not blame them. Now listen to yourself. There is no consistency in you."

"I am not blaming the [illegible]," Collins flung back at him, "I am describing them."

"But Ed. They are members of our class. We can not have solidarity in our ranks and throw out weaklings, simply because they have a weakness due to this accursed system.—It is the system, not them that we must attack."

"I do attack the system. No one realizes, more than I, the influence of environment on character. They have made a crude Omaresque adaptation to the Capitalist requirements of this age. I know that it is not voluntary on their part. I do not blame them. Neither do I blame the rattle-snake, the gila-monster, the centipede, or the tarantula for their poisonous habits. I realize that they have developed in harmony with the requirements of their life in their respective environments, but I don't go to bed with them on that account. Their environment has made them vermin to me as I am vermin to them. It is of no immediate biologic importance to me that in the course of philogenitic development my ancestors have been worms, lizzards, marz, supials, and seminoids—they, are at best, my poor relations. They mean nothing to me as far as getting a living is concerned. I must make my living as I am, in co-operation with my kind. Those who will not, or as you say, "cannot" cooperate must die—and the sooner the better. We have no reason for any other conclusion, than that they are detrimental to our existence, and there fore we should leave them alone."

Jack was greatly pleased by Collins forceful application of Darwinism to the social problem under dicussion. The merely human feature appealed no more to him than it did to Collins; both of them were blonde beasts. Both of them saw not a human soul in pain, when they beheld the weaklings in phenomena. The difference was that their class, they only saw biologic Jack was not conscious of the effect of these phenomena upon himself, while Collins had had a good deal of experience and was enbittered thereby. What pleased him above every thing else was that there was at least one in that crowd who was able to see beyond the veil of appearances and into the world of realty.

But Rudolph, nothing daunted returned to the fray. "You are to cold bloodedly Darwinian to be just," he protested. "You know that Kropotkin proves that the species that practice mutual aid are the strongest. The needs of life refute your logic."

"The facts of life refute your statements," the Big Man retorted. "I will grant that mutual aid makes for survival, but if I know anything about language, then the word 'mutal' means 'in common'. It means help one another. "But," and his eyes blazed as he pointed to the two drunken members of the crowd had fallen upon the floor in a druken stupor, "how

THE RISE OF THE COMMON MAN

Contemporary history records the rise of the Common Man. Instead of a follower, he is becoming the leader—not individually but by collective and mass action. The common man thru his labor organization is writing the labor history of the present epoch. He has discarded the reverence for leaders, thrown aside their advice, broken down the barriers of ring rule and machine control that heretofore have hedged and restrained him.

Recent great labor strikes bear out this assertion. The movement of the rank and file was stirring even before the last National Convention of the A F of L. In Illinois it broke out in a strike of the Miners who over rode the authority of their district officers and literally told them to "go to hell". The steel strike, if we are correctly informed, was called against the judgement of the officials for the reason that the rank and file were growing insubordinate. The officials felt the power slipping from their hands. They ordered the strike in the fear of the consequences within the organization of the steel workers unless the strike was called.

The coal strike was a strike of the rank and file. When the government secured the mandate ordering the miners' officials to withdraw the strike order, it committed the stupenduous blunder (from the point of view of succeeding in breaking the strike) of placing all responsibility for the strike world cries in vain to the workers to lift it out of the bog into which the evo- [illegible] can touch the individual miner and force him into the mines.

The mass is rising to a control of its own destiny. And the first rule of its rising must be the casting off of reverence for leaders as such. Leaders we must have perhaps, but they must be leaders who interpret labor's needs and respond every moment to its desires. They must be its servants, not attempt to be its masters.

The mass is learning by doing. It is resolving upon its salvation by its own individuality, by its own strength and courage. Let the world rejoice that it is so. Mankind has been led long enough—usually into deeper slavery. The rise of the mass means the beginning of a new democracy, in fact the beginning of a new world.

All power to the workers!

WHY PRODUCE?

The whole cry of the capitalist world to the workers is—PRODUCE! After five years of unequaled destruction of life and property, the world finds the structure of civilization threatened by a scarcity of food, clothing, shelter and machinery. Europe lies in ruins ,nations are starving, millions of people stand gazing at the destructive past or turn their bewildered gaze into a doubtful future, while hunger and nakedness encompass them. Money has lost its value. Only those things which sustain and keep life are of value any where.

But the worker is slow to respond to the masters' call. The capitalist world cries in vain to the workers to lift out of the bog into which the evolution of human society has thrown it. The worker has lost the incentive to produce, knowing that all his efforts in the realm of production but enrich the few at the expense of the many. He knows the treadmill in which he plods his weary life away not for ideals, not for more abundant life, but to fatten parasites and feed the gluttony of imperialistic exploitation.

"Why produce"? the worker may well ask himself . Why produce for a society which robs him at the very fountain head of production, and before his scanty wage has been paid him is, exploitd of many times its value. The goods he produces he is not allowed to retain nor the value thereof. The worker is learning that robbery and production go hand in hand under this present industrial system. He feels a leseening interest in production, much less is he thrilled at the idea of it. He knows that before the millions of starving are benefitted a vast army of go-between parasites munch their mouthful. He knows that production means riches for a few and poverty and still more poverty for the many. The cry of more production as a means of saving society from an impending crash is a false one. Production will only lengthen out the term of bondage of the peoples to their imperialistic masters.

What is needed is not more production but production for use instead of for profit. When the worker receives the value of his toil instead of a portion, then he will produce in abundance. Then will the incentive to labor reach its highest point. Then will he feel the thrill that accompanies a consciousness of social effort.. Let the workers throw off the yoke of slavery that degrades them and their toil. Let them strike from society the talons of all parasites. Let them by class action on the industrial and political fields seize the reigns of power and then shape the world for service to its inhabitants instead of enslaveing the inhabitants for the benefit of parasites.

Let the workers begin the march toward industrial democracy, not toward slavery under the modern task-master, world capitalistic imperialism!

Baker has Big Meetings in Illinois.

A letter just received from comrade Chas. Baker states he has had a very successful series of meetings in a number of Illinois cities. Joliet, Moline, E. Moline, Silvis, Davenport, Rock Island, Rockford, have given him fine meetings. Comrade Baker addressed the striking steel workers at Joliet Thanksgiving day.

While temporarily out of the state, Charlie keeps in touch with the Ohio movement and expresses much interest in the progress of the C. L. P. here. He is busily getting subs for the Toiler, while enroute.

Local Dayton orders more supplies this week. Ordering dues stamps is a regular weekly occurence with this new C. L. P. Local.

More Locals Chartered

Local Martins Ferry, thru secretary Fred White, remits $13.50 for charter and dues stamps for the new Local just organized. Thus they come in one by one. The next two weeks will see many names on our C. L. P. list of up and doing Locals.

We are just now informed that Local Girard affiliates by unanimous vote. Comrade Knecht remits for dues stamps and promises a good live local.

Field-worker J. H. Loucks has just finished a week of activity in Warren, Niles and vicinity. He has spoken before the miners and other organizations and done good personal work in that section.

SPARKS.

Local Niles, formerly one of the most active Locals in the state, has sent us notice of unanimous affiliation. Welcome, Local Niles. We know your record and look for you to equal your past if not to exceed it.

Comrade Francesco Gusmeratti leaves for Italy and in order to keep posted on working class activities here, he is having The Toiler forwarded to his new address. We wish you well comrade and may the revolution in Italy be speeded the faster by your presence.

Comrade Nick Weltlich of Massilon is at it again. This week it is four half yearlies he sends us.

Pictures of comrade Debs are still on sale at the State Office. They are 25c each, and no better ornament for any worker's home can be obtained. Order one.

Comrade D. B. Dale of Wise, Va., is busy wising up his fellow workers. Five new subs from him proves his earnestness.

Five dolar remittances for subscription cards are coming in almost daily and each order calls for a free copy of Lenin, The Man and His Work. Your free copy is waiting your order.

A list of eight subs from comrade R. T. Haworth of Toledo, shows who is busy up there.

Comrade Fred White of Martins Ferry, O., rounds up seven new subs this week. One a day is not a bad record, eh?

Subs are raining in from Guernsey County these days. Reason one of our field workers is on the job there.

I have made a lot of socialists and am going to make a lot more." Thus writes comrade G. H. Beaver of Lisbon, O. And to prove it, he sends in three subs. Can you beat that proof?

Our Sistersville, W. Va., list gets two additions this week. Comrade C. W. Kirkendall is the live wire there.

Dont put a C. L. P. dues stamp in a Socialist Party dues book. Get a new dues book.

Another Russian Branch Joins C. L. P.
And now another Russian Branch of Philadelphia has severed relationship with the Communist Party and affiliated with the Communist Labor Party. This is Branch No. 2. Branch No. 1, left the C. P. some time ago and is now on the rolls of the C. L. P.

Literature orders are reaching the State Office verey day which shows that the comrades are adding to their fund of knowledge these long evenings. Comrade J. M. Rasnick of Dante, Va., orders two books and a number of pamphlets.

An order for $41,000 for dues stamps and supplies from Organizer Toohey of Toledo is a sign of activity that cannot be refuted.

Here are three chances to get a dandy present for yourself, your wife or a friend. Send five dollars for sub cards for The Toiler and get in return either of these: Six Red Months in Russia; Ten Days that Shook the World, or Lenin, the Man and his Work. Now is your chance, take advantage of it.

How do you like the product of The Toiler Cartoon Department? Petty good, eh? There will be more of the same, just watch us grow.

Local Lima orders dues stamps and supplies to the extent of $10.90 this week. The Local held a Reunion meeting last Sunday. Of course reunion means dues payments now and in future.

Another field worker began organization work for the C. L. P. in Ohio last wee. Columbiana County is his present scene of activity and judgeing by latest reports, everything is all to the C. L. P. there.

And that makes four organizers in the field. And there will be more after Jan. 1st. And YOU can help make it possible to put more field workers out by—paying dues—renewing your subscription to The Toiler—distributing literature—doing ALL that you can do toward building up the movement. Do your share, the organizers are doing theirs.

State Secretary's Report.

Nov. 30, 1919.

Comrades:—

While the matter contained in this report has been placed before the Conference, discussed, we feel that a reiteration of the most important matters can properly be had.

Since your last meeting conditions thruout the state have shown a decided improvement that is very encourageing to the Communist Labor Party. Locals are showing a desire to settle their internal difficulties and get down to the business of active participation in the work of advancing the Cause of Revolutionary Socialism. Five more Locals have affiliated by unanimous vote generally. One Local has been cahrtered where the old local remained with the Socialist Party. Dues stamp sales are very encourageing and many new members are joining us. Supplies and literature sales are very good which is proof that comrades are anxious to carry on the propaganda of revolutionary socialism after the period of inactivity thru which we have recently passed.

The State Office has followed the instructions of the S. E. C. and up to this time has placed three competent organizers in the field. They are conscientiously at work building up the movement and urging a greater activity on the part of the local comrades. Altho the prevalent strikes in the coal and steel industries have an effect upon this work, very satisfactory results are being obtained.

We hope to place another comrade in the field next week for there is much work to be done and from the results thus far obtained. we are convinced that there is a ripe field in Ohio for the C. L. P. At least four to six comrades should be kept constantly in the field in this state for several months at least. We may rest assured that a general revival of activities has already begun and we are certain that by the methods now under way, our state movement will build up wonderfully in the next few months. Literature sales are very good, subscriptions are coming in faster than for some time past and all signs point to greater growth and development.

One of the encourageing signs is in the fact that comrades are writing in to the State Office for organizers to assist their local movements. We should try to satisfy this need at as early a date as possible. It is our opinion that the inactivity which has recently been prevalent is passing away and our work will form now on grow in volume and soon reach its former size and aggressiveness.

The State Secretary has placed before the Conference the situation in Ohio at this time and we feel that the recommandations of the Conference should be the subject matter of this meeting.

E. T. ALLISON, State Secretary.

STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING MINUTES OF NOV. 30, 1919.

The Committee met directly after the conclusion of the Conference. Meeting called to order by the State Secretary and comrade Clifford elected to the Chair.

Minutes of the previous meeting read and approved.

The report of the State Secretary was read and accepted.

A copy of a letter to comrade Geo. Bundy. Jos. W. Sharts, M. J. Beery and Edwin Blank relative to their election to the State Executive Commitee was read and endorsed. The subject matter of this letter was the seating of comrade Blank on the Committee instead of comrade Bundy because of non-affiliation with the C. L. P. The decision of the State Secretary in favor of comrade Blank was upheld by the Committee.

Moved and carried that the State Secretary be instructed to write comrade Frank B. Hamilton of Piqua regarding his affiliation with the C. L. P. and if his attitude is adverse to them write comrade Frank P. Baker in regard to his affiliation and seat upon the S. E. C.

A discussion relative to the preparation of a leaflet upon the question of mob rule and the necessity of workers defending themselves was discussed and favorable action taken.

Moved and carried that the State Office pay comrade J. J. Hoge's expenses to the S. E. C. meeting.

The Party situation was discussed generally and present work undertaken was approved. Upon motion the last Sunday in March was set as the date for the next meeting of S. E. C. and the State Office as the place. Motion to adjourn carried.

Field worker J. H. Louks remits $16.55 for literature, subscriptions and dues stamps. That's the way our organizers put the C. L. P. on the map. And then we opened another envelope and there was $17.95 from fieldworker Herbert Knecht for more duesstamps, subscriptions and literature. All of which proves that there is something doing in Ohio and that the C. L. P. is doing it. Wake up you laggards. Get in the swim, it's getting better every day.

Local Guernsey County affiliates with the C. L. P. is the goods news sent in by one of our field workers. Cheering news that for Local Guernsey has about 400 live rebels on its membership rolls. Besides, we are informed that there are possibilities of increasing the number at least 100 per cent. Let's do it Guernsey Comrades!

EDITOR CARNEY ARRESTED.

Jack Carney, Editor of Truth, of Duluth, Minnesota, was arrested by government agents a few days ago charged with obstructing the enlistment service of the U. S. army.

The basis of the charge is found in the circulation of the "Hands off Russia" leaflet. The presentation of the issue as to whether the U. S. was legally at war with Russia at that time will come up at the trial. The U. S. government has made no declaration of war against Soviet Russia tho American soldiers have been in Siberia for months fighting against the Bolshevists.

Comrade E. Curtis Ilkenhans has established a Sunday School of Science for children of the membership of Local Hamilton. Comrade Ilkehans has had experience in this work and we understand his school is progressing nicely.

Abe Herschin put it this way:

"And we're also some shy, on accepting the lie
Of the preacher, that if we behave,
We'll get pie in the sky, bye and bye,
when we die,
Which is sure swell reward for a slave.

Now that guff is all bunk, theological junk,
Not worthy the brain of a cow;
It's a mere mental drunk, for a nut made of punk,
MEN want what they want, here and NOW."

The Illustrated News Service is showing pictures of the "Democratic Heir" to the British throne, when he recently visited the United States. We are at loss to explain a "DEMOCRATIC HEIR" in the same manner that we would be at loss to explain Palm Beach suits among the Esquimos, Wm. Jennings Bryan with a cellar full of whisky, Teddy Roosevelt a Private in Trotzkys army, or Wm. Howard Taft Premier of the Soviet Republic of Russia. There is absolutely no relation in these terms one negates the othr. A dmocratic way is, the best man wins, in a monarchy one is born to the job, the job stays in the family.

C. W. MANTELL DIES.

Comrade C. W. Mantell, of Akron died last week. He was the candidate for Mayor on the Socialist Party ticket two years ago and was also financil secretary of the Machinists Union. It was to this office that he was reelected on the day he received a paralytic stroke.

AGITATED

By Ivor Brown

"These agitators!" said the Colonel, laying down his paper. His wife agreed. It was the only policy at breakfast-time.

"The agitators! They're at the bottom of it all."

"At the bottom of what?"

"Everything. No houses. High prices. Income-tax. Strikes, Ireland, India, Egypt. Trouble here, trouble there. I'd shoot the fellows.'

"But you never were in a combatant regiment, were you, dear?"

"Well, I'd have them shot, if that suits you better. One of those mad politicians has been talking about a land fit for heroes to live in. It isn't. Anyhow, I'm not going to stay here. Now that they're done with me at the depot, damme, I'm going to leave the country."

"And where shall we go?"

Full Draft of Proposed Russian Soviet Peace Terms.

The Allied and Associated Governments to propose that all hostilities shall cease on all fronts in the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Finland, on a date to be set, to allow sufficient time for notification to be received by all parties, and that no new hostilities shall begin after this date pending a conference to be held in a neutral country, provided that either a radio or direct telegraph wire to Moscow should be put at the disposal of the Soviet Government.

The duration of the Armistice to be for two weeks unless extended by mutual consent, and all parties to the Armistice to undertake not to employ the period of the Armistice to transfer troops and war materials to the territory of the former Russian Empire. The conference to discuss peace on the basis of the following principles, which shall not be subject to revision by the conference.

1. All existing de facto governments which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Finland, to remain in full control of territories which they occupy at the moment when the armistice becomes effective, except in so far as the conference may agree upon the transfer of territories; until the peoples inhabitaing the teritories controlled by these de facto governments shall themselves determine to change their governments.

The Russian Soviet Government and all other Governments which have been set up on the territory of former Russian Empire, the Allied and Associated Governments, and other governments which are operating against the Soviet Government, to agree not to attempt to upset by force the existing de facto governments which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire and the other Governments signatory to this agreement.

TO RESTORE TRADE.

2. The economic blockade to be raised and trade relations between Soviet Russia and the Allied and Associated countries to be re-established under conditions which will insure that supplies from the Allied and Associated countries are made available on equal terms to all classes of the Russian people.

3. The Soviet Governments of Russia to have the right of unhindered transit on all railways and the use of all ports which belong to the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Findland, and are necessary for the disembarkation and transportation of passengers and goods between their territories and the sea; detailed arrangements for the carrying out of this provision to be agreed upon at the conference.

4. The citizens of the Soviet Republic of Russia to have the right of free entry into the Allied and Associated countries, as well as into all countries which have been formed on the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Finland. Also the right of sojourn and circulation and full security provided they do not interfere in the domestic politics of those countries.

Nationals of the Allied and Associated countries and of the other countries above-named to have the right of free entry into the Soviet Republics of Russia, also the right of sojourn, and of circulation and full security, provided they do not interfere in the domestic politics of the Soviet Republics. The Allied and Associated Governments which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Finland, to have the right to send official representatives enjoying full liberty and immunity into the various Russian Soviet Republics.

The Soviet Governments of Russia to have the right to send official representatives enjoying full liberty and immunity into all Allied and Associated countries and into the non-Soviet countries which have been formed on the territory of the former Russian Empire in Finland.

A general Amnesty.

5. The Soviet Governments, the other Governments, which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire to give a general amnesty to all Russian political opponents, offenders and prisoners, and to give their own nationals who have been or may be prosecuted for giving help to Soviet Russia.

All Russians who have fought in or otherwise aided the armies opposed to the Soviet Governments, and those opposed to the other Governments which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Finland, to be included in this amnesty.

All prisoners of war of non-Russian Powers detained in Russia, likewise all nationals of those Powers now in Russia, to be given all facilities, of repatriation. The Russian prisoners of war, in whatever country they may be, likewise all Russian nationals including the Russian soldiers and officers abroad, and those serving in all foreign armies to be given full facilities for repatriation.

6. Immediately after the signing of this agreement all troops of the Allied and Associated Governments to be withdrawn from Russia, and military assistance to cease to be given to any of the Governments which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire.

The Soviet Government and the anti-Soviet Governments, which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Finland, to begin to reduce their armies simultaneously and at the same rate to a peace footing immediately after the signing of this agreement.

Foreign Debts Recognized.

The conference to determine the most effective and just method of inspecting and controlling this simultaneous demobilization, and also the withdrawal of the troops and the cessation of military assistance to the anti-Soviet Governments.

7. The Allied and Associated Governments, taking cognizance of the statement of the Soviet Government of Russia in its Note of February 4 in regard to its foreign debts, propose as integral part of this agreement that the Soviet Governments and the other Governments which have been set up on the territory of the former Russian Empire, including Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Finland, shall recognize their responsibilities for the financial obligations of the former Russian Empire to foreign States, parties to this agreement, and to the INDIVIDUAL NATIONALS of such States. Detailed arrangements for the payment of these debts to be agreed upon at the conference, regard being had to the present financial position of Russia.

Note.—The statement of the Soviet Government of February 4, 1919, referred to above is as follows:

1. The Russian Soviet Government does not refuse to recognize its financial obligations to all its creditors, either States or individuals, belonging to the Entente Powers, whereas details of the realization of this point must become the object of special agreement as the result of the proposed negotiations.

2. In view of the difficult financial situation the Russian Soviet Government proposes an exchange with raw materials which will be enunciated in the suggested agreement.

3. In view of the great interest which has always been shown by foreign Capital for the exploitation of Russian natural riches, the Russian Soviet Government is disposed to grant concessions upon mines, forests, and so on to citizens of the Entente Powers under conditions which must be carefully determined, so that the economic and social order of Soviet Russia shall not suffer from the internal rule of these concessions.

4. The Russian Soviet Government will negotiate with the Entente Powers on the question of territorial concessions.

The Soviet Government hopes that it will not be necessary to transfer this offer (with the necessary modifications) to the Central Powers.

Recognize Soviet

"We need the data from Russia to build up the world after its breakdown. For God's sake, let us have no more violence. There has been enough blood spilled," he declared.

He was asked how it was possible to reconcile the declaration that the soldiers of the Russian Soviet government were ready and able to defeat all armed opposition with the assertions frequently made that the Russian people were dying by thousands for want of food and supplies.

More Food for Cities.

This was explained by the fact that there always was plenty of food in Russia, food enough to supply all of Europe with wheat, under normal conditions, and that with these wheat stores now available even the cities would soon be better provisioned. The desperate situation of the industrial centers in the past was due to the cutting off of the granary of Russian from the interior, Minor asserted. The successes of the Soviet troops have changed all this.

With some necessary railroad machinery, threshers and other agricultural machinery and such implements as saws and other tools, Russia can begin to export food, hides, metal and furs within a short time, Minor believes.

On his trips across this country, Minor experienced the oppressive tactics of the rulers of America. He said: "Everywhere in the country you find the brutal hand of Czarism crushing out the liberties of the people in a frantic attempt to kill the thought of the socialization of industry which seems, during the past year, to have become the sole philosophy of the working class. The propaganda of a century could not have done what the events of the past year have accomplished.

Looking to Moscow.

"The working masses are looking to Moscow as the Arabians looked to Mecca.

"I have been able to announce the victories of the Soviet troops two weeks ahead of the news that finally came trough the censored cables and everywhere the crowds simply rose in a religious fervor as the facts were developed."

Taking note of the temper of the crowds he addressed, Minor felt certain that the working class was united in spirit today is it never was before in the history of this country. They are not organized sufficiently as yet, but they are crudely conscious that the only way to solve the inequality between the present classes is the socialization of every enterprise, whether large or small, he said.

Meetings Jammed.

He declared it was true that the workers who respond most to the story of Soviet Russia are the immigrant workers. Answering a question for this reason Minor said:

"The workers of America are largely the recent immigrants. But the native born American who is a worker rises with his comrade. There is no real distinction between workingmen."

He said that the meetings arranged by central bodies of the American Federation of Labor as well as by local unions were frequently jammed to the doors with workers who had no racial ties with the triumphant Russian and Slavic workers, but only the bond of class. In San Francisco 4,000 machinists, mostly Irish-American, packed the hall, and in Minneapolis hundreds were turned away.

He found the same spirit of unrest in the Northwest as in Frisco and as prevalent in the Middle West as in the East. Everywhere labor is awakening, Minor insisted.

U. S. Operatives Shadow Minor.

Secret service men dogged Minor at every step. The fact that Postmaster General Burleson had placed his official ukase on the denial of second-class mailing rights to The Call was no surprise to Minor, who knows that official's record in his home state, Texas, where the Minors cut no small figure.

"The Postoffice Department has ceased to be a mail carrying machine, but has become a police spy system. The denial of second-class mailing privileges to The Call is tobe expected. It is just in the routine of the establishment of the Iron Heel. It all comes down to nothing more than an effort to keep the masses from understanding."

He hopes that the people will take this bureaucratic right out of the hands of the Postmaster General.

Denounces Deporting Mania.

Minor expressed himself very vigorously against the deportation mania of the present rulers. He said the destruction of the tradition of America as a haven for political exiles struck at the faith of those Americans who so for have held to the better ideals of this country. He said further:

"They are trying to amputate the thinking part of the country by sending the 'Red' out. They will soon find native Americans who will give then as much trouble and then we'll hear of exiles.

"The Wilson administration, with the help of Burleson, may not go down as the most cotemptible and hypocritical in the history of this country for it will soon be against the law to say so."

May Distract Attention.

One of the hurtful reactions of the deportations will be to distract the attention of the public from the thousands of men and women that have been rotting in American prisons for two years, some of whom are dying there without having had a trial.

"We may live to see the voice of protest stifled everywhere," he remarked.

With the principles of political refuge destroyed as also the rights of free press and free assemblage by the direct action of the public authorities, the awakened labor movement receives new incentive to bring about a change, Minor asserted.

Minor closed with the remak that the assaults upon the workers and upon free opinion by the supposed guardians of liberty were destroying the No Man's Land between Capital and Labor and that the antagonists would soon be confronting each other with all camouflage removed. Labor will win, Minor believes.

—New York Call.

The day will surely come when the only man who is not respectable will be the man who consumes, and does not produce. Disgrace will consist in living a life of conspicuous waste, and the greatest man among us will be the one who confers most benefits.—

Elbert Hubbard.

What Next

trols hem. Do you ask who controls society. What's happening in the Pennsylvania steel strike? Who's dictator there—the strikers, or Judge Gary and the State Constabulary?

What happened in the Miners strike? Are he miners dictating or the operators? Did the miners cause an injuction to be issued against themselves. Its plain that the people are not controlling society, but on the other hand it is equally plain that the barons are dictators.

Our liberty died when our jobs became the property of others, and we are but serfs now. An employe of Henry Ford said, "I go to prison eight hours every day."

The barons put things over during war time when people were burning with patriotism — the Draft. The Espeionage Act, for German spies? but which really was intendend for radicals, such as I. W. W., Socialists, Non-partisan League, radical labor agitators with men and women whose message was contrary to the interests of the system. The Atty. Gen. in his report for 1918 mentions no German spies, but men such as Waldron of Vermont who was guilty of preaching the Brotherhood of Man was given fifteen years. In New York state Randolph, an I. W. W. whose great-grand-father was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence was given five years. Col House said, 'President Wilson will restore liberties when the war is over.' But we have since learned that neither the President nor Col. House have any liberties to restore.

Debs said: "While there is a lower class I am in it. While there is a criminal class I am in it. While there is a soul in prison I am not free."

The controlling machinery of public opinion passed the necessary legislation— New York Criminal Syndicalist Law, passed also by Ohio, Cal, Penna., which reads something like this: —"Any man who engages in any form of agitation can be sent to jail."

Already the U. S. is cleaning out the Russians, including the nonresisting Tolstoian anarchist. A Bill has been introduced into the Senate to provide for a penal institution on the Philippine Islands. This Bill will probably not pass the coming session but will be fruit for picking in another year.

Gompers has been a strong political adherent of the Wilson machinery. In fact he has been known as the "kitchen cabinet" and has been indispensable up to the present time. But in the mean ime he was building up a big organization until it totaled our million.

Gompers machine has become too powerful and he has been challenged. At the recent Industrial Convention in New York the President chose Morrison, Rockefeller Jr., Gary, Wilson, hoping that the barons would take a middle position. But they were uncompromising and Gompers could not effect a conciliation between Capital and Labor. The last morning the Labor representatives did not appear and the Gary group waited for them; then they could say that the Labor representatives broke up the Convention. Gompers was used as their tool till they found he was becoming too powerful and then they cast him aside as they would anything else that had served its purpose. His organization was growing too powerful; radicalism was growing in the Machinist's and Carpenters' Union. Frank Vanderlip, President of the National City Bank, the largest private banking institution n the country, in his return from Europe made a speech before the American financiers in which he declared that the chaos in Europe would come to he U. S. He did not hold his position long but was succeeded by Judge Gary, cold, calculating, careful, determined, speaks for the organized employers of the U. S. and his policies prevail.

In the recent coal strike the Government issued an injunction compeling leaders of the Mine Workers to call the strike off. The A. F. L. issued a charter to the police of Boston and later deserted them even failing to give the police their moral support. Public sentiment was worked up in that vicinity till Labor backed Coolidge against the police.

The A. F. L. organized in 1881 gave the people the right of collective bargaining. In the recent steel strike Judge Gary refused to recognize the closed shop but on the other hand was firm in his stand for the open shop and even refused to recognize the organized employees.

The employing interests are determined o break up labor organizations in the U. S. They are also refusing the Railway Brotherhood demands. They are beginning the dismemberment process in the A. F. L. today with Judge Gary the leading opponent.

In 1920 is the Presidential election. Already the Republicans are considering major General Wood as their candidate, which will mean military dictatorship by the capitalist class. Then there will be a reign of blood and iron as Bismarck tried. A big issue in the coming campaign will be "law and order". The employing class is considering Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood and his machine to keep law and order, knowing that repressive government is the only way to prevent the overthrow of the present system of exploitation.

WHAT ARE PEOPLES ATTITUDE UNDER PRESENT CIRCUMANCES.

1. Liberty is gone under the capitalist system.

2. Liberty is gone till it is established economically in the United States.

It is necessary to take a new line of action and what is that?

1. Line of consistent education and agitation. The rural people which consists of 46.2 percent of our population do not know that our liberties are gone.

2. Social revolution — maintain a system to feed and house the entire population. To bring about that revolution three different periods are necessary. Education, agitation, overturn, when this is accomplished there will be an increase in productive efficiency.

It will take years of experience to teach world solidarity. Till that time the social change will not be accomplished. An organization that will draw people together along industrial fields, persuading them that they have lost their liberties and that they should regain them, and finally convincing them, is the only way to accomplish this social change, or revolution.

The way our filed workers gather in subs for The Toiler, proves how easy it is to get them. All that's needed is simply a request and a sample copy. When every comrade considers himself an agitator and a propagandist, the workers' press will grow in a manner to put kinks in capitalism.

"Anywhere," snapped the Colonel.

"America?" suggested the Colonel's wife, helpfully.

"Rubbish! Place that Fellow Eyewash Wilson comes from? He's an agitator, if ever there was one. A regular Bolshevik. League of Nations, indeed. League of piffle; and with all my little faults, Clara, I never was a piffler! A little brusque at times, I admit, but never a footler.

"Well, then, shall it be France?"

"Stuffed with agitators. Desperate fellows; they're always trying to kill someone. I can't think why that chap Clemenceau doesn't shoot the lot."

"Ah, he's not a Christian, you see, dear."

"Isn't he, by God? Atheist and republican, I suppose. Then we couldnt manage France. I could never live in a republic."

"That rules out a lot of places. We can't go to Russia, or to Germany, or to Austria, or to Portugal, or to Switzerland, or to any of those funny new places with long names invented by the Peace Conference. But there's still Spain left. I'm sure the climate must be lovely!"

"Don't be irrelevant. No, Clara, I shall not go to Spain. The Spaniards are Roman Catholics, and, with all my faults, I never was a Papist."

"That rules out Italy, too. And that does seem a shame."

"Italy," roared the Colonel. "Don't mention Italy. Its a positive nest of agitators. You remember Caporetto."

"But it's full of charming poets and artists."

"Worst of all. I distrust the pack of them. Dangerous, Subversive. That's the word, subversive."

"Then I give it up," said the Colonel's wife.

"Just like you. No resource, no imagination. Now what about dear little Holland?"

"What! Along with the Kaiser!"

"Well, dash it, the Kaiser, with all his faults, was a gen—— I mean to say he never was an agitator."

—(London Herald.)

The Black Sheep.

does that spawn of Competition help me, that I should be duty bound to help them? I will tell you right now, that you, like all idealists argue from your emotional desires rather than from the facts of life. I wish that you would be able to see that it is impossible for us to build any kind of an organization if we do not make sobriety and decency toward one another an essential of membership. We must learn to shun all these booze-befuddled sots as tho they were a creeping pestilence."

"If we don't organize them then they will scab on us," Rudolph protested.

"And if you do organize them they get you into trouble," Collins' reply. "There is no arguing; your own logic is against you. You believe in the doctrine of "Mutual Aid," and that scum is too damned degenerate to aid themselves."

"But, organization and education will reform them,' the other insisted.

"If that were possible then the church would have filled the world with sobriety. You can't talk energy into a stone. I tell you, they are not men in the real sense of the word. They are the end products of the capitalist-slave-making machinery. We must organize the Slave Men, and let Nature takes care of that [illegible] waste. The new order of sodiety will require a higher order of responsibility; a keener sense of social interdependence and how are you going to get it, if that vermin gets a chance to survive and fill the world with their spawn.—Out of the organization they scab on us, in the organization they scab on us. They are a nuisance where ever they are."

"My dad would give a farm to be possessed of your vocabulary when he discusses the labor problem before the Grange," Jack remarked.

"He has an idea that all harvest workers are pretty much as you describe these men. I used to think so myself, but this fall has shown me that there is a vast difference between the mental resources and ideals of different workers. I used to think that men were poor because they drank, now I'm almost inclined to agree with Rudolph that they drink because they are poor. If we will do away with exploitation I think that then we do away with the cause of drunkeness. Our job is not to jump on the victim but to overthrow the system of which the victim is a product."

"How are you going to overthrow the system?" Collins snapped.

"By education and organization." Jack replied, while Rudolph nodded approval.

"How are you going to educate and organize animals like that, whose highest ideal it is to find a bottle of rot-gut and guzzle until they mop the road with their whiskers. You have seen them in meetings. What constructive thot ever enters their brain? What good results ever come from their presence? What good are they in strikes? Can you ever trust them in an important position? They will sell their soul for a bottle of booze and throw their fellow workers in for good measure. No, You might as well try to teach a snake the fiddlers art as to try to educate and organize a lepers' brood whose trinity is vulgarity, drink and irresponsibility."

"It seems to me that you believe in prohibition?" Jack said naively.

"I do" was the laconic reply.

"You know that prohibtion doesn't get anywhere, Rudolph put in. "It is a reform measure. I thot you were a revolutionist. You're the most inconsistent man I've ever seen. You belong in the Populist party or in the Baptist church. You have no place in a radical organization."

"Neither have you; You are chuck full of that, man the child of God idea, which leads you to the conclusion that all men are good and useful only the system is bad. You want to change the system with the very products of the system. Reform a de-denegerate young. Talk of consistency. generate mother thru her equally degenerate young. Talk of consist- You are nothing but an anarchist preaching the fallacious idea that all men are good at heart in the face of the biological fact that life produces variations upward and downward. You seem to think that men are bad as a result of government just because you forget the fact that before they had government they were cannibals. Don't talk about consistency. Get yourself before a looking glass. You will never build up a union until you resolutely kick out every element that has a tendancy to drag you down and carefully presdrve and build up the elements that will work and stick together."

"It seems as if Collins is right at that," Jack suggested.

"He is sore," Rudolph explained.

SOVIET TO BE MASTERS SOON.

W YORK.—That Germany will soviet form of government the impression gained by own, staff correspondent of York "World," as a result of interview with Dr. Geyer, leader of pendent Socialist Party. In a righted cable dispatch to the orld," dated Berlin, December 2, Brown describes his interview in following terms:

Germany will be a Soviet Republic months to two years," was the fident prophecy made to The orld" correspondent by Dr. Friedrich gust Karl Geyer of Leipzig, a mber of the National Assembly the new leader of the Independent cialist Party, succeeding the late Haase. Herr Geyer said:

Radicalism is not receding in Germany, though it may seem so on the because of fewer strikes. At masses are steadily growing radical. The masses have fought of exhaustion, but the pre- is only a breathing spell be- wing the struggle for com- dustrial democracy and the ship of the proletriat.

Soviet Republic will become much quicker if Germany's aries make a serious attempt re the monarchy. In this case dicalized masses will rise, not democracy, but to beat back chy. They will not halt there, go storming on over the de- democracy and will set up a ship of the proletariat in the form of a Soviet Republic.

"If the monarchist reactionaries do not attempt to start anything, the serious progress to Sovietism will be slower, perhaps peaceful; but the present evolution to a Soviet Republic is the inevitable consequence of the effects of the World War."

According to Herr Geyer, the German Soviet Republic will differ from the Russian model in that the Russian Bolsheviki began at the top by seizing power and then trying to organize downward. Germany's radicals, Herr Geyer said, are already at work perfecting the organization of the Soviet Republic by beginning the organization at the base.

The so-called "Betriebsraete" or factory Soviets either already exist or are being formed. These basic Soviets are further being co-ordinated into higher Soviets for the various industries. Organization work is thus being pushed right up to the peak of proletariat power, so when the hour strikes for a dictatorship of the proletariat to seize the reigns of government, the machinery of the Soviet Republic will be in complete working order and will function smoothly.

STRIKE HEAD IMPRISONED.

Winnipeg, Man., Dec. 27th. R. B. Russell, leader of the general strike here last May, who was found guilty Wednesday of seditious conspiracy, today was sentenced to two years inprisonment in the Stony Mountain penitentiary.

An International Greeting.

Christmas, 1919.

Dear Comrade 'Gene: —

The Communist Party of Mexico gives you its kindest wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, and sends its love and greetings to you and to all the boys in Atlanta. May the New Year be a freer one for you all.

Enclosed in this letter are cards from some of the members of Local Mexico City. Another package of cards will follow in a few days.

The names of the signers of these cards are:

Geo. Barreda, International Secretary. Communist Party of Mexico, also Delegate 3rd International.
Luis Macotela, General Secretary, Local Mexico City.
R. A. Sandoval, Local Secretary, Local Mexico City.
John A. Jutt, member of Executive Committee of Mexican I. W. W.
Linn A. E. Gale, publisher of "Gale's Journal of Revolutionary Communism".
Communist Executive Committeemen, and Delegate to the 3rd International.
F. C. Luna, Sr., Communist Executive Committeeman and a Filipino.
R. Schutz, exile from the United States.
Crecensio Martinez.
Enrique H. Rodriguez, Executive Committeeman of I. W. W. Printers' Union.
José Refugio Rodriguez, Executive Committeeman of I. W. W. Printers' Union.
Alfonso Araeji.
José Carmero Guzman.
Magdalena E. Gale, wife of Comrade Gale and National Committeeman, Communist Party.
Adolfo Rodriguez.
Max Berger, exile from the United States.

Some of the comrades cannot write and speak English, so merely signed their names, but we know you will appreciate the spirit of their little remembrances, rather than the value of them or the manner in which they are addressed. Your picture — or pictures, rather, for we have several — areon our wall where we meet, and we often look at it and wish your freedom in the near future.

Yours in Comradeship, Hoping for the Dawn.

Lest We Forget

(Dedicated to America's Political Prisoners.)

You who stroll this singing night
And drink the effervescing stars,
Halt for thought on those who might
Be with you but for iron bars. ...

You who walk the steady ways
Of workadays and pleasured eves,
Remember every Christ who bears
A cross for what his soul believes

Oh, there are lords who strut about,
Glutted to their shriveled souls,
And gloat upon the thralls who dared.
The truth — for bitter prison holes.

And every fatted concubine
Lounging for her war-fed male
Giggles with a grewsome ease
At splendid motherhood in jail.......

And every little cockerel,
Combed and feathered, proud with power,
Snickers with a sickly grin
At shackled flesh that wil not cower.

But this I know from ruined Rome—
In lore of blind brutality —
The torchlight of a martyr's flesh
Can light the way to liberty.......

Then you who love and live and laugh
And ply your tasks so airily,
Remember every Christ who bears
Your burdens through Gethsemane!

TOLSTOI'S BIOGRAPHER CALLS ON WORKERS OF WORLD TO END BLOCKADE.

Paul Birukoff, in Powerful Plea, Indicts Allies for Hunger in Russia Paints Terrible Picture of Suffering Due to Economic Warfare.

Paul Birukoff, life friend and biographer of Count Leo Tolstoi ,has added his powerful voice to the world-wide chorus of condemnation of the economic blockade of Soviet Russia. In an appeal addressed to the workers of all countries, Birukoff denounces the blockade as an attempt to exterminate the Russian people, and calls on the toilers to end it.

Birukoff paints a terrible picture of hunger in Russia. "But it is you who are producing these very things; not the Soviet government," he says to the "rulers demoralized by power." He continues, "For you the hour of repentance has not yet struck. You, too, are to be pitied. I turn from you."

Birukoff concludes his appeal to the workers by referring to his "great and undeserved happiness" in the friendship of Tolstoi.

His Voice Would Thunder."

"I know that were he alive today," he says, "his powerful voice would thunder through the world and bring the powerful to their knees. Mine is weak. But I would be criminal did I not raise it. In the name of my great dead master, I appeal to you, brothers, workers, save Russia!"

Birukoff's appeal follows in full:

"In hours of sleeplessness, in work and leisure, among crowds and in solitude, in the midst of children, and beneath the sun's resplendent rays, I am haunted everlastingly by a horrible nightmare.

"I visualize an ocean of suffering—starving, exhausted people, old men, women, children, workmen and workwomen in the prime of life, withering and sinking under the yoke of a terrible disease—lack of food, and all the deadly ills which flow from it.

"The strong becoming weak; the weak gradually slipping into the grave. Emaciated countenances, enfeebled muscles; the soul, deprived of resisting power, invaded by despair and by hatred against the authors of the disaster. Above all is it terrible to think of the children streching out their tiny hands, clamoring for food, gazing in mute reproach when it is refused them. Why?

"This disaster is taking place in Russia.

"The consciousness of this unceasing plague is terrible. But there is something even, worse than that. It is natural for a man, who is not a monster, to hasten to relieve a disaster of which he has cognizance.

"But there is no limit to the despair of men who, desirous of staving off disaster and of seeking its cause to find a remedy, are faced with the fact that it has no rational cause, that the tortures it produces are insensate. With such despair am I filled when I see that the sufferings to which the bodies and souls of the Russian people are subjected benefit no one.

Russia Fed Europe Before War.

"Russia produces millions of tons of wheat in excess of her consumption. Before the war she fed Europe. Why is she starving at present? Why is it impossible for her to transport wheat from where it is produced to where it is wanted? Before the war, Russia did not posses a suf-

Bolsheviks Gain --- But Not on the Front Page.

News space too valuable for Reds since Kolchak began to run. No news is good news. Look for Bolshevik success on inside pages now.

Since Kolchak packed up his old kit bag and scurried accross Siberia for that little sprint of a thousand miles a few weeks ago, there has been very little news in the capitalist press concerning the Bolsheviki. We used to look for Bolshevik news on the front pages. If we found it there, then we knew the Bolsheviki were losing or at least were said to be losing. Now that all reference to them can only be found on the inside pages and in remote and curtailed paragraphs, we know that they are wining. A capture of half a dozen Bolsheviks used to be heralded in six inch type in the first columns of our highly respectable bourgeois sheets, alas, no more. If you want to know what's doing in Siberia, take a spy glass and by carefully scrutinizing each inside column you may be able to find a paragraph or two concerning some doings there. And now of late, these paragraphs have taken on a very bad color—for Kolchak, Denikin and Crowd. That this motely crew of capitalist tools are still running with all the speed of which they are capable may be judged by the following dispatches discovered hidden away in corners of a capitalist daily. All in all, when you hear no news of the Bolsheviks, take it for good news. The old rule holds good.

IRKUTSK, Dec. 22.—The city of Tomsk, western Siberia, has been evacuated by the Siberian troops of the all-Russian government. General evacuation of Tomsk began Dec. 16.

The council of ministers of the all-Russian government has issued a statement denying reports that the Bolsheviki have proposed peace to Admiral Kolchak, head of the government and to Gen. Denikine, leader of the anti-Bolshevik forces on the southern front.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—State department advices today reported that Bolshevik attacks in Esthonia were increasing and that negotiations for the withdrawal into Letvia of Gen. Yudenitch's Russian army were in progress.

With the capture of Taiga, at the junction of the branch line to Tomsk, Polish troops west of that point will have to fight their way eastward, the report said.

The Soviet government is trying to stimulate construction of army tanks and has offered prizes ranging from 50,000 rubles up to 450,000 for plans, to be the property of the Soviet government, according to an advertisement in a Petrograd paper Nov. 11.

LONDON Dec. 22.—Seven hundred soldiers of the army commanded by Admiral Kolchak, head of the all-Russian government in Siberia, have been found frozen to death in a hospital near Omsk, according to a wireless dispatch received here from Moscow.

When Novo Nikolaevsk, in eastern Siberia, was captured Dec. 13, about 0,000 soldiers and 500 officers fell into the hands of the Bolsheviki according to an official statement issued by the Soviet government at Moscow. Booty taken by the reds comprised a section of the American Red Cross and the Ufa branch of the state bank with 40,000,000 rubles in Siberian bank notes.

SLAV SOCIALISTS REVOLT AGAINST KOLCHAK RULE.

Paris, Dec. 27. — Revolutionary Socialists have formed a committee government in Irkutsk, Siberia, where the All Russian government of Admiral Kolchak established its headquarters after being driven from Omsk, according to news received in French official circles today.

The revolutionists took possession of the Irkutsk station on the Trans-Siberian railway, the reports state.

It is considered doubtful whether Admiral Kolchak will find anything of his government when he finally goes to Irkutsk. His present whereabouts are not definitely known.

He is reported as having encountered great difficulties with detachments of Cecho-Slovak troops which are en route to Vladivostok by the Trans-Siberian railway. These troops have been guarding sections of the line and have not succeeded in getting along well with Admiral Kolchak.

Japanese Attitude Watched.

Bands of Bolsheviki now are not far from the Baikal district, which is raising the question in diplomatic circles here how Japan will look upon the prospect of the presence of Lenine's forces in immediate proximity to the Japanese sphere of influence.

It is supposed here that conversations already are in progress between Tokio and Washington regarding the Siberian questions affected by the advance of the Bolsheviki and the weakening of the Kolchak government.

KOLCHAK'S ARMY GONE, AVER REDS.

London, Dec. 26. — The Bolsheviki have captured Tomsk and also the towns of Fastoff, Vassilkov, Krementchug, Izium, Belovodsk, Makeevka, and Kokpekhta, according to a wireless dispatch received tonight from Moscow.

The communication adds that after the capture of Tomsk the Reds advanced from Novo Nikolaevsk to the main line of the Trans-Siberian railroad and occupied the station of Taiga, taking an enormous amount of booty and a number of prisoners.

"The road to Krasnoyarsk and Irkutsk is now open, and Admiral Kolchak's army in this region has ended its existence," says the communication.

The dispatch adds that Galician troops intended for the defense of Kiev, have revolted against Gen. Denikine, the anti-Bolshevik leader in the south, and attacked the volunteer army in the rear.

LEGION WARNED TO KEEP THE LAW.

Law resides in civil authority, not in mob law, D'Olier tells Legionaries.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Franklin D'Olier national commander of the American Legion, today declared that neither "national, state, nor local organizations of the American Legion have any right to take the law in their own hands or interfere with proper authority," and warned members of the legion that such action would be subversive of the principles and ideals of the organization.

The declaration was part of a statement made by the national commander in view of recent reports of activities of members of the legion, which, he said, made it imperative that the policy of the organization with respect to its standing on the maintenance of law and order be defined.

"The American Legion," Mr. D'Olier said, "represents nearly 5,000,000 citizens who have demonstrated their loyalty and patriotism. We realise, however, that there are 100,000,000 other Americans just as patriotic and loyal. We represented the spearpoint, keen and true, and back of us was the power of a whole nation at war.

"In times of need and emergency we members of the American Legion stand ready as individuals to support, strengthen and speed up, if necessary, the civil authorities, charged with the maintenance of law and order .... but always in accordance wit competent authority, which we realize now is civilian and not military, and originates in the constitution of the United States as expressed through national, state and local governments.'

The Co-operative State.

By Robert G. Ingersoll.

During this holidays season, when "good will to man" is suposed to reign somewhat upon this troubled sphere, it is well to consider the following from the pen of Ingersoll, hated by the Church for his atheism, but who is now recognized by mankind at large as one of the world's anointed.

I see a world where thrones have crumbled and where kings are dust. The aristocracy of idleness has perished from the earth.

I see a world without a slave. Man at last is free. Nature's forces have by science been enslaved. Lightning and light, wind and wave, frost and flame, and all the secret subtle powers of earth and air are the tireless toilers for the human race.

I see a world at peace adorned with every form of art, with music's myriad voices thrilled while lips are rich with words of love and truth — a world in which no exile sighs, no prisoner mourns; a world on which the gibbet's shadow does not fall; a world where labor reaps its full reward; where work and worth go hand in hand; where the poor girl, in trying to win bread with the needle — the needle that has been called "the asp for the poor"—is not driven to the desperate choice of crime or death, of suicide or shame.

I see a world without the beggar's outstretched palm, the miser's heartless, stony stare, the piteous wail of want, the livid lips of lies, the cruel eyes of scorn.

I see a race without disease of flesh or brain—shapely and fair, the married harmony of form and function — and as I look, life lengthens, joy deepens, love canopies the earth; and over all, in the great dome, shines the eternal star of human hope.

"If ever there was a moment in the history of America when we cannot afford to let our own press die for lack of funds, it is now. — Mob lence and governmental tyranny will do what they can to silence us. Let us swear by all we hold dear that not one fighting revolutionary So- t journal shall go under for lack of funds." — The Liberator.

THE SUPERHUMAN ENERGY OF THE WORKERS

(Ivestya, Petrograd, August 1)

In the Russian press, published abroad by our counter-revolutionary emigrants, are often found complaints about the inertia of the bourgeoisie that has been deprived of the power as contrasted with the enormous work performed by the proletariat.

A Cadet newspaper, Rodina, published in Kharkor, says: "One must have the courage to confess that we ought to learn much from the Bolsheviks—we can but profit from that. One must marvel first of all at their superhuman energy.

"Every one who desires and can help the holy cause of resurrecting the country, must take an example from them and work without sparing his forces. Not in vain is it said of some of the commissars that one does not know when they sleep."

Not long ago an aristocratic woman fugitive from Petrograd, contrasted the invincible energy of the Bolsheviks, their incredible ability to work, with the flabbiness and looseness of the bourgeois class that is capable only of whining on account of its own poor success.

The admissions of our enemies have a deep political significance. The Communist party is the advance ranks of the proletariat, its most conscious and energetic part; it is the vanguard of the working class, The working class is full of exhaustless force; in its midst are resting immense resources of potential energy which now, when the power is passing into its own hands, are transferred into kinetic energy, are transformed into action. "The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains, but they have a world to gain," are the words of the Communist Manifesto; the workmen are setting to work to solve this great task, having untouched resources of energy.

"A host is rising that has no bounds,
It will have a force that is beyond measure." (Nyekrassov).

But the bourgeoisie—our adversary—is a feeble, dying-out class, without faith in the future, without faith in its work, without an ideal, without zeal; it has not the enthusiasm without which—to speak with Saint-Simon—one cannot accomplish great works.

There was a time when the bourgeoisie, too, manifested energy, destroying absolutism and feudalism, when it was a revolutionary, a rising class—that was at the end of the Eighteenth Century, at the time of he Great French Revolution.

But already in the year 1848, Marx, in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, characterized the German bourgoisie thus: "Devoid of faith in its own slogans, with phrases instead of ideas, scared by the world tempest, exploiting the world tempest never with energy always with plagiary, isipid in its lack of originality, original in its insipidity, without initatve, without faith in itself, without faith in the people, without a world mission, without eyes, without ears, without teeth, without anything."

At present the bourgeoisie is definitely and irretrievably doomed by history to perish, and, being in the depth of its soul conscious of its doom, it cannot find the necessary strength for the fight against the proletariat.

But the strength of the proletriat is inexaustible; it only begins to develop its strength, ever new layers are set in motion, as they undertake the great task of rebuilding the old world.

A Letter to 100 Per Cent Americans

Being a 100 per cent. American myself and believing that as such it is necessary to know the history of my beloved country, I decided, during a recent convalescence, to brush up my knowledge of the past deeds of our glorious forefathers. For this purpose I got out the old history that had been the source of inspiration and enjoyment to me when I had attended the little old one-room country school.

I read the well known story of the heroic discoverer again and lived with the Pilgrims and Puritans thru cruel struggles against the hard natural environment and the savage Indians. Next came the great wars against the French and Indians and again I was filled with the old gladness that the country was saved for the people of the greatest nation of that time, the English. With even greater force than in my schooldays I am struck by the wisdom of the allseeing Providence watching over us then even as in the critical times thru which we have just passed.

But here came my first shock. "The Revolutionary Epoch" was the heading of the next section and the similarity to the name of a radical sheet recently printed in Boston and called the "Revolutionary Age" was starting to say the least. And I wondered—Revolution is so foreign to the spirit of all 100 per cent. Americans and gives the present day agitators such a good talking point would it not have been better had the historian picked out some other title such as "The fight for Democracy." Also some of the things related in connection with this first "Fight for Democracy", as I shall hereafter designate this period would much better have been left out. Not that they are untrue but it is not good for the ignorant people of the lower classes to know such things as they are unable to see them in their true significance. For example there is the story of the treatment of the Stamp Act collectors who were often ridden thru the towns on rails and otherwise mistreated. Are not such tales likely to incite some of the hair brained followers of Lenin to similar offences against the officers of law and order of our own time. Again the destruction of 342 chests of tea by mobs disguised as Indians at what is called the Boston Tea Party should be rewritten for we should not instill in the minds of the growing children such an utter disregard for the sacred rights of private property.

However in regard to the battle of Bunker Hill there is one case in which all of our school histories are to be commended. I refer to omission of any reference to the fact that a plain red flag was carried by one detachment of our illustrious forefathers in that heroic encounter. Think of the amount of time space and energy that such an omission has saved us. Imagine how hard it would be for us to explain to the dullwitted children of the working classes that what was considered a noble deed and stimulating example of 100 per cent. Americanism at that time has changed into an act of anarchy and open sedition today. Had that been printed we would have to use a great amount of space in the public press to clarify the public mind, space that we are now able to use in recounting the Bolshevik atrocities and the nationalization of women in Russia.

Up to the present time I have only read as far as the Battle of Bunker Hill and have picked out only the more flagrant cases. The urgent need of immediate action has impelled me to write if only so incompletely, rather than to wait till finishing the reading of the book. If, however, I find other instances which my sure instinct of a 100 per cent. American tell me should be altered I will write of them later.

Passing from the field of American history there are, however, two more instances that I wish to call attention to before closing. In the fight for human freedom altogther too much credit is given to that demagogue, Martin Luther. The mere fact that he was a Hun should be enough to more than overbalance any other good that he may have accomplished. I understand that the parochial schools handle his case much differently than the public schools and the events of the last five years have certainly fully justified them. But all of the schools, public and parochial, place too much stress on a certain Jewish-Heavenly agitator, J. Christ, sometimes called Jesus and the Lord. Here was a man forever stirring up the people. The different accounts of his life are somewhat contradictory and confusing. It appears that there was a certain body of 100 per cent. Jews who made it their particular business to curb such radicals, and kept close watch on Christ's activities the same as the A. P. L. of our time, watched undesirable citizens during the late war. After a speaking and organizing trip thru the surrounding country Jesus returned to the capital and started a riot. These patriotic Jews took him before the governor, Pontius Pilate, who gave him a public trial. Owing to the craftiness of the prisoner and the lack of proper legislation (the criminal syndicalist law had not yet been passed) Pilate was unable to give the rioter the proper punishment. Jesus was turned over to the vigilance committee who with the help of some soldiers set a noble example for the present times by crucifying him. To make a martyr of such a person is as ridiculous as to martyrize Joe Hill or Frank Little or any of the destroyers of democratic foundations such as we have today. It merely encourages lazy, weakminded and improvident persons of today into similar follies. It makes the task of all true American supporters of law and order that much the more difficult.

Hoping that this will arouse my co-workers to some consciousness of the magnitude of the task ahead of them, I remain,

A real 100 per center.

FLINGS AND STINGS

An industrial firm in advertising "barreled sunlight" says, in a full page adv.: "Factory Fatigue, the greatest drag on output." Continuing, it says, "Waiting for the whistle to blow! Men work with tired eyes and draw brows. Hands move less swiftly, less accurately as fatigue grows. All through the afternoon quarrels and complaints increase. Discontent—spoilage—slow work, these are the well known evils of factory fatigue. It is the greatst drag on output."

The advertisement goes on to state that the remedy is to be found in MORE LIGHT. We agree, but instead of "barreled sunlight," we would suggest economic light. Knowledge of the relationship of the class nature of society. Knowledge of the law of value and who in the last analysis is the REAL creator of values.

Swift and Company are continually advertising, in large costly full page or half-page advertisements in the newspapers that they only receive 2.04 per cent. on the dollar. Mighty poor business heads—those Swifts, because most any old country bank will pay 4 per cent. on the dollar as interest without any work on the part of Swift and Company. Swift's advertisements reminds one of the old merchant who always sold everything below cost and could only stay in business "because he did so much business."

* * *

The life of the ordinary merchant is not all roses. In a recent survey of the toy shops there was much wailing and gnashing of teeth amongst the merchants because they had made the wrong guess in buying their Christmas stock of toys. Their guess was that this would be a military Christmas, so they laid in enormous stocks of toy cannon, tin soldiers, wooden machine guns and other warlike toys, and now they are dead stock on their shelves! The public has had its eye opened and is completely "fed-up" on war stuff!

Poor, poor merchants—but,
Lucky, lucky kiddies.

* * *

In a civilized world a person who would put a toy killing-tool in the hands of an innocent child would be socially ostracised.

* * *

War lectures no longer pull. War movies are avoided. Even the much talked universal military training program fails to arouse any enthusiasm. Who said the world was not coming to its senses?

* * *

Supreme court upholds the constitutionality of the war-time prohibition act. Probably does not know the war is over.

* * *

Now it's up to the president.
Oh Woodrow, Spare that Spree!

* * *

A local paragrapher lays the social unrest on the lack of brains in the halls of congress. We believe however that the social unrest is an evidence of the use of more brains in the union halls of the workers.

Another evidence of progress. In 1700 the entire modern world was 100 per cent. Christianized. Now according to a recent church report, less than 10 per cent. of the people profess any kind of a religion. But that 10 per per cent. is spending billions to keep their toehold!

The masters measure everything by the yardstick of surplus-value. In the coming order things will be measured on the basis of useful service rendered. No wonder the idle and the vicious are frightened at the coming of the Republic of Labor.

Another Sedition Act.

DENVER, COLO.—The Sedition Act which gives 20 years imprisonment to those advocating a change of government has passed the Colorado legislature. It is a piece of class legislation rivalling in severity the infamous Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798. It is worse than the ordinary capitalist class legislation in that it is aimed expressly at particular organizations of workingmen, notably those which believe in a working class government. Anyone carelessly shouting "All power to the workers" might be liable to a fine of $10,000 and 20 years in jail.

Gov. Shoup called a special session of the legislature to pass this bill. To be sure he spoke in his message also of the high cost of living, but to the astonishment of everybody he ended by declaring that the time was not yet ripe to legislate against the profiteers! The Governor is himself a millionaire and one of the leading financiers of the state. So while the legislature rushed thru the Suppression of Sedition bill and also a law against auto-thieves, it did not even consider a bill against profiteering. This seems to be on the good old capitalist principle that if a man steals an auto send him to jail; if he steals a railroad send him to Congress.

While the Colorado law for the Suppression of the Radicals is not as bad as those of New Hampshire, Ohio and other states, it is so worded as to be capable of broad interpretation and can be used by our capitalist judges to "supress" most anybody whose ideas of government differ from their own. And it was no doubt expressly framed to admit of this double interpretation against Socialist and workingclass organizations of that nature. It is one more step into the class war.

During the good-fellow season, the newspapers ceased their policy of adverstising a condition of universal prosperity and allowed tales of harrowing poverty to be printed. Not that the causes of poverty may be abolished but that some robber of the poor may return a few of the stolen pennies (in the name of goodfellowship) during the holiday season. Goodfellowship, of the bourgeoisie brand helps the toy market, and quiets the slaves. As soon as the holidays are over the newspapers will again resume their mask and hypocritically ignore the existence of the poverty-striken mass untill next year.

This was not a Merry Christmas to the scions of Capitalism who dread the process of re-adaptation from broadcloth to overalls to conform to the coming new order of society.

* * *

In the light of bourgeois history, failure and treason are synonomous terms.

* * *

I love to go to church and hear the bourgeoisie sing that beautiful and touching little ballad,

"We shall know as we are known,
We shall reap as we have sown."

But—What shall the harvest be?

European printers are striking and winning their strikes, to refuse to print articles detrimental to the interest of the working class. The employers call it "printers dictating the policy of the paper" but nevertheless it works. Swedish printers now have that privilege as a part of the union-contract. London papers were recently held up by the printers until an editorial strongly criticising the strikers was deleted. Here is another "European importation" that would be of immense benefit to the working class of America.

The Black Sheep

CHAPTER XI.

The Trial.

About [illegible] o'clock the following morning a couple of rural officers entered the tank and announced that the judge was ready to see part of the bunch. He read the names most of them aliases, or "monakers", of about twelve of the men as they had given them the day before, and ordered these men to come along.

Jack had hoped that he would be tried with this group, for Rudolph and Collins were called with them, but the jailer dispelled this illusion. He was classed with the suitcase tramps.

The reason for this classification Collins had explained to him during the night. The "suitcase tramps", generally carried all their earnings with them; they were known to the officers as 'fat geese!' The other men, that is those who were initiated in the ways of the harvest fields generally made it a practice to collect their money from time to time during the season and spend it in the blind pigs or the bawdy houses as fast as they got it, while others made it a practice to mail it to the place where they intended to 'Hole up' for the winter, keeping only enough money on their persons to reach their destinations by side door pullman (freight cars).

That explains the reason they took the blanket men first. After a farce trial, they fined them what ever amounts they happened to have; returned their blankets to them and ordered them out of town.

It sometimes happened however, if the victim was a little impudent or aggressive in his remarks, that they gave them a jail sentence of thirty days or more. This was a source of private graft to the officers, as they made a profit on the food the prisoner ate.

From what has been said regarding the characteristics of Collins and Rudolph we may imagine that they were not very genteel in the presence of the court In fact Collins delivered an oration that almost frightened both judge and prosecuting attorney. He quoted ver batim large sections of the law, showing that their arrest had been illegal, and that the court was out of order in its method of proceedure. But this was no court of law. It was a vehicle of graft. One might as well plead for mercy in the coils of a boa constrictor, as to plead for justice before such a tribunal as this. They were fined fifteen and seventeen dollars each. The total amount that had been found in their pockets at the time of their arrest had been eighteen and twenty-one dollars respectively. Rudolph and Collins were then sentenced to thirty days in prison for contempt of court. The rest of their companions, all "bindle stiffs", were similarly fined and were given two hours to get out of town.

There was a little barred opening in the tank door thru which one could look down an alley like hall that led from the jail to the court room. At this little window Jack stood and listened for any sound that might betray the fate of his friends, but as the court room door was closed he was scantily rewarded.

At last the door opened and the jailers escorted the two restless spirits down the hall, passed the tank door and into the cell house. Right then Jack resolved to be impudent enough to be jailed with them. If this was the way of the world that the majesty of the law which he had been taught to hold in reverence was used for purposes of crime, he would know it. He, who from his childhood had searched for the ways of nature now resolved to learn the ways of men. He had been taught that a man had the right to kill in self defense, that the laborer was worthy of his hire, that courts were instituted to protect the weak form the aggressions of the strong. It seemed to him that these things had to be facts, the logic of George, the cynicism of Collins, the anarchic idealism of Rudolph not withstanding. There had to be justice in the world, for without it life could not endure, and yet, there were the facts. Rudolph and Collins in jail for the crime of possessing money earned in the sweat of their brow. There was no room for delusion.

The more the boy contemplated the hideous situation, the more angry he came. He felt the tide of passion singing a song of hate. Thoughts of retributive vegeance, fierce, animal like and elemental surged thru him. He caught himself repeating the words, "They're not guilty of any crime. They have done nothing that a man ought not to do. Why do people tolerate such a system? The men who originated it were criminals. How could they get the public confidence." He walked away from the little window and paced back and tank. He was cold, [illegible] and hun

FORMERLY THE OHIO SOCIALIST

Official Organ of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio.

NO. 99. Published at Cleveland, O. CLEVELAND, O. WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 24th, 1919. Address all mail to 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O. $1.00 A YEAR

I. W. W. MAKES STATEMENT CONCERNING DEFENSE OF CENTRALIA VICTIMS.

Ten workers, members of the I. W. W., are in jail at Centralia, Wash. They are charged with the murder of one Warren Grimm who as you probably know was one of the five men killed at Centralia, Wash., on November 11th.

Owing to the fact that all labor papers, notably the Seatle Union Record, were immediately suppressed it is very likely that you got your version of the Centralia affair thru the Capitalist Press. What credence you have given to the matter contained in these papers we do not knnw. We believe and hope that you will at least examine our side of the story and let your own reason render judgment.

The sum total of the accounts in Capitalist Press can be stated as follows:

(1) That the members of the I. W. W. stationed themselves in windows and other places of concealment and without provocation fired on those who were marching in the parade.

(2) That the members of the I. W. W. had plotted the whole affair a week before.

(3) That the whole thing was done because many of those in the parade were returned soldiers.

(4) That it was an attack on the Government.

To bolster up the above charges the Capitalist Press had glaring accounts of alleged confessions and of roving bands of I. W. W. who were defying all authority.

If you have normal reasoning power you must have immediately rejected the tales of lies and slander spread broadcast in the Capitalist Press about the I. W. W. and its members. Your reason cannot accept e idea that ten ordinary working en would have stationed themselves ith guns and deliberately shot into e ranks of a passing parade comosed of men and women from whom, cording to the Press, they had thing to fear.

To say that these men plotted the affair because many in the ranks ere returned soldiers is absurd. Here gain sane logic repudiates this falseood for the reason that ten, or even hundred, men would not adopt such plan to kill returned soldiers any ore than a like amount of men ould enter into a plot against a cer in town or city and start shooting discriminately at people walking ng the streets. Besides, several those now charged with murder ex-service men themselves.

That the members of the I. W. W. d the affair a week or ten days e is so evidently false that it ely needs denial. So one acquawith the particulars it needs no ation. But lest you, the reader, nowing the facts of the case believe such a thing we will out that on the date it is alleg at the plot was formed (said g place being a regular busieeting held in the I. W. would have the people believe that Government and its functions are the property of a few individuals who can do no wrong. They never charge the profiteers, who have laid the grasping hand of profits on food, clothing and shelter and doubled the price on every thing necessary to life. No; because their conception of Government means a Government controlled by these very profiteers. Thus it is that when a strike is called by workers to get higher wages and more of the good things of life they shout "an attack on the government." That is why they have continually charged the I. W. W. with "attacking the Government". Establishing the eight hour day and getting better conditions in the Lummber Industry of the Northwest was an "attack on the Government" according to the Capitalist Press. But doubled profits on the necessities of life by the Industrial Autocrats is not an attack on Government but entirely respectable.

The right conception of Government is that it is an institution set up by a majority of the people (not profiteers) for the good and welfare of that majority. When a minority gets control of that Government and use it for their own ends it is they that are attacking the Government. The Constitution of the United States gives the right of Free Assembiage to all. An attack o nthat right is an attack on the will of the majority which is the Government.

The members of the I. W. W. at Centralia were in their hall when it was attacked. In defending their hall they were defending the Government. The attackers of the I. W. W. Hall were attacking the right of free

Workers' New Years Greeting to Capitalism

The Sun of Socialism has Already Risen.

The eyes of the world are upon Russia.

The Thot of the world is upon SOCIALISM.

Russia is an example and a prophecy to the capitalist world of what is to come in every civilized country on the earth. It is a warning of what is coming to every capitalistically developed nation. It is the skeleton at every capitalist feast, it is the the haunting shade that dogs the every step of capitalistic imperialism and drives into its heart the terror of impotence.

For Soviet Russia is a FACT.

From the greatest world catyclysm in history has sprung the greatest hope and promise for the world. From the blood soaked graves of ten million dead has sprung and blossomed the red flower of Russiam Sovietism and Idustrial Democracy. And the flower of Industrial Democracy will blossmom elswhere—it will blossom in every civilized nation, in every nation where the capitalistic system has become established, and that now is the whole world. And the year 1920 is prophetic of this blossoming in more than one nation where capitalism has broken down, where it is no longer capable of functioning and supplyig the needs of the masses with the necessities of life.

Socialism in Russia is triumphant.

For two years the Russian masses have battled against the reactionaries within her boundaries and against the armies of capitalistic world imperialism from without. For two years Russia's workers have fought hunger, starvation, disease, lack of arms and munitions, lack of sufficiency of every essential to a normal life; they have fought against allied treachery and anavalanche of lies by the entire capitalist press of the world. They have suffered and endured as no nation has ever done for the social ideals which they knew alone, could lift them from slavery into the sunlight of freedom.

Never in history was a more wanton and cruel system of persecution established against a people than the undeclared war against the Russian masses by the United States, Japan, England and France. Never before did capitalism show its real nature more clearly than in the unofficial blockade of Russian ports and the starvation of her people by thus cutting them off from trade with the world. But Russia has triuphed. Her Red army has driven before them the mercenaries of capitalism. The Allies are pulling out of Russia—because they cannot stay there safely and with any hope of re-establishing capitalism within her borders. The sun of Socialism shines brightly in Russia.

The rays from her sun illuminate the world.

Into, over and thruout the capitalist world its searching rays tillating rays from the rising sun of Socialism in Russia are gleaming. Not all the lies of capitalism's hired press, not all the chicanery of its state's officials have been able to keep them out. Inton, over and thruout the capitalist world its searching rays are bearing and every ray strikes capitalism with terror and bewilderment at its own impotence in the face of the truth which these rays bring forth. Its rays are revealing the darknesss of capitalism and the methods by which it has kept the masses of the world in bondage.

But while the breaking of dawn is a source of terror to capitalism, it has a different meaning to the world's oppressed. To the masses everywhere, Russia is a fountain of promise. They warm themselves in her sun. They exultate in her victories; thy hearten themselves in her successses. Russia it to-day the hope of the world of labor. Labor elsewhere knows that thru her victories, so too, will it be victorious. By her example we have been shown way to industrial freedom.

The Proletarian Dictatorship, the method.

The world to-day is governed thru the dictatorship of the capitalist class. There is not a social institution in existence that is not dominated by its rule. Its pover is supreme in the public school, where nothing inimical to its interests is taught nor allowed to enter. The social thruths are perverted and twisted to bolster its rule. The minds of the world's children are directed from the kindergarten to college, thru all the years of youth along channels of thought which will tend to make them subservient slaves to the capitalist oligarchy. The Church is dominated by its power and the gospel of Christ perverted into a gospel of the right of the exploiting class to rule—divinely and by God's will. Thepublic press is the servant and the tool of the capitalist class and thru it public opinion is molded along the lines which will give support to the capitalist dictatorship. The amusements of the people are under its control. Especially is this true of the "movies". Not a picture is shown that even remotely can tend to awaken the masses to the fact of their exploitation and knowledge of the fact of this dictatorship.

The means by which all men live and work are under control of this class. Not only has the capitalist class complete control of the economic lives of the masses, but it also owns body, boots and breeches the governments of the various nations. IT OWNS THE STATE, IT IS THE STATE! And because of this fact of political control, its dictatorship is established and practiced.

The workers must supplant capitalist class dictatorship with working-class dictatorship. We must supplant the dictatorship of the few with the rule of the many. We must seize that which is now the Capitalist State and make it a weapon in the hands of the workers to institute the beginning of industrial and also political democracy. The State, the political power must be placed under working class dominance before the social institutions can serve the workers. The workers must control the state and thru it exert their power in every field of social endeavor.

This does not mean the workers must use ONLY the ballot as a means to capture the capitalist State. There are other means which the workers must necessarily use. Class action on the industrial field is the workers' greatest and strongest weapon for aquiring political power. We must school ourselves in its use. We must cultivate in the shops the organization of the workers. We must learn to strike not as crafts but as a CLASS. We must direct all our class efforts to capturing political power and using that power to institute Industrial Democracy and build a world whose functions shall be carried on in the interests of the workers instead of the present owners of industry.

The way to Industrial Democracy leads thru the dictatorship of the proletariat. This is the lesson of successful Russian working class tactics.

SHIPLOAD OF RADICALS SET SAIL FOR FREE SOVIET RUSSIA.

LABOR MARKET MAY BE DEPLETED BY EXTENSIVE DEPORTATIONS OF FOREIGN BORN. MORE LAWS ON WAY TO DESTROY LIBERTY. AMERICAN CITIZENS TO BE PENALIZED FOR THINKING.

Steaming toward an unnamed European port laden with several hundred radicals, including Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, two foremost intellectual anarchists, the United States transport, Buford sailed from New York last Monday. The Buford will make a European Port and from there the deportees will proceed to a Soviet Russian seaport city at U. S. government expense.

This eventful sailing of the Buford marks the beginning of the government's long heralded program of deportation of foreign born radicals in the U. S. Anarchists, I. W. W. anti-war agitators, labor union organizers and just plain ordinary working men and women who have had the misfortune, or good fortune to fall under the displeasure of government officials are among the 250 which sailed away from the so-called land of the free to what many of them at least, believe to be a better land—Soviet Russia, the first Socialist Republic.

Last week a number of "mystery" trains speeded from various points in the country to New York, there, inloading scores of men and women gathered into the government's net at various times and who have been held in custody, some for many months awaiting deportation. Agitators in the steel strike districts, union organizers, from the north west, and the Canadian border, and strike agitators in shipyards are among the number. About every variety of agitator which industrial and social conditions have produced may be counted among them. It is stated that fully 350 more radicals are now in various jails awaiting the same fate as those deported.

Wives want to go too.

One circumstance which indicates that the deportees do not consider their fate a very terrible one is the fact that a number of the deportees' wives have petitioned the government officials in a signed statement to allow them passage with their husands. Apparently, the terrors of Bolshevism do not loom large to these women whose bread-winners have been taken from them and their children.

That the deportees carried with them the well wishes of hundreds of friends and relatives left behind, is shown in the great quantity of gifts showered upon them and which they will carry back home with them. These gifts number into the hundreds it is stated. Over $100.000.00 is said to be the amount of cash which they will carry away with them.

Probation urged for immigrants.

In line with the government's ambitious schemes to clear out of the country all who differ with things as they are under the benificence of King Capital comes a proposed bill in Congress sponsored by Representative Johnson of Washington. The provi-

WHICH WAY, OH CITIZENS?

The re-election of Victor Berger, Socialist, To Congress from the 5th Wisconsin district—and the all-too probable refusal of his seat in the national law-making body brings up the question the solution of which will be an interesting episode in the present class conflict.

Berger was elected to Congress from the same district in 1918, his vote being 17,882 and that of his opponents' combined vote being 22,539. Because of his alleged anti-war attitude and actions his fellow congressmen declared his seat vacant under constitutional provision on Nov. 10th.

Berger now is returned to his seat by the votes of a majority of the qualified voters of his district. His vote being in this election 24,367 and that of the fusion candidate 19.561. giving Berger a majority of 4,806 votes. Thus far, the American voting kings have expressed themselves in a manner that is significant. Apparently they prefer to be represented by Victor Berger rather than any other person.

That his re-election cannot be wholly claimed as a victory for Socialism or even the Socialist Porty goes without saying. Doubtless, many voters, who would not place themselves upon record as avowed socialists, have voted for Berger, feeling a sense of outraged justice at the denial of his seat in Congress. Berger's statemnt after the votes were counted bears out this view.

Mr. Berger said:

"While my election may undobtedly be characterized as nothing short of a revolutionary act in view of opposition by the entire capitalist class — not only of Milwaukee and Winsconsin, but of the country—yet it cannot exactly be called a victory of the Socialist party.

"The Socialist party simply took the lead and furnished the advance guard and foremost champions!"

But this is not the end. Representative Dallinger, chairman of the elections committee, states that Berger will not be allowed his seat. According to Mr. Dallinger, the House may take [illegible] and a higher morality.

The simple truth of the matter is, that away back in the mists of antiquity, more than two thousand two hundred years ago, the educational world slipped a cog and has never yet fully recovered its mental balance.

The Early Greeks began a scientific investigation of their material environment for a solution of their problems. Notable beginnings were made in the sciences of astronomy, mathematics, physics, biology and sociology. It was not until the advent of Anaxagoras, whose teaching of the idea that MIND instead of matter was of superior importance, that the blighting influence of a religious belief had an opportunity to substitute a belief in a mythical Saviour for a knowledge of material environment as a means to salvation.

Phillip Van Ness Meyers in his Ancient History in speaking of the Grecian philosophers, says (pp. 330);

"The philosophers of whom we have thus far spoken were in general, men who made the physical universe the subject of their speculations." (Note how craftily the author uses the word 'speculation' instead of the right word 'investigations'). "Their system of thought possessed little or no practical value. They did not supply motives for right living, having no word or the citizen in regard to his duties Godward, etc."

The philosophers referred to were the Seven Sages who first aroused a world intellect to scientific thought and formed a fitting prelude to Greek Philosophy. Thales, who was noted for his works on geometry and astronomy, was the first to predict an eclipse of the sun. He taught the Egyptians how to measure the height of the pyramids by the length of their shadows. Pythagoras, a "lover of wisdom" was another of the Greek philosophors. His views on astronomy anticipated by two thousand years the work of Copernicus. Another was Empedocles, the father of the idea of evolution. Like the evolutionist of today, he taught that the higher forms of life arise out of the lower. Another was Democritus who taught like the modern physicists, that 'all things are composed of invisible atoms alike in quality but differing in form and combination."

In the days of my youth I often heard of the dark ages but it was not until I had reached the age of maturity and had learned the scientific method of investigation that I learned the term dark ages meant the age when the materialist teachings of these Greek Philosophers had been set aside and the doctrines of the Christian church reigned supreme.

Many a well meaning youth of today joins one of the numerous Young People's Church Societies such as the B. Y. P. U., the C. E., or the Y. M. C. A, under the delusion that he is doing something that will make for world betterment. If it were only possible to get them to understand that their action is but a step toward a repetition of the dark ages, what a blessing to the world it would be!

The unthinking mass has a habit of allowing its philosophers and teachers to be crucified, while it gives its pennies to the band organ man. Few people have the moral courage to boldly proclaim that the vile thing called Christianity must go to make room for a newer and better order of society, and those who do are ostracised reviled and persecuted.

Lester F. Ward, known the world over, and recognied by the world's scholars as an authority upon matters pertaining to sociology and psychology, and the effect of a changed environment upon the human mind, says concerning Christianity vs the Ancient Greeks. "The question then is, 'In what respect would the civiliation of Europe be different from what it is today, had the Grecian Polytheism remained unmolested by Christianity and all other forms of religious faith?'"

Greece and Rome maintained toward the national religion an attitude quite similar to that which France, Germany, Great Britain and America present now towards Christianity. The masses believed and went through the ceremonies while the philosophers and schoolmen stood aloof and remained indifferent to religion appearing to consider it beneath their notice, just as now the rank and file observe the forms of the church while the most cultivated and notably those [illegible] consideration.

There were indications THEN that the bonds of religious restraint were about to fall from the people and the light of knowledge to be admitted to all just exactly as we see the forms of religion more and more ignored and education further and further extended. BUT Christianity rekindled the religious zeal, proscribed philosophy, abolished its schools and PLUNGED THE WORLD INTO AN ABYSS OF DARKNESS from which it emerged only after twelve hundred years! Ignorant of what would have happened if this had not happened, nothing is left but to regard the advent of Christianity as a CALAMITY. And if we look at the history of Christianity we find that its activities have been so intense and its deeds so violent that it has been almost impossible for thought to obtain a foothold."

Racial hatred is a terrible thing, but religious hatred is a thousand times worse. While religion claims to be anxious to establish a heaven on earth its effect has always been to prolong a hell. The Israelite proceeded to exterminate every inhabitant of the land of Canaan because they worshipped a differend God. The Mohamendan gives the conquered the choice of the Koran or death. Christianity claims to have been propagating peaceful means but this is pure plain lie as it is on record a thousand times that the conqueror demanded the acceptance of the Christian religion as a part of the terms of surrender.

Religion and Communism have this and this only in common. They both claim to offer salvation to an oppressed people. Communism has this advantage, its salvation is a here and now proposition, something you do not have to die to win. Faith was the watchword of the old Gospel. Science is the hope of the new. Religion was a substitute for ignorance, fact is fast taking the place of faith. Religion claims an absolute and complete monopoly on all the goodness and all the virtues and all the morality there is in existance. He who would question the validity of these claims is tacitly charged with a sort of moral turpitude. He is socially taboo and the idea is circulated by the Christian (?) folk that he is a moral degenerate of some sort and a very dangerous citizen. Only a few generations back he was lucky if he escaped the tortore hamber, maintained by Christians or the glory of the Christian God, or death by burning at the stake or in boiling oil.

Religion has always and everywhere been a powerful ally of the master class. The master class has traded the slave the pleasures of a "rest" in a mythical Heaven after death for a real material heaven of luxury and rest for the master here and now. Religion and commerce go hand in hand. And these two are the causes of all the wars that have cursed the world. The few who rebelled against the master-class God or the master-class dominion could be managed by the dungeon or the stake but when the many rebel they get the sword—and the slave wields the sword at the masters call in the master's interests!

The unwarranted assumption of the religionists that they have a monopoly of all the morals and virtues has been allowed to go unquestioned for long enough. The religionist lives in a world of fancy and ignores the world of fact, yet he is careful to keep his ideas of morals general and not specific, abstract and not concrete. When forced to SPECIFY, the religionist presents a sorry spectacle of intellectual emptiness. As the poet Moore put it

'I find the doctors and the Sages
Have differed in all climes and ages
And two and fifty scarce agree
On what is pure Morality."

The whole question then resolves itself into this, — What IS Morality! and has the Church and the "various established forms of religion" been a benefit or a curse to the world? The answer is plain, but to understand it, one has to know that there are classes in the world. A working class and a capitalist class. A making class and a taking class, whose interests are opposed. Whatsoever the capitalists get the worker has to go without. Knowing this, the establishment of a worker's code of morality is easy. Whatever is beneficial to the working class is BAD. Viewed in this light the Church and the "various forms of established religion" with their "meekness" "servility" substitution of faith for fact, with rewards payable after death instead of here and now, have undoubtedly been a stumbling block in the pathway of the world's progress towards Liberty and the Universal Brotherhood of man, of which they so glibly prate and do little to help establish. Those early Greeks were on the right track and mankind today will have to go back there where their investigations were sidetracked by the Christian Faith and begin the work anew. A knowledge of the material universe and its relationship to man—that is the royal road to happiness and here is no other.

The various religions have been only so many blinders to keep man from seeing the great white light of truth. Wars and the rumors of wars have cursed the earth and will curse the earth as long as the doctrine of Free Will and Vicarious Atonement are preached and believed. The Saviour of Mankind is not to be found in a sacrificed God but in Work, W-O-R-K with an opportunity to reap the reward of merit that creative energy rightly expended entitles one to receive.

Tichenor in his Creed of Constantine, has voiced a sentiment that should be heard around the earth.

"With none to blow the bugle blast
To call the dogs of war,
Who then would march to murder those
They never met before!
And all the retinue of priests,
That say their God ordains
The crown that rests upon the brow
Of every brute that reigns
Let these go to, and take their myths,
Their goblins and their hell
And give this poor old world of ours
A longed-for breathing spell

On December 2, 1918, George Chicherin, People's Commissaire for Foreign Affairs, of the [illegible] Federal oviet Republic, sent out the following wireless telegram, protesting against military intervention in Russian by the Allied Powers. This protest is fully a year old, but intervention still persists. It is to be hoped that the negotiations now in progress at Copenhagen, between Litvinov, representing the Soviet Government, and O'Grady, representing the British Government, may lead to some satisfactory arrangement between the powers, that may definitely put an end to intervention. The text of the protest is as follows:

To the Governments of Great Britain,
France, Italy, and the United States of America:

The Government of the Russian Socialist oviet Republic, through which the great laboring masses themselves, the workers and the peasants are ruling, and which embodies their aspiration for the peaceful self-government of the toiling and producing people, who have no quarrel with the toilers of any other country, has learned that a British fleet is moving in the Baltic Sea towards Russian shores, that the ships of the Entente coutries have been directed from Constantinople to the harbors of Crimea and the outhern Ukraine, and that the roops of those same countries have already crossed the borders of Bessarabia. The Russian Socialist Soviet Republic has never menaced or tried to invade the Entente countries; it only demanded to be left in peace, to develop itself on the lines which its people have chosen for themselves, contenting itself with influencing, by word and by example, their toiling brothers of other countries, and not to be interfered with by the great military powers which were carrying on the world war. Without any provocation from the Russian side, without any reason and without any shade of justification for their action, the armies of the Entente countries last summer invaded the borders of the Russian Socialist Soviet Republic, occupying its towns, seizing its villages and hamlets, ransacking the country and shooting down its best sons, and trying to advance into the heart of Russia, to crush its independence, and to drown the emancipation of its laboring masses in the blood of its defenders. The Entente troops were moved through the Far East for the support of the Czecho-Slovak and White Guards' counter-revolutionary mutinies, participating together with them in masses massacres of workers, of peasants, of fighters for freedom, which were their constant deeds. British and French officers took a leading part in all the movements against freedom in whatever part of Russia they were devised; they were the principal authors and instigators of the dark subterranean conspiracies which aimed at taking by surprise the Soviet Government through base treachery and briberies and overthrowing it through its nearest servants, which nevertheless proved themselves to be incorruptible and faithful and turned to the discomfiture of the unmasked Entente plotters their treacherous attempts. After all these blows aimed at the liberty, at the life of the Russian laboring masses and of their popular Socialist Republic, the governments of the same Entente countries are now tightening their net against the ever-peaceful Russian Socialist Republic, which, far remote from any aggression against others, thinks only of defending itself against the aggressors. The plans of the Entente governments are hidden in the dark. They have declared that their armed forces will protect in those regions which had been occupied by the German armies the same social order which these German armies had protected. — The armed forces of the Entente countries are coming to these regions as the enemies of the great popular masses in order to give support to their exploiters and to keep upright the old social regime which these popular masses wish to overthrow. Numerous utterances fo responsible statesmen of the Entente countries prove that the government of these countries have further reaching views and directly aggressive intentions against the independence, the freedom and the popular government of the Socialist Republic of the Russian laboring masses. The Soviet of the Russian workers and peasants have called out the youth of the people to rally around the banners of the Socialist republic and to defend it to the last drop of their blood. At the moment when the Eentente armies are crossing the borders and the Entente fleets nearing the shores of what was previously the Russian Empire, the Government of the Soviet Republic protests once more solemnly before the great popular masses of the Entente countries, before the deluded soldiers and sailors of their fleets, before their toiling brothers all over the world, against this wanton aggression, against this act of sheer violence and brutal force, against this act of crush the liberty, the political and social life of the people of another country. The Russian Republic has offered peace to the Eententa countries, but the governments of the latter have left this offer unanswered, their answer is the present new aggression. The Socialist Soviet Republic always ready, as before, to make peace; against attacks from without it relies upon its faithful and valiant Red Army; it makes responsible for the new bloodshed those who are coming to attack its borders and to continue their oppression in the occupied regions, and, with clear conscience, and pure intention, it answers the new menace of the governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States of America with this solemn protest.

Or other!
And THAT wouldn't be
So BAD in ITSELF,
ONLY
He won't quit TALKING!
He lets out all his views
To EVERYONE.
And I said to him once:
'Why do you want
To CRUCIFY yourself?'
Why, when HE gets through
And begins to look for cases
He'll be a MARKED man!
And he just answered:
One man's career
Is a very little thing
And hardly worth attention.
Now, what do you think of that
For a FOOL?
If HE won't pay attention
To his FUTURE,
WHO'S going to do it
FOR HIM?"
And I said: "I hardly know,
But what of YOURSELF?
Any stirrings of response
Do you never feel
To the great movements
SURGING through the world?"
"Why, of course I do," he said.
"MY FATHER
Is a strong UNION man.
I guess I know the viewpoint
Of LABOR,
But I keep it under my hat,
For I mix mainly
With folks who would be ANNOYED by it:
But THEY'RE the folks
[illegible]
[illegible] their feelings
BOTHERED me a lot,
But if you never express them
I guess in the end
You LOSE them."
He went out, cocky and smiling,
And I thought of many things,
Of why universities are
The WAY they are!
And of an ancient saying
About a certain man
Who GAINED the world
And LOST
His own SOUL!

Socialism Behind Bars

By EUGENE V. DEBS.

Socialism grows anywhere, everywhere. Everybody and everything helps it to grow. Its worst enemies are its best friends. Strange, but watch it, and you will find it works out that way every time. The reason is that Socialism is truth applied to society, and truth finally wins out because everything has to square with it in the end.

The most thriving, well-attended and enthusiastic Socialist local is the one in the Federal jail at Fort Smith, Ark. It numbers 36 members. It meets every day and every night in the week; is, in fact, in continuous session. There is never an absence at roll call. The Federal government pays the rent and furnishes the members with light, heat and sleeping quarters. These are not of the best, it is true, but there is no complaint on the part of these choice and cheerful Comrades.

The story of this local is interesting and dramatic enough to put on the stage.

Fred W. Holt is the hero of the story. Holt, district secretary, and 10 of his fellow miners in the United Mine Workers were sentenced to jail and fined heavily for fighting bravely for the striking miners in Arkansas. The judge, a corporation hireling, was determined to strike Socialism its death blow, Holt having been the Socialist party candidate for Governor of Oklahoma in the last election and having polled some 50,000 votes, enough to throw an awful scare into the mine owners and other exploiters who rule that section.

When Holt and his Comrades, 11 in all, began serving their six months' sentence in the jail at Forth Smith they found 25 other Federal prisoners there serving jail sentences for various minor offenses for which the poor are sent to jail under capitalism. There was not a Socialist among these when Holt and his bunch of revolutionists entered there. They were all Republicans and Democrats.

Now there is not a Republican or Democrat in the lot. The whole 25 have been converted and have joined the local in jail, consisting now of 36 members, and probably the only one of its kind in the world.

The Comrades on the outside have kept Holt well supplied with literature, and he has made good use of it. The converts are all enthusiastic. They now know why the poor are sent to jail and the rich to the Senate.

Here are two sets of prisoners, victims of capitalism, distinctly separate, and yet with a peculiar affinity for one another.

Holt and his 10 Comrades are in jail for fighting the brutal system that sent their 25 poor, jobless fellow prisoners to jail. The whole of them are of the working class. It is an interesting study and a unique and powerful object lesson.

Fred Holt is a typical industrial unionist and Socialist. He stood and fought for the miners without wavering through the fiercest of their battles. The operators feared and hated him, and when their tool on the bench sent him to prison they heaved a sigh of relief.

But, alas! Fred Holt, in prison, has multiplied himself. Socialism grows everywhere, and when the jail sentence expires Holt and his host will march forth, thanks to the operators and their hireling judge, trained and equipped revolutionists and full to their toe tips of the fighting spirit which is crowned with victory or death.

CHAPTER [illegible]

The Night

It was [illegible] in the afternoon when they had been thrown in jail, and now it was five. In the bunk it was already dark and bitterly cold. The men were huddled in little groups and sat for the most part in stolid silence. The cold gripped their very vitals as they had not yet had time to purchase winter clothing. Many of them never bought clothing for winter. For years it had been their way to leave the harvest field as soon as threshing was over and make their way to the Pacific North-west where the winters are mild. But this year the winter came with a sudden onset plunging the world into its grasp of snow and ice.

Less than an hour after they had entered the jail it had begun to snow, and the wind was blowing a veritable gale. It was a full fledged blizard. The mercury dropped to about zero, chilling the men to the very marrow. A few minutes after five the doors were opened and two men entered. One carrying an armful of kindling and a scuttle of coal, which he deposited near the air tight stove. The other carried a smoky lantern and an adult sized police club. He fastened the lantern to a wire attached to one of the rafters of the building, and then proceeded to count the catch. He remarked that he would have to know for how many he would have to bring breakfast. That meant that there was to be no supper.

As most of the men had eaten nothing since breakfast, and the breakfast had been rather scant, being the last of the season, and therefore consisting chiefly of a few odds and ends to be found in the cook car, their appetite was naturally enormous.

No sooner had the jailers left than a babble of conversation broke loose. Jack noticed that it was entirely focused on one solitary point and that point was—food. The desire to eat seemed to have overcome all other emotions. There was no longer talk of law, vegeance, or philosophy. The mind seemed to be absorbed in but one thing, and that one thing was food. The boy noticed just one casual remark that Collins made. It was not addressed to any one apparently; it was just said. It may be that no one but Jack heard it, altho it was not specially meant for his ears. It was this: "Bread, the foundation stone of empires, the bulwark of civilization." Why he should say such a thing the boy did not fathom at the time, and yet, subsequent years were to teach him that bread is the very heart and soul, not only of individuals but of social and national life as well. Eleven hours without food, and he himself was beginning to feel the pain of hunger rise above all other emotions.

Collins did not join the crowd, even when they kindled the fire and the group huddled close around it. He sat Sphinx like upon this bunk; his face a riddle of the universe. Neither did Jack move from where he lay upon an old mattress. His head was aching dreadfully and he was too feverish to even feel the biting cold. His scalp wound infecting the adjacent tissues, swelled and discolored the side of his face and almost closed his left eye. This gave him a rather comical appearance.

Collins looked at him once or twice, grinned, but made no comment. Wounds, cuts, and bruises, when on the other fellow, did not stir any apparent emotion in his giant frame. It was different with the Jew. Altho now, he too with the rest was endeavoring to get as near to the stove as he possibly could, and was discoursing eloquently upon the viands to be bought in some of the down town New York restaurants. Apropos of which Collins said. "Listen to Rudie's kosher idealism."

It must be said of the Jew, however, that he soon returned to his former companions. And it must be said to the credit of the stove that while the fuel lasted it made its immediate confines rather comfortable. Jack looked rather the worse for wear as already described. His face was badly swollen, while blood had matted his hair and incrusted his unshaven face. His appearance awakened the sympathetic nature of the young Hebrew, and he set to work to make the boy more comfortable wetting an old handkerchief at the faucet, he threw it on the stove and left it until it was steaming hot. He now used this appliance to wash Jack's face and remove the blood from out of his hair.

The hot water from the filthy rag felt grateful to the inflamation tensed skin. The rough kindness of the act greatly warmed Jack's friendship for the Jew and incidently brought the trio back to conversation.

"I thank you, Rudolph," said Jack, "that hot water made that cut feel better."

A 100 PER CENT ESPIONAGE SYSTEM.

Here in America we are setting up one of the loveliest espionage systems ever fastened upon the backs of a suffering people. By espionage system we mean a system of spying upon the citizens of the nation by the governmental agencies.

We used to read about the espionage system of Russia, how the Czar's emisaries were in every village and city, on the trail of every man or woman who sought to teach and organize the people in the ways of acquiring liberty. We thought that a government that relied upon such tactics to maintain itself was a damned poor sort of government and deserved to be replaced by one that had some faith in its principles and would trust those principles in the hands of its citizens.

The espionage system failed to keep democracy from toppling over the decayed and outworn government of Russia. In the end the people won, won against the combined forces of reaction and world capitalism; won as they always will win in the end. Spy systems and jails, deportations and exile never for a moment stopped a revolution. They are all as wind to afire, they merely develop a conflagration.

About our own system. Lots of people don't know there is one-yet. They will soon learn- are learning in fact. The system has been built up so rapidly that it is already full grown. It is already nearly 100% complete. The funny thing about it is that conservatives are on the books as well as the radicals. This will be good news for the conservatives when they learn it. Scarcely a labor union official that has not a "Dick" on his trail. In every city and town the spies pass thru, stay awhile and leave, having posed as photo enlargers or what not. Every mining hamlet, every steel city, every place where labor appears to be not so quiet and docile as it might, is infested with these gentry of the governmental spy system. Hardly a telephone receiver can be taken down but a voice is heard- "yes that's it, take in down". One can almost hear the scurrying of a stenographer's pencil as the messages are transmitted to paper by the nimble fingers of the "listener in". One feels hardly safe in the bath even with the light turned off, for fear that knowledge of the fact is being transmitted to some magical records somewhere, and each splash recorded in a hidden dictaphone. One may assured that the government is spending many hundreds of thousands of dollars in keeping tab on its citizens. Just how many men and women are employed at the present time in doing nothing but trailing the radicals merely would be interesting to know.

Taking it all in all, there is a close resemblence and harmony between Russia as she was and America as she is. We are getting there fast and the espionage system helps.

'NOTHER WAY TO BEAT BOLSHEVISM.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6. — Baptists of thirty-six states will join tomorrow in a seven-day drive for enlistment of the entire membreship of the northern denomination in a campaign for the aggressive application of Christianity to the problems of reconstruction which now confront the world — a campaign which, it is declared, should sound the death knell of bolshevism.

"Where there is Christianity," said Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, general director for the board of promotion of the northern Baptist convention, "bolshevism cannot survive."

The above illuminating clipping from the daily press offers a new version of the reasons of the Red Menace. After two thousand years of Christianity to learn that Christianity is the one sure cure for Balshevism, is a startler indeed. We have always understood that we are a God-fearing and Christian nation — so much Christianized in fact, that we had quite a bit to spare for the "heathen". But no, we must have been mistaken. Else this Red Menace could not have risen in our midst to set our pulpit-pounders agog with their nostrums.

Before the revolution the Church next to the Czar, wielded the greatest power in Russia. The domes of its churches shone over every city, every village had its priest and its church. The Ikon was in every home and hut. The land was priest ridden. "Christianity" ruled supreme. But Bolshevism came and swept the Czar into another world and the church into at least a third rate place in the peoples' mind.

"Christianity" did not save Russia from Bolshevism. So we judge that the Reverend Aitchison must be mistaken. Nevertheless, we would like to see a bit more of the supposed ethics of Christianity practiced here and now. The coal operators might signify enough of the Christian spirit to accede to the miner's demand for living wages and humane hours of employment. The managers of the steel trust might also exercise their forgotten Christian teachings and part with some of the blood money wrung from a suffering and crucified world by paying the wages demanded by their employes. Some of their hired gun-men and thugs which have been used against their employes might be "Christianized" and offered jobs at something less devilish than murdering men, trampling children under foot, and shooting down their husbands and fathers.

We might continue indefinitely pointing out ways in which the Christian spirit might be exercised to the good and welfare of the world. But we havn't much faith in the Christian spirit or any other "spirit". The fact of the [illegible] of a problem to deal with at one time. [illegible] men because the demands of the [illegible] lessening of Gary's power and profits. [illegible] demands means the curtailing of the profits of the [illegible] so on down the line. No doubt the coal operators and steel magnates love their fellow men as much as any body — when it does not endanger their profits. Men do not act from either "good" or "bad" motives but from motives of self-interest.

If Rev. Mr. Aitchison hasn't found this out, he will before he kills Bolshevism with Christian practices.

SPARKS.

"I too, see that we must each make ourselves a committee of one to distribute literature and do organization work." Thus writes a comrade, and he sends a dollar for 100 copies of The Toiler. Don't you agree with him? Then send in your dollar for literature and get on the job.

Local Niles orders new minute and account books and other supplies for present and future needs. Every Local should have on hand all the necessary books for the Locals' use and proper stationery. Write the State Office for these supplies.

Literature orders are reaching the State Office from every part of the U. S. including Alaska. One recent big order was sent us by the Alaska Labor Uion, of Petersburg Alaska.

Local Portmouth has now announced its affiliation with the C. L. P. This is one of the livest Locals in the state. The comrades there seem to take a delight in doing every thing possible to make the Cause prosper in their locality.
